Without intending to specifically enumerate the charges made or to review in extenso the evidence in support or in refutation thereof, it will be sufficient for our purpose to classify the charges and evidence pertaining thereto as follows:

First, those connected with the proceedings of the legislature affecting the election; and,

Second, those growing out of the primary election.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

Each house, pursuant to the Federal statute, convened for the election of the United States Senator on January 26, 1909. The senate consisted of 33 members and the assembly of 100 members. Thirty-three members of the senate were present, and before balloting passed a resolution providing that "any senator who does not wish to vote for a candidate may vote by answering 'present.'" The roll was called, and 17 senators voted for candidates, 12 of whom voted for ISAAC STEPHENSON. The 16 other senators simply voted "present." In other words, a quorum, in the language of the statute, voted for "one person for Senator in Congress," and of this quorum ISAAC STEPHENSON received a majority. While the vote "present" of the 16 senators was in accordance with the resolution passed, we do not believe it could either add to or detract from the requirements of the statute. All members, no doubt, should have voted for "some person," but 16 voted "present," which was equivalent to a blank vote.

In the language of the majority of the committee in Ransom v. Abbott, "Senate Election cases," page 400, "The vote must be for a person, not a blank—in fact, not for a myth, but for a person."

Without intending to review the authorities, it is clearly established that "votes knowingly cast for a candidate who can not possibly exercise the function of the office if elected are thrown away." (State ex rel. Bancroft v. Frear, 144 Wis., 87.) And if this be true it must follow that a mere vote of "present" is nothing more than a vote for "no person," or, in other words, a "blank," and should not, therefore, be counted in determining whether Senator STEPHENSON received a majority of the quorum of those who voted for "one person for Senator," and thereby complied with the letter and spirit of the statute.

For other authorities bearing upon this proposition see Sawyer v. Makie (149 Mass., 269); Cooley on Constitutional Limitations (1932, Note 1); Rushville Gas Co. v. Rushville (6 L. R. A., 315); Hopkins v. Duluth (81 Minn., 189); and Commonwealth v. Cluley (56 Pa. St., 270).

On the same day in the assembly 82 votes out of the 100 assemblymen were cast, and ISAAC STEPHENSON received 60 out of the 82 votes. He, therefore, received, in our judgment, "a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house." The vote thus cast was entered upon the journal of the senate and of the house. In conformity with the provisions of the Federal statute, the members of the two houses convened at 12 o'clock noon, on the day following, in joint assembly. The journal of each house was read, and showed the result of the balloting on the previous day in each house separately, as hereinbefore stated. Having received a majority of all of the votes cast in each house, it was the duty of the presiding officer to declare Senator STEPHENSON duly elected. This was purely a ministerial duty, and the mere fact that he failed to perform that duty could not, under any legal principle, undo that which was legally done in the separate and joint sessions, and, except for this failure of the presiding officer, was completely done.

Instead of declaring the result, over the protest of Senator Hudnall, a ballot was ordered and taken on that day and on each succeeding day until and including the 4th day of March, 1909. Prior to March 4 no one in any of the sessions received a majority of the votes cast. On March 4 there were 123 votes cast, of which ISAAC STEPHENSON received 63, and he was then declared duly elected.

CHARGES OF CORRUPTION IN ACTION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Charges of corruption were made to the effect that—

(a) Assemblyman Leuch was offered money to go upon the floor and vote for the purpose of effecting a quorum;

(b) That Assemblyman Joseph Damochowski had been offered $1,500 for his vote; and

(c) That Assemblymen Farrel, Ramsey, and Towne absented themselves from the joint session of the joint assembly on March 4 through corrupt influences.

CHARGE AS TO ASSEMBLYMAN LEUCH.

He testified that David H. Davies, on March 1, 1909, said: "I have authority to tell you that you can have anything you want if you will stay in the joint convention to-day and vote." Mr. Davies denied having any such conversation, and swore that he neither authorized nor was in a position to pay or promise Mr. Leuch anything whatsoever. Whether this conversation occurred or not, there is no evidence connecting it directly with Senator STEPHENSON, or even indirectly through any authorized agent.

CHARGE AS TO ASSEMBLYMAN DAMOCHOWSKI.

There was testimony to the effect that Joseph A. Damochowski had said to several parties that he had been offered $1,500 for his vote in the assembly. He admitted that he had so stated upon several occasions, but in explanation thereof said that any statements he made to that effect were in jest, and that no such offer was in fact made. Outside of these admitted statements, there was no evidence either that any bribe had been offered to or received by him, and no evidence tending to connect Senator STEPHENSON or his managers with this alleged attempt to bribe.

MEMBERS ABSENTING THEMSELVES ON MARCH 4.

On March 4, 123 members of the joint assembly were present and voting. Sixty-three members, being a majority of those voting, cast their ballots for Mr. STEPHENSON, and, having for the first time received a majority of those voting in the joint session, he was duly declared elected.

We think it is fair to say that the record shows that an effort was made by some of the friends of Mr. STEPHENSON either to pair some of those who were opposed to STEPHENSON's election with those who were absent and favorable to his election, or to secure the absence of those who were opposed to his election, for the purpose of reducing the number who might be in the joint session and voting, and thereby enable those who were favorable to his election to have a majority of the votes cast.

Richard J. White, a friend of Mr. STEPHENSON, succeeded in pairing Ramsey, a Democrat, who was opposed to STEPHENSON's election, with Mr. Fenelon, who was a supporter of Mr. STEPHENSON and because of sickness was not able to attend the session.

Towne, a Democrat, left the chamber just before the voting began and was taken into a cloakroom by C. C. Wayland, one of Mr. STEPHENSON's lieutenants, and there held in conversation while the balloting was going on, and we have no doubt that Wayland purposely detained him, and Towne—to say the least—was indifferent about the situation.

Farrel left the assembly room before the roll was called and went to a café for luncheon, and did not return until some time after the result of the election had been declared. The absence of Towne and Farrel while the joint assembly was in session is not consistent with their duties as assemblymen, nor is their explanation satisfactory. But, whatever the facts may be, there is no evidence in the record, nor any obtainable, so far as the committee knows, which would justify the conclusion that the absence of any of these three men was secured by corrupt means. It was necessary for Ramsey, Farrel, and Towne all to have been present and voting in order to prevent STEPHENSON from having a majority vote in the session. The other seven absentees were satisfactorily accounted for, and no suspicion, so far as we know, attaches to them.

We therefore conclude:

First, that the election in fact occurred on January 26, 1909; and Second, that there is no evidence justifying the conclusion that corrupt "methods or practices" were employed in securing the vote on March 4, 1909, even if it should be held that the election took place on March 4.

PRIMARY ELECTION IRREGULARITIES.

Senator STEPHENSON's account filed with the secretary of state shows that there was expended by him and through his committee in connection with the primary election $107,793.05. He received 56,909 votes, which cost him $1.89 for every vote cast.

These expenditures, for the purpose of this report, may be divided into the following classes:

First, moneys paid out to persons employed by him or in his behalf to circulate nomination papers in order to get the number of signatures required by the Wisconsin statutes before his name could be placed upon the ticket;

Second, moneys paid out as follows:

- (a) to newspapers for political advertising;
- (b) for editorial support;
- (c) for lithographs, campaign material, postage, telephone, telegraph, and express charges;
- (d) office expenses, including rent, clerk hire, and assistants.

Third, payment for services of speakers, hall rent, music, and for men devoting their time and efforts in cultivating Stephenson sentiment throughout the State;

Fourth, moneys expended for workers at the polls, and for conveyances and services in getting out the voters;

Fifth, for drinks and cigars;

Sixth, money given to C. C. Wellensgard, L. L. Bancroft, and Thomas Reynolds, who were candidates for the legislature, to be used by them in the interest of Senator STEPHENSON;

Seventh, money paid to the game warden, John W. Stone, for use in the Senator's campaign;

Eighth, $2,000 contributed by Senator STEPHENSON to the State campaign committee for general election purposes; and Ninth, expenses incurred during the session of the general assembly in opening and maintaining headquarters at Madison from the beginning of the session until after March 4, 1909, and for hotel bills and traveling expenses.

No part of the contribution to the general campaign committee or the expenses incident to the headquarters during the session of the general assembly were ever reported to the secretary of state.

The above we believe to fairly represent the different classes of expenditure which were disclosed by the evidence.

There was no evidence before the committee from which it could be fairly concluded that any of this money was expended for "corrupt methods or practices," unless those recited are to be construed as corrupt under the provisions of the Wisconsin statutes.

MANAGEMENT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The testimony showed that Senator STEPHENSON had on deposit in the Marshall & Hilsley Bank $50,000, which was used in the campaign, with other added as required. His campaign was in charge of E. A. Edmonds, J. H. Puelicher, and Rodney Sackett.

There are 71 counties in the State and 2,200 election precincts. The method of the managers was to employ a lieutenant or campaign manager in each of the counties. In several instances one man had charge of a number of counties. Arrangements were made with these managers by which sums of money would be placed in their hands varying from $100 or several hundred dollars to several thousand dollars. In some instances the manager was not given, and would not accept, compensation for his services. In others definite arrangements were made for the amount of compensation the manager was to receive, and in many cases the manager would determine and retain for himself such sum or sums as he deemed proper. It is quite clear that a very substantial part of the money expended in the organization of the several counties never went beyond the pockets of those who received it. The money expended by these managers, so far as the testimony discloses, was for one or more or all of the purposes above described.

WISCONSIN ELECTION STATUTES.

The Wisconsin statutes defining election offenses are fully set forth on pages 10, 11, and 12 of the views submitted by Senator HEBURN, chairman of the subcommittee, and it will not be necessary, therefore, to insert them here.

APPLICATION OF THE LAW TO THE FACTS—NOMINATION PAPERS.

Before a candidate for office is entitled to have his name placed upon the ticket at a primary the Wisconsin statute requires that petitions or nomination papers shall be filed, signed by at least 1 per cent of the voters of his party in at least each of six counties in the State, and in the aggregate not less than 1 per cent nor more than 10 per cent of the total vote of his party in the State.

The testimony shows that Senator STEPHENSON hired and paid men to circulate his nomination papers in order to get the required number of signatures, but there was no evidence showing that any money was paid, in the language of the statute, to induce anyone to sign his nomination papers, and we do not think it was seriously claimed by those who were interested in the instigation of these proceedings that any money was unlawfully expended for this purpose.

EXPENDITURES OF MONEY DURING THE PRIMARY CAMPAIGN.

Was it a violation of the statute to pay out money for political advertising in the newspapers, or for editorial support, or for lithographs, campaign material, or for telegraph, telephone, or express charges, or for office expenses, including rent and hire of assistants, or for the hiring of speakers, halls, rent, music, and for men devoting their time and efforts to cultivating Stephenson sentiment throughout the State, or to pay workers at the polls, or for conveyances and services in getting out the voters, or for money for drinks and cigars given in a social way during the campaign?

A careful examination of the bribery statutes of Wisconsin will indicate clearly that the expenditures of money of the character recited only comes within the inhibitions thereof, when they are made corruptly, unless section 298 forbids it. This section reads:

"Every person who, by bribery or corrupt or unlawful means, prevents or attempts to prevent any voter from attending or voting at any caucus mentioned in this act, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any officer, inspector, or delegate, whose office is created by this act, or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any elector as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to such caucus or convention * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," etc.

None of these expenditures can come within any of the provisions of this section, unless it be a violation of this language: "or who shall give or offer to give any valuable thing or bribe to any elector as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to such caucus or convention."

It should be stated that by sections 39 and 40 of the election laws of Wisconsin the criminal penalties applying to a caucus and elections are made applicable to primary elections.

If the words "to give any valuable thing" are to be given a comprehensive and literal interpretation, and to prohibit the giving or offering of "any valuable thing," "as a consideration for some act" to be done, it would not have been necessary to write into the statute the words "or bribe," because the former expression would include the latter. The purpose of the statute is evidently to prohibit corrupt giving.

Words of a general import in the statute are limited by words of restricted import immediately following and relating to the same subject." (36 Cyc., 1119, Nance v. Southern R. R. Co., 149 N. C. 366.)

"In interpreting a statute, where the language is of doubtful meaning, the court will reject an interpretation which would make the statute harsh, oppressive, inequitable, or unduly restrictive of primary private rights." (Nance v. Southern R. R. Co., 149 N. C. 366.) To the same effect, State ex rel. v. Jackson, 168 Indiana, 389.

Again, section 4543-C requires the filing of accounts of expenditures of a candidate. This must contemplate that there are expenditures which can not in anywise be regarded as a violation of the Wisconsin laws. If a literal interpretation is to be given to the words, "any valuable thing" * * * as a consideration for some act to be done," and some expenditures be prohibited, whether morally corrupt or in-correct, would the legislature require the candidate to convict himself by filing an account? This is a criminal statute, and it must be strictly construed against the State and in favor of the defendant when charged with its violation.

Applying these rules, therefore, it would seem that the statute prohibited the giving of any valuable thing corruptly or in the nature of a bribe.

We have no sympathy whatever with the expenditure of money in excessive amounts, whether in a senatorial or any other political campaign. That an expenditure of $107,793.05 is an excessive amount to be spent in the candidacy for the office of United States Senator, which pays a salary for six years' service amounting to $45,000, goes without question; that it is demoralizing and should be prevented can not be denied; that some of this money might have been spent corruptly may, for the sake of the argument, be conceded, but it is not sufficient that possible or even probable corruption or bribery exists. The evidence must show it, and this case, like all other cases, must be determined from the facts as they are disclosed in the trial and under the law as it then existed. The committee, proceeding upon the assumption that the expenditure of so large a sum of money required the fullest investigation and explanation, probed every rumor and followed every clew which was brought to its attention, with the result that no evidence was discovered which would justify the conclusion that any of this sum of money was corruptly or illegally spent.

At the time of this primary there was no statute, either State or National, limiting the amount of expenditures. There is no judicial or legislative decision, so far as we are advised, limiting the amount which may be legally expended. Can we, in the face of the fact that the Congress of the United States and the General Assembly of the State of Wisconsin prior to this election failed to limit election expenditures, now arbitrarily determine that because this sum was spent it was illegally and fraudulently expended, and therefore vacate the Senator's seat? Can it be said that the expenditure of such a sum is in contravention of a public policy which must be given the force and effect of a statute? If so, where does public policy draw the line between what shall be a legal and an illegal amount? The situation is unfortunate, but the Congress and the State legislature are to blame for not having limited the expenses by statute. Laws can not be enforced retroactively, and surely this case must be decided in accordance with what the law then was and not in accordance with what the law ought to be. Since that election the State of Wisconsin has limited the amount of expenditure in a senatorial campaign to $7,500 and the Federal Government has limited it to $10,000.

EFFECT OF THE PRIMARY LAW.

It is strenuously argued on behalf of Senator STEPHENSON that even if the primary law of Wisconsin was violated its provisions are unconstitutional, because section 3 of Article I of the Federal Constitution provides that Senators shall be chosen by the legislature and because section 4 gives Congress the right to prescribe the time and manner of holding elections for Senators and that this power has been exercised by the Congress in the manner prescribed by sections 14 and 15 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Wisconsin primary law, in substance, provides (chap. 451, Laws of 1903) as follows:

"Party candidates for the office of United States Senator shall be nominated as other State officers. (Subdivision 3 of sec. 2.) Nomination papers for candidates for the office of United States Senator shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state. (Subdivision 1 of sec. 6.) The person receiving the greatest number of votes at the primary as the candidate of the party for the office voted for shall be the candidate of that party for such office (subdivision 1, sec. 18), and the secretary of state is required to publish in the official State paper a statement of the result of the canvass of the primary as soon as the same is certified to him."

These are all of the requirements found in the Wisconsin law pertaining to the nomination of party candidates for the office of United States Senators.

May the people of a sovereign State not provide for a method of expressing their sentiment in the selection of a Senator who shall represent that State in the United States Senate? May they not petition in such form and manner as to them may seem proper? And if it is their desire to so petition, may they not prescribe the method of petitioning so as to make the result of this petition, whether it be in the form of a letter to the members of the general assembly or in the form of a primary, an honest expression of their views?

The constitutionality of the above provisions of the Wisconsin law was passed upon by the supreme court of that State in the case of State ex rel. Van Alstine v. Frear (142 Wis., 320). On page 349 Barnes, J., in delivering the opinion of the majority of the court, says:

"Our constitutions, State and National, guarantee the right of petition. Every citizen of the State has the right to petition the legislature asking that the candidate of his choice be elected United States Senator. Every citizen of a senatorial or assembly district has the right to petition his local representative to the same effect. The law-maker is thus advised of public sentiment, a potent factor for him to consider in connection with other matters in arriving at a conclusion. Wherein does the primary nomination for United States Senator differ from the exercise of the right of petition? The legislative candidate is thereby informed of something that he has the right to know and of something that it is his duty to heed. He may not regard the verdict at the polls as obligatory, but should treat it as advisory. Moral suasion may be a perfectly legitimate agency to employ even in the election of a United States Senator. That the electors in the exercise of their guaranteed right of petition might do in substance and effect what they now do at the primaries hardly admits of controversy. The framers of the Constitution could not have supposed that there was any impropriety in the people advising their representatives of how they desired them to vote on the senatorship, else an exception would have been incorporated in the clause guaranteeing the right of petition, restricting its application to matters other than the election of United States Senators."

It will be conceded that while the result of a primary election, under the present constitutional provisions, could not control the State senators and representatives in their choice of a United States Senator, would not an expression of the will of the people at a primary election have great weight with their representatives in casting their votes? And, if this be so, ought not the primary election held to declare this choice be carefully guarded by suitable penalties? We have no hesitancy in saying that if the evidence disclosed the use of corrupt methods at the primaries, it would affect the result of the election by the general assembly, and the Senate would be justified in taking cognizance of that fact and unsentencing any Senator who was thus delinquent.

MONEYS GIVEN TO CANDIDATES FOR THE LEGISLATURE.

The testimony disclosed that Senator STEPHENSON, before the primary, gave money to C. C. Wellensgard, L. H. Bancroft, and Thomas Reynolds, who were then candidates for the legislature. They did not live in the same district or county with Mr. STEPHENSON. They were his personal friends. The money was given them to be used in behalf of Senator STEPHENSON for the nomination as the Republican candidate for Senator.

It may be said that this money was probably used by these men to further their own interests, as well as to further the interests of Mr. STEPHENSON. But, whether it was so used or not, there is no evidence that it was so used, or that it was given to them for that purpose.

On the contrary, the affirmative and uncontradicted testimony is all to the effect that this money was used strictly in the interest of Mr. STEPHENSON and none of it to further the interest of any of the legislative candidates.

MONEY PAID TO GAME WARDEN JOHN W. STONE.

Mr. STEPHENSON's campaign managers gave to John W. Stone, the game warden of the State, $2,849.50 for campaign purposes. This was distributed among a number of the deputy game wardens; he retained some portion of it himself, and in testifying before the legislative committee falsely stated the amount he had paid out.

Section 990-28 (sec. 28, ch. 363, 1905) provides:

"No officer, agent, clerk, or employee under the government of the State shall directly or indirectly solicit or receive or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution, or political service, whether voluntary or involuntary, for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the State."

This statute makes it an offense for any officer, agent, clerk, or employee under the government of the State to solicit or receive any assessment, subscription, or contribution, or political service from any officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the State. It is clear that this statute was not violated by Senator STEPHENSON, since he was not an officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the State. Moreover, the statute makes it an offense on the part of the recipient of the fund only. No offense is committed by the donor. It is true, the money should not have been paid to the game warden, and the giving of it does not show that fine discrimination which ought to be characteristic of men who are engaged in a campaign of this character. No law was violated by the donor, and this election can not be declared illegal because this expenditure was made.

FILING OF ACCOUNTS.

Section 4543-C of the revised statutes of Wisconsin requires the making out and filing with the secretary of state a statement in writing, subscribed and sworn to by the candidate "setting forth in detail each item in excess of $5 in money, or property contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by him, and to the best of his knowledge and belief by any other person or persons for him, or in his behalf, wholly or in part in endeavoring to secure or in any way in connection with his nomination or election to such office or place, or in connection with the election of any other person at said election, the dates when, and the persons to whom, and the purpose for which all said sums were paid, expended, or promised by such candidate in any sum or sums whatever."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this seems to be a very interesting document to those who are present. I would suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Curtis	McCumber	Shively
Bailey	Dillingham	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Borah	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Bourne	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Brandeggee	Foster	Myers	Stephenson
Bristow	Gallinger	Nixon	Sutherland
Brown	Gamble	O'Gorman	Swanson
Bryan	Gardner	Oliver	Thornton
Burnham	Gronna	Overman	Tillman
Burton	Heyburn	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Warren
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Poinexter	Watson
Clapp	Jones	Pomerene	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Rayner	Works
Crawford	Kern	Richardson
Cummins	Lodge	Root

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I desire to propound an inquiry to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

If we are to read these reports extensively, and then enter into an extensive debate—as we probably shall in this case—over the testimony, which is quite voluminous, it is apparent that, admitting it to be a question of the highest privilege, claiming the attention of the Senate, it will occupy the attention of the Senate for a considerable period. There is another case, similar in character, where the testimony is still more voluminous than it is in this case and a mass of testimony has been taken that will tax the patience of the Senate. Yet, while the hearings have been closed, we have no report in that case.

My inquiry is as to when we may expect a report in the Lorimer investigation. Some of us may wish to begin the examination of that testimony, and it would be very helpful in that connection to have the conclusions of the committee.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from South Dakota, I will say that the time has been granted to counsel of Mr. LORIMER for filing briefs first on a legal question that he raises as to the previous action of the Senate, which brief is to be filed by the 1st of March, and an additional brief upon the facts in the case, to be filed not later than the 15th of March. The committee have agreed to take up the matter after that, on the 23d, and proceed with the examination of the matter with reference to making a report.

I will say, further, that the counsel employed by the committee have been engaged in the very laborious task of trying to condense this vast mass of testimony. The number of printed pages already issued of that testimony runs up to nearly 9,000. They have eliminated from that much of the conversation and have tried to bring the testimony down into something like a narrative form, and that will be issued in one volume. It is substantially ready to go to the printer at the present time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So we may have the condensation soon?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It will be available for the use of the Senate very soon. The index has been, I think, prepared, but of course the pages could not be attached until the proofs came from the Printing Office. Considering the amount of testimony taken, the time that has been devoted to the work, and everything I think in the dates I have mentioned we have been very reasonable indeed. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to hold the matter back, I want to assure the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the Senator very much for the information.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Those of us who have the burden upon our shoulders will be just as anxious to make progress and have action taken by the Senate as anyone can be. I understand that the Senator's question was not by way of criticism, and it did not call out this remark.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly not. Is it practicable to indicate about how long after the brief is filed that we may expect a report?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is going to take a good deal of work to analyze the testimony, to harmonize it, and cast out what does not seem to be material or trustworthy. We want to do it intelligently, and we want to make reports, whatever they may be, that, at all events, will entitle us to respect and to the respect of the Senate. I am unable to state what length of time will be required, but there is a disposition on the part of every member of the committee to be as diligent as possible in the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I realize that the duties of the committee have been very burdensome and onerous. I also realize the fact that members of the Senate who desire to examine the testimony have no small task ahead of them, and if we expect to conclude the case within the ordinary life of a Member of the Senate we want to get the testimony and findings and report at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the best wish we can offer to the Senator is that he will live until he does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the Senator.

LANDS IN OREGON.

Mr. JONES. I ask leave to submit a report from a committee. I report back from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (S. 3225) providing when patents shall issue to the purchaser or heirs of certain lands in the State of Oregon, without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 398) thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—THOMAS J. CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. KERN. I should like to ask unanimous consent to have an order made for the withdrawal of papers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be received.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas J. Cartwright (S. 4827, 62d Cong., 2d sess.) be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

INQUIRY CONCERNING APACHE INDIANS.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed in the Record and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the resolution will be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (No. 228) as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the following information:

First. How many Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war at the Fort Sill (Okla.) Reservation?

Second. How many of the said Indians are males and how many are females?

Third. How many of said male Indians are under 40 years of age?

Fourth. How many of said Indians are known, at any time prior to their capture, to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents of the United States?

Fifth. The names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the matter that is being read to the Senate by request of the Senator from Idaho is so important that I feel I must object to other business being intruded at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had not asked for its consideration. I asked that it lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not care what the Senator asked; I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table.

SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the views submitted by Mr. POMERENE and Mr. SUTHERLAND, and read as follows:

No account whatever was filed of the amount contributed by Mr. STEPHENSON to the State campaign committee nor of the amount expended during the session of the general assembly. The account which was filed of the expenses incurred in connection with the primary did not comply with the law in that it lumped the expenses; gave the names of but very few of the persons to whom money was paid; did not give the dates when expended, nor, as fully as contemplated by the statutes, the purposes for which expended. The account as filed was approved by the general counsel of Mr. STEPHENSON without any examination of the statute, and simply because it conformed with certain accounts which had been filed by prominent candidates for other offices. A careful examination of this account justifies the belief that it was purposely drawn so as to give to the public as little information as possible.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask a question in connection with that statement, if the committee will indulge me, so that we may get the benefit of the information as we go along. Was the committee able to determine how much of this money is unaccounted for by what are called the legitimate expenses of the campaign? In other words, how much of this money is unaccounted for in this report by legitimate expenses?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that would involve entering at this time upon the question what constituted legitimate expenses. The orderly manner of procedure is to read the report, because it is upon a request of a Senator that it is being read. He has that right. Just as soon as the reading of the report is finished, so far as the senior Senator from Idaho can offer opportunity for such inquiries, he will do so, but to break in on the reading of the report will accomplish no good purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I realize that it would disturb the harmonious situation considerably, but it would add to the information a great deal.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will not be lacking in information.

Mr. BORAH. If so, I fear I shall have to go outside of the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are not now ready to take it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading, as follows:

The penalty for failing to comply with this statute is a fine only, and it does not provide for the forfeiture of the office. If it did, the statute to that extent would be unconstitutional, but Mr. STEPHENSON, because of his failure to file a proper account, has violated the statute and is subject to a fine. However, he must be absolved from any moral delinquency, because in the preparation and filing of his account he consulted with counsel and followed their advice, and if it was not properly done they were to blame rather than he.

In addition to this, the validity of the election which had already taken place could not be affected by the failure to thereafter perform some act enjoined by the State statute. The election was already an accomplished fact, and its validity must be determined by the facts theretofore or then existing. Anything done thereafter can not be regarded as a substantive ground for invalidating the election. Its only evidential value would be in reflecting light upon or as giving color to the preexisting facts.

After a careful consideration of all the evidence and the law, we had no hesitancy in joining in the report presented by the subcommittee.

We heartily approve these words of Senator HEYBURN:

"The amount of money spent by Mr. STEPHENSON, Mr. Cook, Mr. Hatton, and Mr. McGovern in the primary campaign was so extravagant, and the expenditures made by and on behalf of these gentlemen were made with such reckless disregard of propriety, as to justify the sharpest criticism. Such expenditures were in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government, which contemplated the selection of candidates by the electors and not the selection of the electors by the candidate.

"Regardless of any statute requiring that strict accounts be kept of money expended by and on behalf of candidates, a candidate and every man representing him should know that public opinion would expect the parties to place and maintain themselves in a position so that if any of their acts were questioned they could justify such acts to the extent of giving every detail in regard thereto.

"While I do not believe that the law of Wisconsin could constitute any man a candidate or place him in the position of and under the responsibilities of a candidate for an office over which the State had no control and which was not to be filled under any law of the State, yet I feel impelled to criticize the acts of those in charge of the expenditure of money of men who are called candidates for the Senate, and especially of Mr. STEPHENSON, in the irresponsible and reckless manner in which they disbursed the money furnished them by Mr. STEPHENSON during the period of the primary campaign.

"The failure to keep detailed accounts, the destruction of memoranda, the shifting of records and papers concerning the campaign from one place to another, the adoption of mysterious methods and round-about ways in regard to matters that might just as well have been performed in open daylight in the presence of people, would go far toward creating the impression that there was some occasion for Mr. STEPHENSON's representatives to avoid candor and to obscure conditions."

While we have no doubt as to the correctness of the subcommittee's finding, we do not want it to be understood that we question the propriety of filing charges challenging the validity of the election or of the making demand for an investigation either by the General Assembly of Wisconsin or by the United States Senate.

An enormous sum of money had been expended. Messrs. Edmonds and Sacket, who were in charge of the campaign as Mr. STEPHENSON's managers, knew of the statute requiring the filing of an account of their expenditures. They destroyed all original records of accounts, though they kept what purported to be copies. They grouped these items and amounts in such a way that they gave no knowledge whatever to the public except the totals of each class of expenditures. The account was not filed until the last moment permitted by the statute.

Mr. Puelicher, a banker, acted as treasurer. He did not open an account as depositors usually do. He received remittances, kept private memoranda, paid out cash, and made disbursements of these funds, but kept no record thereof upon the bank's books. No other customer's funds, either before or since, were received or disbursed in a similar way. There was an air of mystery about the entire affair.

After the investigation by the committee of the general assembly was started Mr. STEPHENSON's local counsel had such records and correspondence as had not already been destroyed moved out of the State, for the purpose of keeping them beyond the jurisdiction of the general assembly.

It may be said in passing, however, that the accounts were kept on card indexes, and Mr. Sacket gives as a reason for destroying them that they were made with lead pencil in many cases, and the writing was practically obliterated, so that he made copies and then destroyed the originals (Record, p. 161), because they were cumbersome and inconvenient (p. 523). And it may be further said that there seems to have been no substantial reason for moving the correspondence out of the State. It was all before the committee, and an examination failed to disclose anything of an incriminatory or improper character which would render any concealment necessary.

Can there be any wonder that the public became suspicious and the members of the general assembly, out of a decent sense of self-respect, should demand a thorough investigation?

If Mr. STEPHENSON has been put to great expense and trouble, it is due, first, to the reckless expenditure of this large sum of money, and, second, to the studied and mysterious efforts of his managers and local attorneys to conceal the facts up to and during the investigation before the joint committee of the general assembly and the separate committee of the State senate.

But out of all this scandal and trouble much good has come. Public sentiment was aroused. The unlimited use of money has been condemned and stringent corrupt-practices acts have been adopted, both by the General Assembly of the State of Wisconsin and by the Congress of the United States.

ATLEE POMERENE,
GEO. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to ask that the views of the minority be read also in connection with the other matter which has been read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is correct. The Chair understood it had been done. It has not. The Secretary will continue and read the minority views.

The Secretary proceeded to read the views of the minority, and read as follows:

[Senate Report 349, part 2, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

CHARGES RELATIVE TO THE ELECTION OF ISAAC STEPHENSON.

Mr. JONES (for himself, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. KENYON, Mr. KERN, and Mr. LEA), from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following views of the minority to accompany Senate resolution 136:

In the primary election at which Mr. STEPHENSON was nominated for Senator, pursuant to the Wisconsin law, the candidates expended the following sums:

Neal Brown	$1,075.87
Francis E. McGovern	11,063.88
William H. Hatton	26,413.00
S. A. Cook	42,293.29
Senator STEPHENSON	107,793.05

In all, about $225,000 on the part of candidates for the Senate alone. Referring to these expenditures, the majority report says:

"The amount of money expended by Mr. STEPHENSON, Mr. Cook, Mr. Hatton, and Mr. McGovern in the primary campaign was so extravagant and the expenditures made by and on behalf of these gentlemen were made with such reckless disregard of propriety as to justify the sharpest criticism. Such expenditures were in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government, which contemplated the selection of candidates by the electors and not the selection of electors by the candidate."

We concur in this statement, and it justifies us in opposing the conclusion of the majority.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to call attention to an error that has crept into and remained in that statement. I used the word "electorate" instead of "electors" in my manuscript, but in printing it I suppose some printer thought that the words meant the same thing, and so he substituted the word "electors." I repeat I used the word "electorate," treating them as a body.

Mr. JONES. That is true, but it was carried in the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. The error is carried forward, but I think at this time the correction should be made.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the views of the minority, and read as follows:

How a seat in the Senate can be secured "in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government," with the evidence showing the use of such a large sum of money, and not be tainted by corrupt methods and practices we are unable to comprehend. The question now squarely before the Senate is whether or not methods and practices "in violation of the fundamental principles underlying our system of government" shall be denounced by our words and approved by our votes.

The majority report also says:

"Were a candidate for a State office in Wisconsin to conduct a campaign in the manner in which the campaign of Mr. STEPHENSON and of other men who sought election to the United States Senate were conducted, it would be very difficult to justify such conduct under the laws of the State."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that the views of the minority in reciting that the language which they have quoted is from the majority report are in error. The language quoted is not from the majority report or from any report of the committee, but the language quoted is from the personal views of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. It seems to me that in presenting the minority views that ought to have been stated.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to state that possibly the Senator from Utah is correct in a way, yet I think the minority were justified in making the statement they did. The views of the members of the subcommittee were submitted to the full committee, and upon those views the full committee submitted a report in which they embodied those views, although setting them out separately after the signing of the names of the members to what is termed the majority report. The majority report does not set out any specific reason upon which their conclusion is based, except that the views of the members of the subcommittee that were submitted in writing to the full committee are printed with it; and I think the minority are justified in the statement they make, although it may not be technically correct. There was nothing in the statement even of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to indicate that he did not approve the statement that was made in the views submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. I do not desire to do the Senator from Utah any injustice. If he does not indorse that sentiment, well and good; but there is nothing in the report to show that the majority of the committee did not indorse that sentiment, whatever might be the personal views of any individual member thereof.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the statement to which I have referred in the minority report is not only technically inaccurate, but it is very clearly inaccurate. The report of the committee is found on the first, second, and third pages of the first volume. That report is signed by those members of the committee who agreed to it, beginning with the chairman of the committee [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and then Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. BRADLEY.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] filed his views, in which he stated his reasons for concurring in that report, and I can not understand upon what theory anybody can insist that the reasons given independently by a member concurring in the report can be considered as a part of the report itself. The Senator from Idaho, in beginning his statement of his minority views, says:

The subcommittee having reported to the whole committee in favor of ISAAC STEPHENSON, I desire to submit herewith the reasons which actuated me in arriving at that conclusion:

Clearly upon its face that is no part whatever of the report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether it would be improper to go into the proceedings before the committee, but I think it is generally known that the views of the Senator from Idaho were printed long before the report was prepared or considered; in fact, they were submitted as his views in support of the report of the subcommittee to the full committee, and the views of the other members of the subcommittee were submitted in writing to the full committee before it decided upon, must less prepared, its report. After those views were submitted in writing the full committee agreed upon its report, and those views were printed along with the report, and they were bound together. I think, therefore, we had a right to assume, where there was no express statement by the members of the majority of their disagreement with any important statement contained in any of those views, that they accepted them; but if the Senator from Utah says that that statement does not express his view I shall be glad to have the RECORD show it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Utah has not said anything of the sort, and does not intend to say anything upon that subject. What the Senator from Utah complains about is that the minority views should state as a fact something that is not a fact.

Mr. JONES. I am willing to let the record rest on that. There have been so many technicalities in connection with this matter that I am not worried about this phase of it. If the Senator from Utah considers it more than a technical error, I am willing to admit, even that, if he so states, that these are not his views.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The views of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and myself are presented, and I think the Senator from Washington would not think that the Senator from Ohio and myself were presenting our views separately for the mere sake of the intellectual exercise involved in preparing them. The report is entirely a separate and distinct document.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Utah and the Senator from Ohio, as I understood, submitted their views to the full committee in writing to give it the benefit of their conclusions upon the testimony. The report of the full committee was agreed to and made up after those views had been submitted. Those views were not prepared after the majority report was made and signed nor submitted, as minority or individual views are usually presented, but they were presented to the full committee for its information in reaching its conclusion and making up its report; and they were in fact the basis for that report and the only reasons submitted for the conclusion of the majority.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; but—

Mr. JONES. And upon those views the full committee made its report. They did not see fit to set out any particular reasons for their conclusion, but accepted these various statements from all the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the members of the committee who signed the report, other than the Senator from Ohio and myself, could not be said to have assented by having signed the report, and the views of the Senator from Ohio and myself are no part of the report. They are merely our individual views.

Mr. JONES. There is certainly no reason for saying that members of the majority did dissent from any of the views submitted by the members who presented their views in writing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the views of the minority, and read as follows:

This statement we indorse. It warrants our opposition to the conclusion of the majority. If it would be difficult to justify a campaign like this by a candidate for a State office why is it not equally difficult to justify it on the part of Senator STEPHENSON? He was not compelled to go into the primary. He elected to do so, and he should be held to the same degree of accountability as any other candidate in that primary.

If he used methods—and the majority says he did—that it would be difficult to justify in behalf of a State candidate, then it is equally difficult for the Senate to justify such conduct on the part of a candidate for a seat in this body and preserve its integrity and honor. In our judgment it can not do it.

ADMITTED FACTS:

The following may be taken as admitted facts in this case: Three men were selected as managers by Senator STEPHENSON; money was placed in their hands from time to time as called for to the amount of over $107,000; they were not asked how they expended it, nor for what purpose; no accounting was requested; they paid it out in various sums to different individuals in different wards, precincts, and counties; large sums were paid to different individuals holding official positions, and to individuals recognized to be leaders, and to others of prominence in different organizations; no directions were given to these men how the money should be expended; no reports were required and no knowledge obtained as to how they spent the money or for what purpose; men were hired for the ostensible purpose of going over the country talking STEPHENSON and creating STEPHENSON sentiment; men, whose occupations led them into different sections of the country, were paid large sums of money for talking for STEPHENSON on their travels; men were paid three, five, and ten dollars per day to be at the polls on election day, or to haul voters to the polls; large sums were paid leaders in different wards and precincts to look after their wards and precincts; hundreds of dollars were spent for treating to cigars, liquors, meals, etc., as much as $135 in one day by one man; money was paid to candidates for the legislature, at least three of whom were nominated and elected; detailed expenditures were not kept; memoranda were destroyed; records and papers concerning the campaign were shifted from one place to another; mysterious methods and roundabout ways were employed; original records were destroyed; items and amounts were grouped in such a way as to give no knowledge to the public except the amount of each class of expenditures; a banker acted as treasurer; no account was opened as is usually done by depositors; remittances were received, private memoranda kept, cash disbursements of funds made, but no record was kept on the bank's books, and when the committee of the general assembly started to investigate local counsel for Mr. STEPHENSON had such records and correspondence as had not already been destroyed moved out of the State for the purpose of keeping them beyond the jurisdiction of the general assembly.

All this is admitted, and we feel that we have a right to assume from these admitted facts and actions that corrupt methods and practices were used in connection with said primary election.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I notice in following the reading that, after reciting the statement of facts found upon page 2, the minority say, "All this is admitted." Do I understand that there was any form of admission in the record, or did the committee agree upon that statement of facts, or is it simply an expression of the views of the minority?

Mr. JONES. Well, possibly it is a statement by the minority of what appears from the testimony throughout the record as to various things which were admitted by various witnesses who came before the committee, and several of those statements are taken from the views set out by the different majority members of the subcommittee that reported to the full committee.

Mr. BORAH. The reason I asked the question was because the statement of facts found upon page 2 is quite important, and if the statement is printed in such form as to show that the facts are admitted it might have considerable effect in making up the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I think the minority have quoted extracts from the evidence which show that a great many of these things were admitted. I will say to the Senator that with reference to the destruction of the memoranda, the removal of papers, and so forth, the facts are set out in the views of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and being printed along with the majority report, even accepting the statement that those views are not part of that report, we take it for granted that those facts were taken from the record and will not be disputed.

Mr. BORAH. I understand, then, that the minority consider the facts stated there are beyond dispute.

Mr. JONES. Beyond dispute; yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the views of the minority and read as follows:

All this is admitted, and we feel that we have a right to assume from these admitted facts and actions that corrupt methods and practices were used in connection with said primary election. To hold otherwise is to establish a precedent that would authorize an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars to debauch the electorate in order to secure a seat in this body. To do this is to notify the world that we are careless as to whether or not seats in this body are to be bought and sold as so much merchandise to the man with the largest purse. To do so is to say to the man of millions eager for place, power, and honor, "Spend as much of your millions as you please to secure a seat here and no question will be made if you claim it was expended within the law." As was said by Senator Hoar and Senator Frye, in regard to the facts before them in the Payne case, "No more fatal blow can be struck at the Senate or at the purity and permanence of the republican Government itself than the establishment of this precedent."

The expenditure of such a sum of money at a primary election on behalf of one candidate in itself shocks the judgment and conscience of honest men generally, and disburied as disclosed by the record in this case is conclusive proof of corrupt methods and practices.

THE PRIMARY.

The power to inquire into the practices and methods employed in the primary election is questioned. The majority in this case find that we have this power, and with that conclusion we agree. In this we are fully sustained by principle and precedent, and by the terms of the resolution under which the committee acted, which authorized and directed the committee "to investigate certain charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin against ISAAC STEPHENSON, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin, and report to the Senate whether in the election of said ISAAC STEPHENSON as a Senator of the United States from the said State of Wisconsin there were used corrupt methods and practices." The charges preferred by the Legislature of Wisconsin affected not only the election by the legislature itself, but also the primary election.

It appears by the record that several candidates for the legislature announced during their candidacy that, if elected, they would vote for the candidate for Senator receiving the highest vote at the primary. If the primary choice was secured by corrupt methods and practices, would not the vote in the legislature secured thereby be corrupt, however innocent the member casting it? Several members of the legislature announced when they voted for STEPHENSON that they did so solely because he was the primary choice. If the primary was carried by corrupt methods and practices, these votes were corrupt, though honestly cast, and if the Senate can not inquire into such corrupt methods and practices, then the power given to us to judge of elections of our Members is a mere shadow. That we have this power is in accord not only with reason and justice, but is sustained by precedent.

The case of Mr. Caldwell, found at page 420, Senate Election Cases, is in point. In this case an arrangement was made by Mr. Caldwell with Thomas Carney under which Mr. Carney agreed not to be a candidate for United States Senator before the Legislature of Kansas and should give his influence and support for Mr. Caldwell. Mr. Caldwell was to pay him $15,000. Mr. Carney was not a candidate before the legislature and did use his influence to secure the election of Mr. Caldwell. Was such an arrangement corrupt? The committee said:

"It was an attempt to buy the votes of the members of the legislature, not by bribing them directly, but through the manipulations of another. The purchase money was not to go to them, but to Mr. Carney, who was to sell and deliver them without their knowledge. That Mr. Caldwell did procure the votes of members of the legislature, friends of Mr. Carney, ignorant of the fact that Mr. Carney was making merchandise of his political character and influence and of their friendship for him, for which he was to receive a large sum of money, the evidence leaves no reasonable doubt."

"Buying off opposing candidates, and in that way securing the votes of all or the most of their friends, is in effect buying the office. It recognizes candidacy for office as a merchantable commodity—a thing having a money value—and is as destructive to the purity and freedom of elections as the direct bribery of members of the legislature."

When candidates for the legislature announce that they will vote for the choice of the primary for Senator, then to buy or corrupt the primary is to buy the member of the legislature; and if it was corrupt to buy off a candidate for the Senate and thereby secure the votes of his friends it is also corrupt to buy the primary and thereby secure the votes of those who announce that they will be controlled by the primary; and if the Senate can go outside of the proceedings of the legislature and investigate corruption in preventing men from being candidates for the Senate before the legislature, then it can certainly investigate methods and proceedings in the primary.

In the Payne case (Senate Election Cases, p. 711) three of the committee of seven say:

"We, in our conclusion, made no distinction between the use of fraud, corruption, or bribery in a caucus vote or in the legislative vote for a Senator. Although a caucus, or what proceeds in it, has no constitutional or legal relation to the election of a Senator, yet, by the habit of political parties, the stage of determination as to who is to be elected Senator, and the influences, proper or improper, that produce that determination, is that which precedes and is concluded in the caucus. So far as the question of personal delinquency or turpitude is concerned, no moral distinction should be made between corrupt proceedings in caucus and those in the legislature. How far any such distinction would need to be insisted upon in any case, on the question of unseating a Senator, where he himself was not affected with any personal misconduct or complicity with the misconduct of others, we have no occasion, in the immediate case or attitude of the subject, to consider or suggest."

Senators Hoar and Frye, in the same case, in their minority views at page 715, say:

"If B, C, and D have promised to vote as A shall vote, if A be corrupted, four votes are gained by the process, although B, C, and D be innocent. In looking, therefore, to see whether an election by the legislature was procured or effected by bribery, it may be very important to discover whether that bribery procured the nomination of a caucus whose action a majority of the legislature were bound in honor to support."

JOHN W. STONE.

John W. Stone was State game warden and had many deputies acting under him. Their position gave them an influence they would not have as individuals, and their duties required them to travel over the State. It was desirable to have their active support. Senator STEPHENSON personally directed that $2,500 be turned over to Stone. This was done without any specific directions as to its use, and the money was distributed over the State where and in the manner that it was thought would do the most good. While this action may not be a direct violation of the letter of any State law, in our judgment it was a corrupt practice.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONY.

We submit the following extracts from the testimony as illustrative of the methods and practices pursued in the distribution of this large sum of money for campaign purposes:

PRIMARY—STEPHENSON WOULD FIX NO LIMIT, BUT SAID GO ON AND CONDUCT THE CAMPAIGN, ETC.

Mr. EDMONDS. In my talk with Senator STEPHENSON I wanted to learn from him the amount of money he expected to expend. He seemed to think that too much money was being expended. I endeavored to have him fix an amount so that we would not exceed it. This he declined to do, and I endeavored to show him the difficulty of conducting a campaign without knowing how much I might be allowed to expend; but I was not able to get him to state, and he said to go on and conduct the campaign—"use your best ability in conducting it," and left it in that way.

SENATOR STEPHENSON.

Senator POMERENE. Did they advise you from time to time as to how they were expending this money?

Senator STEPHENSON. Not as a rule; no, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Did you ask for any report from them from time to time as to how they were expending this money?

Senator STEPHENSON. No, sir. I had confidence in Mr. Edmonds and Mr. Puelicher and my bankers, and I have yet.

Senator POMERENE. Referring to this letter of August 4, it was made known to you that to carry out Mr. Edmonds's plan he needed more money?

Senator STEPHENSON. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Did you at that time take up with him the matter as to the amount which you felt disposed to put into the campaign?

Senator STEPHENSON. I can not say as to that. We telephoned some. I think I was in the headquarters only twice, and not to exceed an hour altogether during the entire campaign. I was not in Milwaukee but about three times.

Senator POMERENE. In other words, we are to understand, then, that you left the entire management of this campaign to your campaign managers, and about all you did was to furnish the sinews of war?

Senator STEPHENSON. Yes.

$2,500 PAID TO STONE, GAME WARDEN.

The CHAIRMAN. We will pass that. Now we come to another item, "Cash to J. W. Stone, $2,500." Who was Mr. Stone?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Stone was game warden of Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know him personally before the payment of this $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I had met him.

The CHAIRMAN. Or at the time?

Mr. EDMONDS. I had met him.

The CHAIRMAN. You paid him the money, did you not, in cash?

Mr. EDMONDS. Through my instructions.
The CHAIRMAN. Did you not pay it to him in cash yourself?
Mr. EDMONDS. No.
The CHAIRMAN. Who did?
Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket says he did.
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Sacket paid it in cash. Where did he get the cash? Did you give it to him?
Mr. EDMONDS. No; I did not have the cash.
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Sacket had no cash in the campaign, did he?
Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket could get the cashier's check from the bank.

The CHAIRMAN. He had to get it from you, or on your credit?
Mr. EDMONDS. Sure; I told them to give it to him.
The CHAIRMAN. Then you did tell him to get it?
Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.
The CHAIRMAN. Let us see if we can get at a candid statement of the occasion of the payment of this $2,500 to the State game warden. You know all about it, do you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. About his getting the money.
The CHAIRMAN. You know all the details of that game warden proposition, do you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The matter has been investigated in such a way as to fix it in your mind, has it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was not necessary, because I remembered the details.
The CHAIRMAN. Remembered it all?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir; there were some things I did not remember, but some details I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. I would hardly expect to receive a reply if you do not know in regard to Mr. Stone.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose was $2,500 paid to Mr. Stone?

Mr. EDMONDS. For the purpose of getting his assistance in helping to nominate Senator STEPHENSON.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of assistance?

Mr. EDMONDS. Such kind as he could give, in his best judgment.

STONE MONEY PAID UNDER AGREEMENT WITH STEPHENSON.

Senator SUTHERLAND. When was it you gave Mr. Stone the $2,500—before or after this conversation?

Mr. EDMONDS. After.

Senator SUTHERLAND. After?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is, I think the same day, as I recall.

Senator SUTHERLAND. How did you fix the amount of $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. My recollection is that either Senator STEPHENSON informed me or else Mr. Stone informed me that that was the amount to be paid him.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Which was it?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not recall now.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Did you make the arrangement or did Mr. STEPHENSON make it?

Mr. EDMONDS. My present recollection is that Mr. STEPHENSON made the agreement with Mr. Stone; Mr. Stone had seen him.

Senator SUTHERLAND. For the $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. But as to just how far that went, I am not positive now. I do not want to do Mr. STEPHENSON an injustice by saying that he made it if Mr. Stone reported that that was the amount agreed upon when we talked.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Then I understand you to say that you do not know why it was $2,500 rather than some other sum?

Mr. EDMONDS. Except that that was the amount that Mr. Stone thought was advisable to put in his hands; that he could use to advantage or because of the information received from Senator STEPHENSON; which I am not sure.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Did you not exercise any judgment yourself as to what amount should be paid?

Mr. EDMONDS. In that particular case; no, sir.

PRIMARY—MONEY TO MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE—GAME WARDEN STONE—STEPHENSON TOLD.

The CHAIRMAN. What were the instructions, and what was the transaction?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think Senator STEPHENSON telephoned me or sent word through Mr. Stone to give him $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. To give you $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. To give him $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. To give Stone $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. For what did you give it to him?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not give it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did Mr. Stone get the $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. I assume from the bank—a cashier's check.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you give him an order?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is my recollection, though I am not positive.

The CHAIRMAN. That you gave him an order on the bank?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so. That may have been one of the $5,000 items. I have not seen my check book for two years.

GAME WARDEN STONE GOT $2,500 BY DIRECTION OF STEPHENSON; WAS TO USE AT OWN ELECTION.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it to be expended by you, or were you authorized to pay it out to others, to be expended by them?

Mr. STONE. I was to use it at my own discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you at liberty, then, as you understood the transaction, to handle all that money yourself?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. According to your discretion?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. No limitations were placed upon you, whatever, as to the manner of expenditure, were they?

Mr. STONE. No; I think not.

MANAGER EDMONDS'S DESCRIPTION OF "ORGANIZATION" METHODS.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what do you mean by "organize" when you use the term in connection with the payment of this money?

Mr. EDMONDS. I mean that the man employed by me to look after Dane County and get out the vote—the largest possible vote—for Senator STEPHENSON was given latitude, usually guided by his judgment alone, as to what was to be done (p. 77).

The CHAIRMAN. Particularize the word "organize" and tell me what constituted organization.

Mr. EDMONDS. My idea in a county that was thoroughly organized would be in the first place to get out the advertising that we sent to the county—have it fully distributed and posted, and after that was done he was to put in his full time going around the county, and he was paid for his services going around the county and interesting men of influence in the different localities to interest their friends so as to get out a full vote for Senator STEPHENSON election day. In some instances still further organizing, if in their judgment that was wise, by getting out the vote, by hiring teams, etc., for getting men to the polls (p. 78).

PURPOSE FOR WHICH MONEY WAS PAID.

The CHAIRMAN. The second charge is as follows:

"That said ISAAC STEPHENSON did, prior to said primary, pay to said Edmonds, above mentioned, sums with the design that said Edmonds should pay to other electors of this State, out of said sums above mentioned and other sums of money received by said Edmonds from said ISAAC STEPHENSON, prior to said primary, sums ranging from $5 per day to $1,000, in bulk, as a consideration for some act to be done in relation to said primary by said electors for said ISAAC STEPHENSON as such candidate, in violation of said section."

Is that statement true?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Wherein is it not true?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is a pretty long statement. One of the things that appeals to me as not being true is that neither of those sums is in violation of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will waive that last statement, "in violation of said section." Did he give you those sums, or any of them, to pay to other electors of the State?

Mr. EDMONDS. To other electors of the State?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I should say that he understood that in his payment of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the statement of facts, aside from the final clause, "in violation of said section," is substantially correct, is it?

Mr. EDMONDS. There are a good many items in there enumerated, but I should say it is substantially correct.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You have had charge of large expenditures of money, have you, in a business way?

Mr. EDMONDS. Quite large; yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You have employed many agents whose duty it was to expend money?

Mr. EDMONDS. In some instances; yes, sir. Usually, however, in the management of a business, the work is done from the office, and the management of such business as I conducted was done by me, in the expenditure of money.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Is it in accordance with your business training and experience and habits to hand over to your agent a large sum of money, $500 or $1,000, and have him expend it without keeping an account of what he expends it for, or without having him render an account to you of the expenditures?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That is not in accordance with business methods, at any rate?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Was there any reason why you could not request these various political agents to keep an account of their expenditures?

Mr. EDMONDS. The only reason I could give is that I have never heard of it being done. Custom, I should say, governed that.

NO MEMORANDA AS TO MONEY PAID.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Who should know, under the system that obtained in the headquarters?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket should know.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make any memoranda when you gave instructions for the payment of money to these various people, or any of them, as to the services they were to perform in consideration of receiving this money?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir; no written statement; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you did not?

Mr. EDMONDS. No written statement; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make any memoranda at any time in regard to the purposes for which the money you ordered paid was to be used?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not recall any.

The CHAIRMAN. Endeavor to recall it now, Mr. Edmonds.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir; I will.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you recall any instance in which you made a memorandum as to the purpose for which the money was paid, either by you or under your instructions, during this campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not recall any instance; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no books of account in which such items will appear?

Mr. EDMONDS. Absolutely not.

The CHAIRMAN. You made no record either in a book or otherwise as to the purpose for which you paid or directed that money to be paid during the campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. To the very best of my recollection, none.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not feel it was necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you acquainted with the provisions of the statutes of the State of Wisconsin with reference to the filing of an expense account by those who were candidates for nomination or election?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I think so; reasonably well.

The CHAIRMAN. Are we to understand that with that knowledge you did not make any attempt to lay the foundation for compliance with that law in the expenditure or payment of the large sums of money that you disbursed during the campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not, because it was done by another person in the office.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Sacket.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it transpired that it was not done by Mr. Sacket, then did Mr. Sacket disobey any instructions which you had given?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir; Mr. Sacket had his instructions from others before I came and took charge.

The CHAIRMAN. You were the manager of the campaign, were you not? That was the term used as to yourself?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is the term that has been given me; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the designation at that time, was it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you regard yourself in that respect?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think I regarded myself as manager of the campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. And so regarding yourself, you made no attempt to lay the foundation for making a statement that would comply with the law in the event it became necessary to file an expense account?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir. Owing to the conditions that existed when I went there, I felt that that was being done and so continued during my service.

$100 SENT TO A NEWSPAPER MAN AT WAUSAU.

The CHAIRMAN. I will so mark it. The next item is $100 to J. L. Sturtevant. That is said to be for "advertising." What advertising was that?

Mr. EDMONDS. He is running a daily and weekly newspaper, I believe, at Wausau.

The CHAIRMAN. Who made that contract?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe I sent him the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you a bill and receipt for it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any acknowledgment of it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What advertising was that for?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know why the word "advertising" is in there except that that is Mr. Sacket's method of designating certain of these matters to keep them in a certain account.

The CHAIRMAN. But you know about the payment of the money?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; I paid the money.

The CHAIRMAN. You inquired what it was for when you authorized it, did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. I had known Mr. Sturtevant for some little time, and, believing that he could be of assistance to us in Wausau—I knew that he was a friend of Senator STEPHENSON—I sent him a hundred dollars to use as he saw fit in promoting the interests of the Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. That was what might be termed a general contribution to the newspaper, was it; for its friendship?

Mr. EDMONDS. Perhaps it might be called that.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no specific advertisement—no space charged for—was there?

Mr. EDMONDS. In this particular instance, I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. No bill was rendered for specific services as "advertising"?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not recall, in this instance. I sent him the money, asking him to use it in the interest of Senator STEPHENSON.

The CHAIRMAN. You sent him the money for the purpose of retaining a friendly attitude toward Senator STEPHENSON, did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not need to do that, because he was very friendly; his paper was for him, and had been all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, it was a gratuity. You already had the services, and in acknowledgement of friendship you sent him a hundred dollars; does that express it?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I hardly think that expresses it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what was the hundred dollars for?

Mr. EDMONDS. I thought that with the hundred dollars he would be more active in his support of Senator STEPHENSON.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it was for additional friendship to that already existing, was it?

Mr. EDMONDS. Perhaps that statement would be true.

The CHAIRMAN. It was to cement the existing friendship?

Mr. EDMONDS. Most assuredly; it was to help Senator STEPHENSON.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it in order that he might not probably be influenced to change his attitude of friendship?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; that was not at all necessary with him.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. You sent just that class of contributions to a number of papers, I suppose, did you not?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think there were a number of instances; yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public utilities commission.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business. Without objection, the request is complied with. The Secretary will continue the reading of the views of the minority.

The Secretary resumed the reading, and read as follows:

WISE MANAGERS DID NOT KNOW, AND DID NOT ATTEMPT TO FIND OUT, WHETHER THIS MONEY WAS SPENT HONESTLY OR NOT.

The CHAIRMAN. And that you have made no effort to ascertain whether or not the expenditures of this money were wrongful?

Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In any case?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have not.

THE EXTENT AND MANNER OF DISTRIBUTION.

The CHAIRMAN. You had 70 men, I understand, in your organization industriously engaged in distributing money among the common people throughout the campaign?

Mr. EDMONDS. I should say there were probably that many.

MANAGER SACKET'S DESCRIPTION OF "ORGANIZATION METHODS" (P. 175).

The CHAIRMAN. I notice that all of these items for organizing—and the greater part of them are for organizing—are after the time when you had filed the petitions with the signatures on them.

Mr. SACKET. My idea of organizing, as I used it in this statement, might include circulating of petitions, or any other work to perfect that organization which we hoped to use for the election of Senator STEPHENSON.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it include the distribution and payment of money to men who were to work at the polls?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it include the payment of money to men who were to induce other men to vote for Senator STEPHENSON, without any limitation being placed upon the manner of inducement?

Mr. SACKET. It would include money expended that way; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It might include money expended in purchasing votes, might it?

Mr. SACKET. It might.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it?

Mr. SACKET. Not to my knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you say it did not?

Mr. SACKET. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

METHOD BY WHICH SACKET SPENT MONEY.

(167) Mr. SACKET. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. What services did he perform?

Mr. SACKET. I do not know.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was he one of the men you made an arrangement with?

Mr. SACKET. He was not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you pay that on the order of Mr. Edmonds?

Mr. SACKET. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you pay money on the order of any person other than Mr. Edmonds?

Mr. SACKET. Not to my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. When Mr. Edmonds gave you an order, such as is indicated by that payment, did he give it to you in writing?

Mr. SACKET. Not necessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. How did he give it to you?

Mr. SACKET. He told me that he wanted a check for $300 for Mr. R. E. Orton.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it a verbal communication?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you would get the check?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And would you make a memorandum?

Mr. SACKET. I would.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you inquire of Edmonds what the money was to be used for?

Mr. SACKET. Not in all cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you in this case?

Mr. SACKET. I do not remember.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no recollection about it?

Mr. SACKET. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know whether it was to be used for purchasing votes or for what purposes?

Mr. SACKET. I had no knowledge of my own whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you not feel it incumbent upon you to know for what the money that you paid out was to be used?

Mr. SACKET. The money that I paid out on Mr. Edmonds's order; no.

The CHAIRMAN. You think you would be relieved of responsibility if the money was to be paid out for an unlawful purpose merely because Mr. Edmonds told you to pay it?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You think you would be relieved?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not undertake to assert that if an associate were to ask you to violate the law you would be justified in doing it?

Mr. SACKET. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then how do you account for your answer that if you believed if Mr. Edmonds told you to pay this money out for an unlawful purpose that Mr. Edmonds and not you would be responsible?

Mr. SACKET. I felt that when Mr. Edmonds asked for money I was under obligations to give it to him. I was Mr. STEPHENSON's manager.

DESTRUCTION OF MEMORANDA.

Manager Sacket, in testifying as to the payment of an item of $400, stated that he was unable to remember anything about it. He then testified as follows (p. 164):

The CHAIRMAN. That emphasizes the misfortune of the destruction of your memoranda, does it not? Now, you say, in the absence of that memorandum, you can not remember anything about the $400. It may have been used to purchase votes in violation of law, may it not?

Mr. SACKET. I have no knowledge one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. So that a payment of this money passing through your hands as the representative of the candidate may have been used, so far as you can state, for an illegal purpose?

Mr. SACKET. I do not know.

PERRIN'S EXPENDITURES.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is C. R. Fridley?

Mr. PERRIN. He is an attorney at Superior.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he an old resident?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he an old man or a young man?

Mr. PERRIN. He is a man of 42 or 43 years of age.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he support Senator STEPHENSON for nomination at the primaries and before the primaries?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he in public life in any capacity?

Mr. PERRIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. He was what you call a political worker, was he?

Mr. PERRIN. No. He was a practicing lawyer.

The CHAIRMAN. He was actively engaged in the practice of law?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You never asked him for any accounting as to the expense he had incurred?

Mr. PERRIN. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. What is Mr. Fridley's business, you say?

Mr. PERRIN. He is an attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is $10 to H. L. Dresser. Who is H. L. Dresser?

Mr. PERRIN. Mr. Dresser had nothing to do with the campaign and does not live in the State. I was in Duluth and somebody made application to me for money, and I had to go to him and borrow it, and gave him my check to reimburse him. It was money expended in the campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. He lived in Duluth?

Mr. PERRIN. He lived in Duluth when this application was made to me.

The CHAIRMAN. You drew this money for your own expenditure, or to be paid out by you?

Mr. PERRIN. I drew that money to be paid to some one in the Stephenson campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you say to whom you paid it?

Mr. PERRIN. I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. We go to the next item of $50 cash.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, there are only a few of us here. It seems to me that we could be making better progress in our rooms studying this case rather than continuing here.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I make a statement?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It had been my intention at the concluding of the reading of the views of the minority to move an executive session.

Mr. BRISTOW. That will be some time.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are only a few pages left.

Mr. BRISTOW. That might take an hour.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will inquire how many pages there are.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why can not the reading be finished to-morrow?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there are only six pages now left.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let us have an executive session now and finish to-morrow. There will be plenty of time to-morrow.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the reading finished. I ask the clerks how many pages remain to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary advises the Chair that there are seven pages yet to be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. That will take only a few minutes.

Mr. BRISTOW. It will take until about 5 o'clock.

Mr. HEYBURN. It ought not.

Mr. BRISTOW. There are only a few here and those of us who feel some obligation to stay in the Senate when it is in session ought not to be imposed upon by being compelled to remain here when we could be at home at work. It would really expedite this business. I want to study this case in full, and I can do it more efficiently at my room than here in the confusion of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will make the statement, in order that Senators may be advised, that, so far as I may, within the rules of the Senate, it is my intention to ask the continuous consideration of this measure until we reach a vote upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Has the reading of the minority report been finished?

Mr. HEYBURN. There are seven pages remaining, and I have suggested that at the end of the reading of the report I would move an executive session. It seems to me that we ought to be patient and have the seven pages read and then orderly proceed to an executive session.

Mr. BRISTOW. While the matter is under consideration, as the Senator from Idaho states that he desires to press this question, I should like to know about how vigorously he expects to press it. Some 2,000 pages of testimony have been presented to the Senate within the last week, and some of us desire to examine it and to make some remarks upon the report of the committee. It is going to take time. It has been the custom of the Senate to give a reasonable time for the preparation of remarks upon a case of this kind. I should like to know about how much time the Senator expects to yield to those of us who want to prepare and thoroughly look into the case.

Mr. HEYBURN. I expect that the Senate will either discuss or vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the views of the minority.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say to the Senator here that he can obstruct the business of the Senate by compelling Senators to greatly inconvenience themselves, by prolonging the discussion and taking days in offering remarks that they might, with time, be able to present in an hour or two.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no doubt they will be interesting remarks, and illuminating.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator can use this case to obstruct other business if he desires.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is no business before the Senate, or that can come before it, that is as important as this, and that has been established since the foundation of Congress. It is a question of the highest privilege, and that means that there is nothing which can be more important.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Idaho may think that he can drive this through as the slave driver would drive the men under his control, but I think he will find before he gets through that he is somewhat mistaken. There may be some reason why he does not want this case properly considered in this body and the details of it exposed to the view of the American people in this way. In my judgment, it will be presented.

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope so.

Mr. BRISTOW. And the Senate will have an opportunity to pass judgment as to whether the majority or the minority are correct in their report in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if any request has been made to dispense with the further reading of the views of the minority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No such request has been made.

Mr. CULBERSON. I make it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the views of the minority. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think that the reading had better be continued until the report is finished, so that the Senate may have it before them at one time. I shall object to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cummins	Kenyon	Richardson
Borah	Curtis	Kern	Root
Bourne	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Shively
Brandeggee	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Foster	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brown	Gallinger	Nelson	Stephenson
Bryan	Gamble	Newlands	Sutherland
Burton	Gardner	Nixon	Swanson
Chamberlain	Gronna	Overman	Thornton
Chilton	Heyburn	Page	Townsend
Clapp	Hitchcock	Perkins	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Wetmore
Culbertson	Jones	Rayner	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] made a request which I misunderstood. I thought it was a request to suspend the reading of the report and go on with it hereafter. It seems that it was a request to dispense with it and to publish it. I would not have made any objection to that, and therefore I now make the request that he made and to which I objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the remaining part of the views of the minority, and that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The remainder of the views of the minority is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. We go to the next item of $50 cash. Can you account for any part of it?

Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The last item I inquired about, of $10 to Dresser, was on the 18th of August.

Mr. PERRIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And another item the same day, the 18th, is $50 cash. You say you can not account for that?

Mr. PERRIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time you had received the $3,000. You received it on the 15th. So you had all of this $5,000 then available?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And on the 19th you drew a check to W. W. Savage for $25, and he indorsed it. What was that for?

Mr. PERRIN. I am not sure about that. I sent him out two or three times, I do not remember when, to get information to enable us to carry on this work.

The CHAIRMAN. He was your clerk?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. On the 21st you paid out $200 cash. Can you account for any part of that?

Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection of it.

The CHAIRMAN. On the same day you paid out $100 cash. Can you account for any part of that?

Mr. PERRIN. I have no distinct recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. Again on the same day, $40 cash. Can you account for that or any part of it?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not recollect that.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it money expended in the city of Superior?

Mr. PERRIN. This money was expended in four counties—Douglas, Bayfield, Sawyer, and Washburn.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they the northern counties in the State?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The most northern?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us the conversation—what he said to you and what you said to him that resulted in the handing over of that check.

Mr. PERRIN. I can not remember the details.

The CHAIRMAN. Give us the substance.

Mr. PERRIN. The substance of it was that I went to him and asked him if he would put in some time in the STEPHENSON campaign. He said he would do what he could. I asked him how much money he thought he would need at that time, and he said that he ought to have $250.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell him that you were disbursing STEPHENSON money at that time? You told him you had received this thousand dollars, did you?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And he told you he could be of some use to Senator STEPHENSON, did he?

Mr. PERRIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How did he tell you he could be of use to Senator STEPHENSON?

Mr. PERRIN. I guess I knew as much about that as he did. I do not know that he expressed himself in specific terms as to what he could do or would do.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he do for Senator STEPHENSON's campaign?

Mr. PERRIN. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you knew what he could do?

Mr. PERRIN. I knew what he could do; certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that to be taken as a criterion of what he did do?

Mr. PERRIN. It was by me.
 The CHAIRMAN. What did he do?
 Mr. PERRIN. Taking that as a criterion, he could, and I believe he did, get men interested for Senator STEPHENSON that neither Senator STEPHENSON, Mr. Edmonds, nor I could otherwise get.
 The CHAIRMAN. Get men that you could not get?
 Mr. PERRIN. Yes.
 The CHAIRMAN. How would he get them interested? What would he do?
 Mr. PERRIN. I think he would mostly talk.
 The CHAIRMAN. What would he say to them?
 Mr. PERRIN. I am sure I do not know.
 The CHAIRMAN. What would be the nature of the conversation?
 Mr. PERRIN. I would not undertake to say.
 The CHAIRMAN. How do you know it is not just exactly the conversation you or Mr. Edmonds would have had with these people?
 Mr. PERRIN. Because I know that I could not talk to some of those people the way Mr. Shields could.
 The CHAIRMAN. If you do not know what he said to them, how do you know that?
 Mr. PERRIN. There are things, you know, that we know without being able to explain or express after long years of acquaintance with a man that no man living can sit on the witness stand and detail.
 The CHAIRMAN. Do you think you are worth the $3,000 that Mr. STEPHENSON gave you?
 Mr. PERRIN. Oh, I know I am worth that.
 The CHAIRMAN. It takes a pretty good political talker to get that amount of money.
 Mr. PERRIN. I did not have to talk any to get it.
 The CHAIRMAN. How much of this money indicated by the cash items or the checks remained in your hands?
 Mr. PERRIN. Not a cent.
 The CHAIRMAN. And yet you can not account for a cent of it that you paid out?
 Mr. PERRIN. I can not in detail; no, sir.
 The CHAIRMAN. Not a single item?
 Mr. PERRIN. Not one.
 The CHAIRMAN. That was rather a spectacular campaign in some respects, was it not, with money flowing out freely in those amounts?
 Mr. PERRIN. To speak in the vernacular, I guess we got them "going some."
 Senator SUTHERLAND. In handing over sums of money to people that you employed in Senator STEPHENSON'S interest, did you give any of them any instruction whatever as to what they should do?
 Mr. PERRIN. If I thought it was necessary when I gave the man money to tell him what to do, I have no doubt I did.
 Senator SUTHERLAND. Did you?
 Mr. PERRIN. I do not remember.
 Senator SUTHERLAND. You do not recall having given anybody any instructions?
 Mr. PERRIN. No; I do not recall it. I know there were some instances where I said to some man, or some men, that we would look to him or them to provide workers at the polls, for instance, or teams to get voters out. But that was all in the most general way.
 Senator SUTHERLAND. You gave them no specific instructions that you recall as to what they should do?
 Mr. PERRIN. I do not recall now; no. I do not recall now that I did.
 The CHAIRMAN. On August 5, $200 cash. For what was that cash expended, and by whom?
 Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection.
 The CHAIRMAN. August 6, $25 cash. What do you say as to that?
 Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection.
 The CHAIRMAN. August 6, $200. What have you to say as to that item?
 Mr. PERRIN. I do not remember it.
 The CHAIRMAN. When you say you do not remember, you mean—
 Mr. PERRIN. I have no recollection.
 The CHAIRMAN. That you have no information to give in regard to it, based upon your recollection?
 Mr. PERRIN. None whatever.
 The CHAIRMAN. On August 7, $100 cash. Have you any recollection as to the purpose for which that was expended?
 Mr. PERRIN. No, sir.
 The CHAIRMAN. And on August 7, again, $75; and on August 7, again, $50; that is $225 on August 7. Have you any knowledge as to what that was used for?
 Mr. PERRIN. Those items are all "cash"?
 The CHAIRMAN. Yes; they are all cash.
 Mr. PERRIN. No; I have no recollection.
 The CHAIRMAN. On the 8th we have cash items of $50, $50, $50, $50, and $50—$250; do you know the purpose for which that money, or any part of it, was expended?
 Mr. PERRIN. Those are cash?
 The CHAIRMAN. Yes; cash items.
 Mr. PERRIN. No; I have no recollection.
 Senator POMERENE. You have said in answer to Senator SUTHERLAND—I want to quote you correctly, and if I do not you will correct me—that you probably paid money to 100 different persons, though you were not definite as to your statement.
 Mr. PERRIN. No; I can not be.
 Senator POMERENE. I understand that. You also said to him again in your examination that you knew personally very many of the men that you employed.
 Mr. PERRIN. Yes.
 Senator POMERENE. Do you mean to tell the committee that you do not now remember any of the men to whom you paid this money, outside of the few names that you gave to Senator HEYBURN?
 Mr. PERRIN. That is just exactly what I mean to say.
 Senator POMERENE. Not one of them?
 Mr. PERRIN. Not one of them.

MR. PERRIN'S METHODS OF DISTRIBUTING $5,000.

(U39) Mr. PERRIN. I planned that we would take the first $1,000 and get hold of as many of the men who were accustomed to doing political work in that territory as we could get hold of with that money, laying the foundation for further and more extensive electioneering if the money was forthcoming. * * * At that time, I think, I knew I would get another $1,000.
 "The CHAIRMAN. With this class of expenditure the motive does cut some figure. You were representing a candidate for office, under the laws of a State, and you were not spending your money, but his. Did it not occur to you that he would be responsible for the manner of your expenditure, and that incidentally to that you would have some responsibility?"
 Mr. PERRIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. It did not?
 Mr. PERRIN. No.
 "The CHAIRMAN. You did not feel that you were under any responsibility to any person or any law for the manner of the expenditure of this money?"
 Mr. PERRIN. I do not think I said that.
 The CHAIRMAN. I asked you. It is a question I am asking you.
 Mr. PERRIN. Just read the question, please.
 The reporter read as follows:
 "The CHAIRMAN. You did not feel that you were under any responsibility to any person or any law for the manner of the expenditure of this money?"
 Mr. PERRIN. I felt that I was responsible to Senator STEPHENSON for the expenditure of the money that he put in my hands.
 The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean the manner of the expenditure?
 Mr. PERRIN. No; I do not think so, entirely. I think I was selected to exercise an independent judgment upon the manner in which his candidacy should be furthered in that particular.
 The CHAIRMAN. And leave the responsibility upon Senator STEPHENSON?
 Mr. PERRIN. May I inquire—responsibility for what?
 The CHAIRMAN. The manner in which you expended it; were you going to let him take chances on that?
 Mr. PERRIN. I do not think the Senator was taking any chances on that.
 The CHAIRMAN. To return to Mr. Shields: You have not been able to account for any item of expenditure by Mr. Shields; so that we shall have to rely upon Mr. Shields, shall we, for that information?
 Mr. PERRIN. I presume he can give you some idea as to what he did with that money. I should like to say, if I may, that of these cash items I think Mr. Fridley had more than appears to have been given him upon checks drawn to his order.
 Mr. PERRIN. This statute has never received in practical operation, by anybody that I know of in the State of Wisconsin, the construction which has been suggested here. It is the common, ordinary thing throughout northern Wisconsin to take a man to the theater or take him to lunch, not necessarily to corrupt his mind, but to enlighten him. You do these things to get a man's mind in a receptive mood. You can not go after him, Senator, you know, with an ax and beat an idea into him. It has got to be worked out along practical lines. It seems foolish for me to sit here and talk to you gentlemen about this thing, because you know so much more about it than I do.
 The CHAIRMAN. Our examination here is not so much for our entertainment as to make a record.
 Mr. PERRIN. I beg your pardon. I apologize.
 The CHAIRMAN. You need make no apology. This is to be taken as a test of your meaning of "electioneering," then, is it?
 Mr. PERRIN. I think that is a fair test of the meaning of ninety-nine men out of a hundred who conduct politics.
 The CHAIRMAN. Of "electioneering"?
 Mr. PERRIN. "Electioneering."
 The CHAIRMAN. You think that comes within the definition of "electioneering"?
 Mr. PERRIN. I certainly do.
 The CHAIRMAN. And when you speak of having expended money in electioneering, either by you or by those whom you employed, you include that kind of proceeding under the head "electioneering"?
 Mr. PERRIN. It may be included.
 Senator SUTHERLAND. You think it is as legitimate to reach a man through his appetite as it is through his intellect.
 KNOWINGLY PAID MONEY TO SHAUERS.
 The CHAIRMAN. You said, or I understood you to say, that there was only one case in which you knowingly paid money to a man who was a candidate for the legislature; what case was that?
 Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Shauers, of Oconto County.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was he elected?
 Mr. EDMONDS. No, sir.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What was his name?
 Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Shauers.
 The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose did you pay him money?
 Mr. EDMONDS. He was a railroad man, and for the purpose of organizing he went in different parts of the State to see railroad men.
 The CHAIRMAN. Was he in employment then or out of employment?
 Mr. EDMONDS. Out of employment.
 The CHAIRMAN. Then he went from his home to different parts of the State, outside of the legislative district where he was a candidate?
 Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. It was distinctly understood that he was to spend no time, no money, in that district.
 The CHAIRMAN. Well, but did he?
 Mr. EDMONDS. He did not, to my knowledge.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, in his own district?
 Mr. EDMONDS. In his own district.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So that nothing that was expended by him had any relation to the campaign pending in his district?
 Mr. EDMONDS. Absolutely not.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Either directly or indirectly?
 The CHAIRMAN. How much did you pay Shauers?
 Mr. EDMONDS. I don't recall. I should think it might range from $50 to $100 or $125. I don't think more than that. I paid him, I think, two or three different times $25.
 THOMAS REYNOLDS.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive any more than $180 from Senator STEPHENSON or from anyone in his behalf?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. I received $100 from Senator STEPHENSON'S manager.
 The CHAIRMAN. Is that the $100 that you have referred to? Did you receive $280 altogether from Senator STEPHENSON or his manager?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. I did not consider it from Senator STEPHENSON, although Senator STEPHENSON told me afterwards that he told them to send it to me—I supposed for my services; I do not know for what.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive $280 altogether from Senator STEPHENSON?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir.
 The CHAIRMAN. You received $80 from Senator STEPHENSON personally, did you not?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.
 The CHAIRMAN. Then you received $100 from Senator STEPHENSON personally?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. No, sir; not personally.
 The CHAIRMAN. From whom did you receive it?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. I received it through the mail.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive the second $100 through the mail?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. The second $100; yes, sir; that is the only $100 I received through the mail, the second $100—no; the first $100. The first $100.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive another $100 after that?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. I received $100 by check from his manager.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive $100 by check from Senator STEPHENSON?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. No, sir.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive more than one sum of $100 from the manager?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. That is all I received from the manager—$100; a $100 check.
 The CHAIRMAN. Tell us how you received the $280.
 Mr. REYNOLDS. I received $80 from Senator STEPHENSON and $100 afterwards from him.
 The CHAIRMAN. From Senator STEPHENSON?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.
 The CHAIRMAN. Personally?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. Not personally; no.
 The CHAIRMAN. How did you receive it?
 Mr. REYNOLDS. Through the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom did you pay the largest sum of money?
 Mr. RIORDAN. In all?
 The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
 Mr. RIORDAN. During the campaign?
 The CHAIRMAN. Yes; out of this fund.
 Mr. RIORDAN. For any purpose?
 The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
 Mr. RIORDAN. $250 to E. A. Everett, of Eagle River.
 The CHAIRMAN. For what did you pay him that sum?
 Mr. RIORDAN. For traveling through the counties of Vilas, Iron, and Oneida and ascertaining, as far as he was able, the sentiment of the people as he went along; that is, those who were for and against each of the several candidates.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he report to you, a memorandum of people, showing the result of that work?
 Mr. RIORDAN. He made two such trips through the county. After the first one he came back and made a report to me, and the second time he came back and made a similar report.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us who he was.
 Mr. RIORDAN. E. A. Everett is the proprietor of the Everett resort.
 The CHAIRMAN. What is that?
 Mr. RIORDAN. That consists of a large hotel dining room and about 40 cottages on the Eagle chain of lakes, at Eagle River.
 The CHAIRMAN. It is a summer resort?
 Mr. RIORDAN. It is a summer resort. Prior to that time he was a member of the Wisconsin Assembly.
 The CHAIRMAN. But at the time you made this arrangement with him he was not a public officer?
 Mr. RIORDAN. He was a candidate for public office.
 The CHAIRMAN. What office?
 Mr. RIORDAN. The office of member of the assembly.
 The CHAIRMAN. At the time you paid him this money?
 Mr. RIORDAN. I did not pay him the money, I see by my testimony, until the 31st of August.

Senator POMERENE. Is that George E. Everett?
 Mr. RIORDAN. E. A. Everett.
 The CHAIRMAN. The testimony would indicate that you paid it to him before the primary election.
 Mr. RIORDAN. I think a day or two before the primary election.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He was a candidate for the assembly?
 Mr. RIORDAN. Yes.
 The CHAIRMAN. Was he elected?
 Mr. RIORDAN. No, sir.
 The CHAIRMAN. When you paid it to him, did you know that he was a candidate for the assembly?
 Mr. RIORDAN. I think I did, certainly. I surely talked with him about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he announcing for whom he would vote in the legislature if he were elected?
 Mr. RIORDAN. Yes; he was to vote for the candidate who received the primary nomination.
 The CHAIRMAN. Without regard to who it was?
 Mr. RIORDAN. Yes; and I would like to add there that the man who was running against him made the same promise.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What was his name?
 Mr. RIORDAN. D. B. Stevens.
 The CHAIRMAN. They promised to abide the result of the primary?
 Mr. RIORDAN. Yes. The campaign was made with that understanding.
 The CHAIRMAN. For whom did they assert their influence during the primary, the time preceding the election?
 Mr. RIORDAN. I think for themselves, individually.
 The CHAIRMAN. Were they announcing their support of any particular candidate, or doing anything in the interest of any particular candidate?
 Mr. RIORDAN. No; I do not think they were.

BANCROFT'S METHODS.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):
 "The result of our conference was that I, being pretty well acquainted with the county, and knowing who the political workers were in the county, consented to disburse this amount of money for Mr. STEPHENSON."

Is that correct?
 Mr. BANCROFT. That is correct.
 The CHAIRMAN. Give us the names of the people and the amounts you gave them.
 Mr. BANCROFT. George Mehaffy I paid $100.
 The CHAIRMAN. What was he to do for that $100?
 Mr. BANCROFT. I gave him no instructions whatever.
 Senator POMERENE. What is his address?
 Mr. BANCROFT. Richland Center.
 The CHAIRMAN. What did he do with the money?
 Mr. BANCROFT. I could not tell you.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you ask him to render you an account of the manner of its expenditure?
 Mr. BANCROFT. I did not.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did he ever tell you how he expended the money?
 Mr. BANCROFT. He did not.
 The CHAIRMAN. Then you never knew?
 Mr. BANCROFT. I do not know.
 The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever know?
 Mr. BANCROFT. I never knew.

MONEY PAID TO MULDER, CANDIDATE FOR THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then you said, "and he got some of this money"; so I got the impression that you referred to McConnell.
 Senator POMERENE. You understood that I was referring to Mulder?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.
 Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is all right, then.
 Senator POMERENE. Yes; that is all right, so there will be no misunderstanding. Was it as much as $50?
 Mr. GORDON. I can not tell you how much it was.
 Senator POMERENE. You can certainly give us some idea as to whether it was a matter of $5 or $10 or $50 or $100.
 Mr. GORDON. I can not tell you definitely how much it was.
 Senator POMERENE. I know; but I am not asking you for that. I am asking you for your best judgment about it.
 Mr. GORDON. It was probably, I should guess, from $25 to $50.
 Senator POMERENE. What did you say to him with reference to his campaign and what use was to be made of this money?
 Mr. GORDON. He was one of the original Stephenson men in the county, and I asked him to do what he could in the interest of Mr. STEPHENSON.

Senator POMERENE. What else was said?
 Mr. GORDON. That is all I can recollect. I do not recollect all that was said. That is what I naturally would say.
 Senator POMERENE. Since your attention has been directed to this matter, do you not recall that Mulder was a candidate for the general assembly?

Mr. GORDON. I say he was a candidate, but I can not recollect whether he was when I gave him the money or whether he subsequently became a candidate.

Senator POMERENE. I misunderstood you, then.
 Mr. GORDON. He was a candidate; yes.
 Senator POMERENE. We understand each other now—that he was in fact a candidate?

Mr. GORDON. He was a candidate; yes, sir.
 Senator POMERENE. But you meant to say that you do not remember whether at the time you gave him the money he was then an announced candidate or not?

Mr. GORDON. That is the idea.

WHEELER'S METHODS OF DISTRIBUTION.

William G. Wheeler distributed $600 and aided in the "organization." Mr. C. B. Salmons was one of his lieutenants. Mr. Salmons reported the success of his operations in the following letter to his chief (p. 597):

BELOIT, WIS., September 1.

MY DEAR WHEELER: I inclose bills in blank which are correct. All the men and rigs were in the exclusive use of Stephenson. We did not mix any other candidates. We also had about as many more that were STEPHENSON and one or two other candidates. At this writing, 4 p. m., I predict 1,700 to 1,800 votes, and that STEPHENSON will get 65 per cent.

Very truly,

C. B. SALMONS.

We should pay these men in the morning.

(Our italics.)

MR. DART'S METHODS OF DISTRIBUTING MONEY.

Dart was one of the deputy game wardens, and received $400 for "organization purposes."

The chairman read to the witness an extract from his testimony given before the legislative committee, as follows:

"Q. What did you do with it?—A. Spent it.
 "Q. How?—A. Every old way.
 "Q. What is that?—A. Every way.
 "Q. Tell us some way that you spent it.—A. Oh, I spent quite a lot of it in saloons."
 The CHAIRMAN. Is that true?
 Mr. DART. Well, I should not go past any of them if there was anybody there I wanted to see.

The CHAIRMAN (reading from previous testimony):
 "Q. Did you make any payments to individuals?—A. Oh, yes; I gave them quite a little bunch of money.
 "Q. Who were the persons to whom you gave 'quite a little bunch of money'?—A. Oh, I don't know; I could not mention half or a quarter of them."

He, however, on pages 977 to 982, gives an interesting account of the expenditures that he remembers.

The testimony of Mr. Wellensgard, on pages 852, 855, and 856; that of Mr. French, at page 876; and that of George Beyer, at page 881, furnish fair illustrations of the methods employed by local workers.

LIQUOR EXPENDITURES.

Senator POMERENE. Or, if he got a drink of whisky at the bar and drank it there, that would not be prohibited; but if he got a half a pint and put it in his pocket and took it away for a swig after a while, that would be illegal?

Mr. SACKET. I think I should have to revert to the custom again and say that the half pint was lawful.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Is it the custom in Wisconsin to buy the voters bottles of whisky and give to them?

Mr. SACKET. And kegs of beer; yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. And kegs of beer?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me get that question.

Senator POMERENE. Being from Maine, you do not know anything about that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is why I was quite anxious to get the actual practical situation. I trust we are adding to the sum of human knowledge and at the same time increasing my own information. Of course, I fully realize my infirmity.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Now, Mr. Sacket, do you seriously mean that that is the custom in Wisconsin?

Mr. SACKET. The custom, as I understand it; yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. To purchase bottles of whisky and kegs of beer for voters?

Mr. SACKET. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

"Q. You kept no track of it. How could you present a bill to Mr. Wayland? Was that just an estimate of what you spent?—A. No. I think there was $135 cash I had in my pocket, without the automobile, which was $15. I think it was $150 I had that day when I left the office."

Is that correct?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

"Q. And you spent all that in one day?—A. Yes, sir."

(827) Mr. O'CONNOR. No, sir; it was a supper, I guess, that cost about $1.60 for the two of us.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You spent $1.60 for food, as I understand you?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That would leave $305.40 for whisky and cigars and automobiles?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Do you think you spent a little too much for food?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I did not think anything about it.

Senator SUTHERLAND. You do not recall spending any of the money for anything else.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is all it was spent for.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That is, you spent $305.40 for an automobile and for whisky and cigars?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Senator SUTHERLAND. And that was your notion of furthering the interests of Senator STEPHENSON in this campaign, was it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the way they make a campaign up in that territory.

Senator SUTHERLAND. That is the way you made it, at all events?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is customary up there.

MONEY PAID TO "ENTHUSE" VOTERS.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Edmonds, did you pay the $50 to Mr. Dettman on August 8?

Mr. EDMONDS. My recollection is not clear on that, but I think I sent it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. You think you sent it to him; for what purpose?

Mr. EDMONDS. For assistance among the German Lutherans in his locality.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of assistance?

Mr. EDMONDS. So that he would get out and help to get out the vote—interest his friends—for Senator STEPHENSON.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no vote to be gotten out on August 8 for any purpose—nearly a month before the election.

Mr. EDMONDS. When I say getting out the vote, I do not refer to the actual carrying or taking of the persons to the polls, but to interest them so that they would get out.

The CHAIRMAN. Enthuse them?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is the idea—enthuse them. Thank you for the suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. "O. L. Gust, $300, August 8." Did you pay that money?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not recall that payment at all.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by lining them up for Senator STEPHENSON?

Mr. EDMONDS. Getting them interested in his election.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussing his election with them?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Paying any money to them for any purpose?

Mr. EDMONDS. That was up to the man's judgment as to whether that was necessary or advisable in the conduct of the campaign for Senator STEPHENSON's election.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that money given to him to expend among the railroad men for cigars or treats of any kind if he saw fit to so expend it?

Mr. EDMONDS. So far as I know he might have expended it in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no restriction placed upon it?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think not; not in that manner.

FINDING.

We regret that we can not feel warranted in finding for the sitting Member, but we believe the methods employed at the primary were corrupt; that they were against public policy; that they were demoralizing in character; that they directly contributed to destroy the purity and freedom of the election; that they violated the fundamental principles at the basis of our system of government; and that they are not to be tolerated by the Senate of the United States as a means of procuring a seat in that body.

We desire to submit the following resolution:

"Resolved, That ISAAC STEPHENSON was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 21, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, by the sun which illumines the earth; by the stars which shine by night; by the change of seasons; by the wonderful adaptation of means to ends; by the holy ties which bind us together into families; by the patriotism which inspires to deeds of heroism; by the faith which has come down to us out of the ages; by the hope which shines brighter than day; by the love which time nor space can sever; by the still, small voice Thou doest speak to us, and bid us go forward to the things which make for righteousness in the soul which shall survive the wreck of time, help us to hear and obey. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution for an exhibit at the Fifth National Corn Exposition, at Columbia, S. C.; and

S. 4197. An act for the purchase of a site for the erection of a post office and public building at New Martinsville, Wetzel County, W. Va.

PRINTING OF ILLUSTRATIONS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my speech of yesterday, in regard to the chemical schedule, printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the matter of illustrations, under the law, has to go to the Joint Committee on Printing, and the House can not control it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with proceedings under the calendar of to-day until the bill H. R. 20182, to revise the chemical schedule, is disposed of. I believe it requires a motion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not make a point of order on that motion. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the previous question having been ordered, the amendments will have to be voted upon first, and then the bill. Unless a separate vote is demanded on some particular amendment, the vote will be taken en bloc.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions, in accordance with the motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moves to recommit the bill with instructions. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill H. R. 20182, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to that committee to report amendments to the bill, striking out of the dutiable list in the bill certain noncompetitive crude materials now on the free list under existing law, and striking out of the bill increases in the tariff rate on certain crude materials carried by the bill and restoring the lower rates on said materials as provided by the existing tariff law, as follows, to wit:

Amend, page 2, line 7, by striking out the following words: "Benzoleic acid, 5 cents per pound."

Amend, page 2, line 13, by striking out the words "phthalic acid, 5 cents per pound."

Amend, page 2, lines 21 and 22, by striking out the words "egg albumen, 6 cents per pound," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "egg albumen, 3 cents per pound."

Amend, page 3, by striking out of lines 3 and 4, the following: "6. Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene, 10 per cent ad valorem."

Amend, page 3, lines 14, 15, and 16, by striking out the words "Argols or crude tartar or wine lees crude or partly refined, containing not more than 90 per cent of potassium bitartrate, 10 per cent ad valorem," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Argols or crude tartar or wine lees crude, 5 per cent ad valorem; partly refined containing not more than 90 per cent of potassium bitartrate, 10 per cent ad valorem."

Amend, by striking out, on page 3, lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and on page 4, down to and including the semicolon in line 2, the following: "Balsams: Copaiba, fir or Canada, Peru, tolu, and all other balsams, which are natural and uncompounded and not suitable for the manufacture of perfumery and cosmetics, if in a crude state, not advanced in value or condition by any process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to the proper packing of the balsams and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, 10 per cent ad valorem," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Balsams: Copaiba, fir or Canada, Peru tolu, and all other balsams."

Amend, page 6, lines 15 to 19, by striking out the following: "23. Coal-tar products known as dead and creosote oil, soluble and sulfonated dead and creosote oil, anthracene and anthracene oil, benzol, naphthol, resorcin, toluol, xylol; all the foregoing not medicinal and not colors or dyes, 5 per cent ad valorem."

Amend by striking out of lines 20 to 25, page 6, and lines 1 to 5, inclusive, page 7, the following:

"24. Coal-tar products known as anilin oil and salts, toluidin, xylidin, cumidin, binitroto-uol, binitrobenzol, benzidin, tolidin, dianisidin, naphthylamin, diphenylamin, benzaldehyde, benzyl chloride, nitrobenzol and nitrotoluol, naphthylaminsulfonacids and their sodium or potassium salts, naphtholsulfonacids and their sodium or potassium salts, amido-naphtholsulfonacids and their sodium or potassium salts, amidosulleylic acid, binitrochlorbenzol, diamidostilbendisulfo-acid, metanilic acid, paranitranilin, dimethylanilin; all the foregoing not medicinal and not colors or dyes, 10 per cent ad valorem."

Amend by striking out of the paragraph in lines 22 to 25, page 7, and lines 1 to 11, page 8, reading as follows: "28. Drugs, such as barks, beans, berries, buds, bulbs, bulbous roots, excrescences, fruits, flowers, dried fibers, dried insects, grains, gums, herbs, leaves, lichens, mosses, nuts, nutgalls, roots, stems, vegetables, seeds (aromatic, not garden seeds), seeds of morbid growth, weeds, and woods used expressly for dyeing or tanning; any of the foregoing which are natural and uncompounded drugs and not edible, and not specially provided for in this act or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, but which are advanced in value or condition by peeling, shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other process or treatment whatever beyond that essential to the proper packing of the drugs and the prevention of decay or deterioration pending manufacture, 10 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That no article containing alcohol shall be classified for duty under this paragraph," the words "peeling, shredding, grinding, chipping, crushing, or any other" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "any."

Amend, page 8, by striking out of line 12 the following: "29. Ergot, 10 cents per pound."

Amend, page 10, by striking out of paragraph 37, with the heading "Gums," from lines 5 to 7, the following:

"Amber, and amberoid unmanufactured, or crude gum, $1 per pound; arabic, one-half of 1 cent per pound; camphor, crude, natural, 3 cents per pound."

And by striking out of lines 9 and 10 the following: "gum copal, one-half of 1 cent per pound; gum resin, 10 per cent ad valorem."

And by striking out of lines 13, 14, and 15 the words "gum Kauri and damar, and lac, crude, seed, button, and stick, 1 cent per pound; lac dye and shell, 1 1/2 cents per pound."

Amend, page 10, line 16, by striking out the word "indigo" where it first appears.

Amend, page 10, line 19, by striking out of line 19, after the heading "Iodine," the following:

"Crude, 10 cents per pound."

Amend, page 10, by striking out of paragraph 41 the following:

"Buchu leaves, 10 cents per pound;" "gentian, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; licorice root, unground, fifteen one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; sarsaparilla root, 1 cent per pound."

Amend, page 11, by striking out in lines 3 to 7 the words "cassia buds, cassia, and cassia vera; cinnamon and cinnamon chips"; "nutmegs; pepper, black or white; capsicum or red pepper, or cayenne pepper; and clove stems, 1 cent per pound; cloves, 2 cents per pound;" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Cassia buds, cassia, and cassia vera; cinnamon and cinnamon chips"; "nutmegs; pepper, black or white; capsicum or red pepper, or cayenne pepper; clove stems and cloves, all the foregoing, when ground, 2 cents per pound."

Amend, page 11, lines 13, 14, and 15, by striking out the following: "42. Lemon juice, lime juice, and sour orange juice, all the foregoing containing not more than 2 per cent of alcohol, 10 per cent ad valorem."

Amend, page 11, line 19, by striking out the following:

"44. Lime, citrate of, 1 cent per pound."

Amend, page 11, lines 23 and 24, by striking out the following:

"Magnesite, calcined, not purified, $1 per ton."

Amend, page 12, line 25, and page 13, line 1, by striking out the following: "coconut oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, and soya-bean oil, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "refined, deodorized coconut oil, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound."

Amend, page 13, lines 1 to 5, by striking out the following:

"Olive oil, rendered unfit for use as food or for any but mechanical or manufacturing purposes, by such means as shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury and under regulations to be prescribed by him, three-eighths of 1 cent per pound."

Amend, page 13, line 8, by striking out the following:

"And peanut oil, 10 cents per gallon."

Amend, page 13, lines 8 and 9, by striking out the following:

"And Chinese-nut oil, 5 cents per gallon."

Amend, page 13, lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, by striking out the following: "Almond oil, sweet, 5 cents per pound; mace oil, 8 cents per pound; sesame or sesamum seed or bean oil, 1 1/2 cents per pound."

Amend, page 13, lines 21 to 25, and page 14, line 1, by striking out the following words: "anise or anise seed; bergamot; camomile; caraway; cassia, cinnamon; cedrat; citronella or lemon grass; jasmine or jasminine; juniper; lavender, and aspic or spike lavender; lemon; limes; neroli or orange flower;" "origanum, red or white; rosemary or anethos; attar of roses, thyme; and valerian;" now carrying in the bill 20 per cent ad valorem.

Amend, page 15, lines 16 and 17, by striking out the following:

"Ambergris; enfeurage grease; musk, crude, in natural pods, and" "civet, crude;" now carrying in the bill 20 per cent ad valorem.

Amend, page 19, lines 5 to 8, by striking out the words "Potash: Bicarbonate of, and carbonate of, refined, one-half of 1 cent per pound; hydrate of, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound; hydrate of, in sticks or rolls, 1 cent per pound;" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Potash: Bicarbonate of, one-half of 1 cent per pound; caustic potash or hydrate of, refined, in sticks or rolls, 1 cent per pound;"

Amend, page 19, lines 10 and 11, in the paragraph headed "Potash," by striking out the words "nitrate of, or saltpeter, crude, $3 per ton; refined, $7 per ton;" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "nitrate of, or saltpeter, refined, $7 per ton;"

Amend, page 20, lines 21 and 22, by striking out the following: "vanilla beans, 50 cents per pound;"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recommit with instructions. The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 182, answered "present" 9, not voting 72, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:
Until further notice:

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLAYPOOL with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts.

Mr. KORBLY with Mr. LAFFERTY.

Mr. WHITACRE with Mr. VREELAND.

Mr. CARTER (for) with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma (against).

Mr. JAMES (for) with Mr. DALZELL (against).

Mr. BRANTLEY (for) with Mr. PAYNE (against).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted "yea" as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I left Washington Saturday morning, paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD], for the purpose of taking part in the patriotic exercises held Sunday afternoon in Chattanooga, Tenn., under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, in commemoration of the birth of George Washington. Upon my arrival in Chattanooga, about 11 o'clock Saturday night, I was handed a telegram from the United Press Association, of New York, a copy of which I send to the desk with the request that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Representatives HAY and FITZGERALD charged you with cowardice on the floor of the House in connection with your statement inserted in the Record under leave to print. Will you please wire us your statement, so we can give your side as well to Sunday morning papers?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, a similar dispatch from the Associated Press was handed to me by its correspondent about the same time. I dictated a hasty reply, a copy of which I send to the desk, with a request that it may also be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of the statements themselves it is difficult for me to make a statement in reply. You say they used the word "cowardice" upon the floor of the House? All I have to say in that connection is that I myself would have reserved such a word to use to a man's face. Mr. HAY and Mr. FITZGERALD remember well my repeated effort on Friday afternoon to make my statements, to which they take offense, upon the floor. It was their own interference with unjustified points of order that prevented me from making my statements to their faces.

I notice, however, that they do not see fit to await my return to make another personal assault upon me. An examination of the RECORD will show that I made no personal attack on Chairman HAY in the first instance, but only on the method of procedure. His reply, on the other hand, was bitter and personal. After the session was over I went to his office and explained to him that there was nothing personal in my remarks, and if he had been a full-rounded man he would have promptly removed the personalities in his remarks before they were published in the RECORD. With the short vision of a small soul he evidently interpreted my call as an effort to get him to change his remarks on account of the damage he thought he might do me politically, when my mission to his office was to make plain to him my own position and explain there was nothing personal intended in my remarks.

Mr. FITZGERALD had no legitimate place in the controversy between Mr. HAY and myself. He has only himself to blame for any discomfort he has experienced. I will see from the RECORD just what HAY has said in my absence, and will take such action as is called for in the premises. I do not know whether it was courage or cowardice that caused them to interfere with me making my statements on the floor of the House. They certainly did not find cowardice in my remarks as printed. In using that word myself I would not have chosen a time when a man was absent, nor would I have chosen the floor of the House to make the charge.

Mr. BLACKMON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] rise?

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would like to know the point of personal privilege which the gentleman makes, and if that takes precedence over business in order on Calendar Wednesday that is regularly on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair looked into that matter and can not believe that the House ever intended, by the establishment of Calendar Wednesday, to take away the right of a Member to rise to a question of personal privilege. The Chair wants to preserve Calendar Wednesday. Matters of privilege could not intervene, but there is a great difference between a privileged question and question of privilege. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] claims that he rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in making this inquiry is this: I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman from Alabama, certainly; but there is on the calendar a matter that is of gravest importance to the whole State of Alabama, and I can bring it up only upon Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not want to be discourteous to the gentleman from Alabama. The Chair has ruled, and the Chair has made up its mind on that question absolutely and resolutely. If the House does not agree with the Chair, it can appeal.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, my provisional reply was too late for publication, and the next day, Sunday, the press of the country published articles amplifying the statement epitomized in the press telegram just read. In practically all of them, without explanation from me, I am represented as accused of cowardice, neglect of duty, and charged with the use of underhand methods in my capacity as a Representative.

Mr. Speaker, in the deepest sense honor is a question of conscience beyond the reach of others, and rests in a man's own hands until he appears before his Maker. But in another sense a man's honor is held partly in the hands of others, determining in large share his good name and his association with his fellows, upon which depend chiefly his usefulness and largely his happiness in this world.

In the first sense honor is the most sacred thing in the universe, and even in the second sense it is held by honorable men above life itself. If I had an enemy—and I am not conscious of having one—I would strike at his life before I would strike at his honor. Before the people of America and before my colleagues of this House my honor and reputation as a Representative and as a man have been grievously assaulted upon the floor of this House, in my absence. I beg that the facts in the case and the questions involved may be determined without delay, and I request unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama requests unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which he sends to the Clerk's desk, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas on page 2263, second column of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 17, one Member of the House referred to a second Member in the following words: "Under the rules of the House the two columns of the RECORD which he inserted may properly be stricken out, but I prefer to leave them there. They will not hurt me in any place and they will serve as an illustration of the type and character of the gentleman who in an underhand and covert manner resorted to this means of reflecting upon his colleagues"; and at the bottom of the same page and at the top of the next page of the RECORD another Member of this House referred to a second Member in the following words: "I want to say now that these remarks inserted in the RECORD in a covert way, in a way to which no man would resort if he had the frankness of spirit which a man should have, are false insinuations without basis or foundation in fact. The gentleman's reference to a Democratic caucus and to the fact that I was unable to get this bill before it is an insinuation which every member of that caucus knows to be untrue. The statement that there was a caucus in the sense of there being any meeting of the majority members of the Committee on Military Affairs to bind them to vote for any provision in this bill is absolutely without any foundation in fact"; and

Whereas it has been freely reported in the press of the country that a Member of the House accused a second Member of the House on the floor of the House of Representatives of cowardice in connection with his conduct as a Representative; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker is hereby directed to appoint a committee of five Members to investigate all matters of controversy or complaint between the Members in question that led to the above statements and accusations and to report their findings to the House, together with such recommendations as they may deem called for in the premises; and said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to sit during the sessions of the House, and that the cost and expenses of said committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Said expenses shall be paid out on the order and audit of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Reserving the right to object to the present consideration of this resolution, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that what he is really asking for an investigation with reference to is a statement in the newspaper which a reading of the RECORD seems to disclose was not itself founded on fact. I shall object, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOBSON. Let me say to the gentleman before he takes his seat, if he listened carefully to the reading of the resolution he would notice that that was only part of the question to be investigated, and the gentleman will realize whether the word "cowardice" has been removed from the RECORD or not, it was used, I am informed, on the floor of the House; and if it is true that it has gone forth over the land that a colleague of mine on the floor of this House has accused me of cowardice, the assault and damage has been done. It is similar to cases in the Army and Navy, when an officer's honor has been assailed he is entitled to a court-martial. But the gentleman will find in addition to that question I cited words that are in the RECORD, one of which is the word "false," and the two together read "false insinuations," referring to statements of mine. I do not see how there could be any greater assault on a man's integrity than to accuse him of being guilty of false insinuations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey objects.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House consider the resolution—

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not a matter of privilege; the motion to consider it is not a matter of privilege.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman from New Jersey withdraw his objection after my explanation? He can clearly see that the honor of a Member is at stake, and that when a Member's honor is at stake no objection ought to be raised.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey withdraws the objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Under the resolution proposed by the gentleman, is it the purpose to make an investigation of the statements made by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Virginia, or in connection with that to investigate the preparation of the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman that a careful reading of the resolution will indicate that its purpose is purely and simply to investigate the questions at issue between Members upon which hinges the honor of a Member.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MANN. I yield the floor.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—
[Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. BERGER. If you say it is too late, I shall most assuredly object. I did not have a chance before.

Mr. Speaker, as I see it, nobody in this country and surely no one in this House will accuse the gentleman from Alabama of cowardice. [Applause.] However, there are 125,000 unemployed in Chicago, according to the report of the employment bureau of the State of Illinois. If the gentleman from Alabama wants this House to spend a sum of money for some investigation, let us investigate the cause of this unemployment in Chicago. The money will be much better spent in that manner. We have no right to spend the people's money to investigate whether the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia did any damage to the personal code of honor of the gentleman from Alabama. And the gentleman from Virginia, by the way, behaved very nicely during the consideration of the Army bill. [Applause.] I say we have no right to spend the people's money to decide the fine points of any military code of honor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The Chair ruled, as I understood it, that the gentleman from Alabama had stated the question of personal privilege. If that is the case, is it not also privileged to have an investigation of those charges as a matter of privilege? Is it not a privileged resolution to investigate a question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that, as a matter of fact, the Chair had not ruled whether it was a question of personal privilege or not. The Chair was never asked to rule on that question.

Mr. MANN. I believe that is correct.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, we had passed beyond the point of objection. When the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] withdrew his objection, the Speaker then passed on to the consideration of the resolution. And I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] that we will spend no money on this. The statement as to money is merely a form. If the gentleman has any other objection, I believe I can remove it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] to withdraw his objection. [Applause.]

Mr. BERGER. As long as it is not a question of money, I withdraw it. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to thank the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, all of the facts in controversy are a matter of record in the House. I therefore feel it my duty to object, and I do object.

Mr. HOBSON. I can state that it has passed beyond the stage of objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. Is it not a parliamentary fact that the privileges of the House are invaded if this presents the question of personal privilege at all, and that therefore, if the gentleman from Alabama raises the question of the privileges of the House, it is in order, provided the Chair rules that it is within the privileges of the House, for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] to introduce the resolution of investigation?

The SPEAKER. It is a very close question as to whether the gentleman from Alabama raises the question of personal privilege at all. But the Chair, in order to give him the benefit of the doubt, rules that he has a question of privilege. Now, having ruled on that, the Chair thinks the resolution is in order. [Applause.]

The question is on the resolution presented by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] had read at the Clerk's desk a dispatch, if I recall correctly, of the United Press, in which it was stated that Mr. HAY and Mr. FITZGERALD had charged the gentleman from Alabama with cowardice. I did not use that expression, and it is the only time I have heard that such a statement was attributed to me. Inasmuch as it was read at the desk, I thought I should make this statement. I have carefully read, however, the remarks made by me on Saturday last, to which reference is now made, and after careful examination of the remarks, I wish to say to the House that if I were to repeat the statements in connection with the episode to which they had reference I should not change a single word I then said. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules. I make that motion for this reason: If it is not referred to the Committee on Rules, I shall vote for that resolution, but I think it would be better to send it to the Committee on Rules and have it put in proper shape. I do not think, as I heard it read, that it is in proper shape at present. I have every sympathy with the gentleman's desire to sift this matter, and my motion is made in absolute friendliness and not in hostility. However, I think it ought to go to the Committee on Rules for preliminary consideration, with instructions to report within a week. I withdraw my motion to refer it to the Committee on Rules and move to refer it to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report within a week.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend in order to let the Chair again state the question? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] moves to refer the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] to the Committee on Rules with instructions to that committee to report within a week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the original resolution may again be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be again reported.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, before the resolution is read, let me ask the gentlemen to listen very attentively. I think it is simplicity itself.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas on page 2263, second column, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 17, one Member of the House referred to a second Member in the following words: "Under the rules of the House the two columns of the RECORD which he inserted may properly be stricken out, but I prefer to leave them there—"

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, that is not part of the resolution. That is simply part of the "Whereas." I ask that the Clerk read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Therefore be it resolved, That the Speaker is hereby directed to appoint a committee of five members to investigate all matters of controversy or complaint between the Members in question that led to the above statements and accusations and to report their findings to the House, together with such recommendations as they may deem called for in the premises, and said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to sit during the sessions of the House, and that the cost and expenses of said committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Said expenses shall be paid out on the order and audit of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] that so far as I can see—

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, has the resolution been read in full?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks whether the resolution has been read in full. Is that the question?

Mr. CANNON. That is the question.

Mr. HOBSON. The "Whereas" is not there.

Mr. CANNON. I am under the impression, if this is the second reading, that the reading omits a part of the "Whereas," which is necessary to be read in order to make the resolution intelligible.

Mr. HOBSON. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the "Whereas." The Clerk did not read the "Whereas" before, because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] asked him not to, so that it is not the Clerk's fault.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas on page 2263, second column, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 17, one Member of the House referred to a second Member in the following words: "Under the rules of the House the two columns of the RECORD which he inserted may properly be stricken out, but I prefer to leave them there. They will not hurt me in any place, and they will serve as an illustration of the type and character of the gentleman who, in an underhand and covert manner, resorted to this means of reflecting upon his colleagues;" and at the bottom of the same page and at the top of the next page of the RECORD another Member of this House referred to a second Member in the following words: "I want to say now that these remarks inserted in the RECORD in a covert way, in a way to which no man would resort if he had the frankness of spirit which a man should have, are false insinuations without basis or foundation in fact." * * * The gentleman's reference to a Democratic caucus and to the fact that I was unable to get this bill before it is an insinuation which every member of that caucus knows it to be untrue. * * * The statement that there was a caucus in the sense of there being any meeting of the majority members of the Committee on Military Affairs to bind them to vote for any provision in this bill is absolutely without any foundation in fact"; and

Whereas it has been freely reported in the press of the country that a Member of the House accused a second Member of the House on the floor of the House of Representatives of cowardice in connection with his conduct as a Representative: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker is hereby directed to appoint a committee of five Members to investigate all matters of controversy or complaint between the Members in question that led to the above statements and accusations, and to report their findings to the House, together with such recommendations as they may deem called for in the premises, and said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to sit during the sessions of the House, and that the cost and expenses of said committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Said expenses shall be paid out on the order and audit of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] moves that this resolution, presented by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]—

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, before that is put—

The SPEAKER (continuing). Be referred to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report within a week.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the gentleman might withdraw it when I explain to him just what it is. It is not an accusation of anyone. I had hoped not to make any. I did not intend to make any in the first instance, but we are at the point now where, as in the military service, for instance, an officer finds himself in a position where his own character and honesty of purpose are impeached. I am simply asking for a court-martial, as it were, to vindicate my honor. I do not make any charges. I do not propose to bring any, and I have not brought any; but I claim the right to an opportunity simply to vindicate my honor.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. This being a debatable question, am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. If the gentleman demands the floor, he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I would be glad to yield the floor to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. PALMER. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] had the floor, and I was proposing to ask him a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman did not have the floor under the rules.

Mr. PALMER. He had it by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], having made the motion, is entitled to one hour, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] got the floor, as the Chair supposes, with the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have only a very few words to say about that resolution. As it now stands there are two questions involved. As to one of the questions, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] is perfectly right in asking for an investigation. As to the other one, I do not think that he is right. I think he has every right to call for an investigation as to whether he did or did not act in a covert, cowardly, or improper manner, as charged. But his resolution as drawn goes a great deal further than that. It practically calls for an investigation of the whole question as to the methods employed by the Committee on Military Affairs in preparing the Army appropriation bill. That investigation, I submit, Mr. Speaker, would involve a waste of time, would cause much unnecessary bad feeling, and would set a very bad precedent.

If we are going into the question as to how committees proceed in order to prepare bills which they in all sincerity present as representing their best judgment, our task will be endless. How the Army bill was or was not prepared involves in no way a question of the personal privilege of the gentleman from Alabama. On the other hand, the question of whether or not he was properly assailed for printing certain remarks most certainly involves a question of personal privilege. It is for that reason that I have moved to refer this resolution to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report promptly, in order that it may be put in proper shape.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will again get the copy and look at it carefully, he will see that it merely brings in the questions to which he refers in order to determine a question of veracity. It does not cover the methods of any committee, and is not intended to; but it does enable the special committee to find out whether my statements are false or not. That is as far as it is intended to go, and of course the gentleman realizes that that question is more or less a question of fact.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to dispute this question with the gentleman from Alabama. It strikes me one way, it strikes him another; but I really think that the floor of the House is not as good a place as the Committee on Rules to take up in all coolness this question of dissociating an investigation of the Committee on Military Affairs from an investigation of charges made against the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. PALMER. I only want two or three minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania 10 minutes.

Mr. PALMER. That is more than I shall require.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I rose a few minutes ago to ask the gentleman from Alabama about the very matter which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has now called to the attention of the House. I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], not because I believe it improper to have an investigation of the charges against the honor of a Member of the House, but because I am convinced, from a reading of the resolution, that it covers a vast multitude of subjects which we ought not to go into in an investigation of this sort. I listened carefully to the reading of the resolution and, in fact, took down the exact language of that part of it which describes the investigation which this committee shall undertake. That language is that the committee shall investigate—all matters of controversy or complaint between the Members in question that led to the above statements and accusations.

It is very well to investigate the making of these statements or accusations upon the floor and the effect of them upon the honor of a Member, but to investigate all the matters in controversy between these parties that led to this unfortunate situation would mean that this committee would be engaged in the investigation of the entire questions covered by the proposed reorganization of the Army as outlined in the Army appropriation bill. And while I think the investigation ought to be made, I am strongly of the opinion that some committee of the House should redraft this resolution, so that the efforts of the committee may be confined strictly to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] really desires.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] two minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I think his misgivings about the scope of the resolution are not well founded. The reason why it was drafted in the way it was is that it may require the sending for certain papers. It may require the summoning of certain individuals. I do not think the gentleman's fears would be realized. I have no intention to open up what was not intended in the drawing of the resolution.

Mr. PALMER. I believe that, but, unfortunately, the language of the resolution does it. Why not let it go to a committee, where it can be redrafted, so that the purpose of the gentleman from Alabama may be properly expressed in the resolution and carried out in the investigation which follows?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that this resolution presented to the House is not a matter of privilege at all, for the reason that it embraces nonprivileged matter together with privileged matter, and that the nonprivileged matter destroys the privileged character of the entire resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is too late to raise that question.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Massachusetts has moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the question of order ought to be first decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HARDWICK. The resolution, as I understand it—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order—

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Georgia comes too late.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order at the beginning of these remarks, and I insist on it, and I want to be heard on it now.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the point of order now made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] comes too late, the resolution having been discussed for a very considerable time, and a motion to refer it to the Committee on Rules having been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion to refer it without the point of order having been raised—

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I raised the point of order while standing over there.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I tried to raise the point of order when the objection made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] was withdrawn. The Speaker did not rule upon it then. I did not intend to waive it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia comes too late. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the course of the debate on the Army appropriation bill the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] made what might be termed charges against the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], in charge of the bill, involving the procedure of the construction of the Army appropriation bill, and particularly of its legislative features. There had been previously granted in the House to Members speaking on the bill the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] offered a motion on the floor, which was declared out of order by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House. Thereupon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], claiming, I suppose, authority under leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, which was granted by the House, after he had been denied by the Chair the right to speak on the question against a point of order, inserted at that place in the RECORD remarks which reflected upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. Those facts need no investigation. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], in my opinion—and I have the same opinion now that I would have after any investigation of the subject, because I have possession of all of the facts, as has every other Member—in inserting under leave to print remarks in the RECORD which reflected upon fellow Members of the House went too far; and when I read the remarks I thought they should be expunged from the RECORD.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], referring later to those remarks, spoke of them as having been inserted covertly. There is no controversy about those facts. There can be no controversy about the facts. Those facts are all a part of the record of the proceedings of the House. They require no investigation, unless the gentleman desires to have investigated the question of whether the House ought to strike his remarks from the RECORD. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But in the gentleman's resolution, however, there is carried authority to investigate the manner of making up the Army appropriation bill. I am not willing, unless more serious charges, with more evidence, are presented to the House, to have a special committee appointed to investigate the method of procedure of a regular committee making up a regular bill for the consideration of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If there are facts which ought to be disclosed to the House, those facts can be offered on the floor of the House; and if those facts should warrant an investigation of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] or the Committee on Military Affairs, it is time enough then to investigate them.

So far as the political side of the question is concerned, I am always willing to help divisions in the ranks of the enemy and to promote quarrels upon the Democratic side of the House; but when it comes to preserving the integrity of the proceedings of the House itself and upholding and maintaining the rights of the regular committees of the House, I am unwilling to interject petty and partisan politics into the consideration of the subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Before a resolution of that sort is passed by the House I think it ought to be considered by one of the standing committees of the House, to determine whether there is any occasion for an investigation at all; and if so, what the lines of the investigation ought to be. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER].

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I am surprised to hear that the gentleman from Alabama demands a court-martial. Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House belong to a civil, not a military body; they are representatives of the people. This House is not a part of the standing Army, and as Members of the House we have no separate code of honor. [Laughter.] This is not Germany nor Japan nor Italy, and we are not going to fight any duels, not even French duels, where no one gets hurt. I fully agree with everything what the leader of the Republican minority has said. The gentleman from Alabama started the trouble himself by what he inserted in the Record. He was the attacking party. This is not a matter for the House to consider after the regular committee has considered it. We can not make any separate rules for anybody, not even the hero of the Merrimac. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before the gentleman moves the previous question, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not over five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky five minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. And before the gentleman moves the previous question, I would like five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is never a pleasant thing to say anything that touches the personal relationship of Members on the floor. I realize that all the Members here have a feeling of noninterference because of that sense, and yet it seems to me that there is a matter larger and beyond the question of the quarrel of the gentleman from Alabama with the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York.

Whatever the merits of their controversy may be will be disclosed to each man according to his own judgment by the reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Every fact is there contained, and to ask of this House the appointment of a special committee or to send to the Committee on Rules, or any other committee, the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama to determine whether or not he is entitled to the appellation of being a coward seems to me totally to disregard the real functions of the House and to give a magnitude to a personal quarrel out of all proportion to the facts in the case.

I can not see what there is that a committee could investigate. There are no facts in dispute. If we undertake to correct what newspapers may say on misinformation, we have an endless field, but so far as the record stands every statement that is in any sense material appears in that record. To my mind it is simply asking that the Members of this House shall be taken from their proper duties of serving the public in order to determine a matter that is purely personal between these gentlemen.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. If the committee was appointed under this resolution would not all that it could investigate and report upon be as to whether or not the gentleman from Alabama had a right to insert in the Record remarks which were ruled out of order by the Chair when he attempted to speak them at the time on the floor?

Mr. SHERLEY. It seems to me that that would be very largely the scope. This is true, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if it be the purpose of this resolution to investigate matters other than those that appear in the remarks of the three gentlemen named, then there ought to be a proper foundation laid for it by proper allegations and charges; the quarrel of these three gentlemen should not be made the basis for the appointment of a committee to investigate other matters not connected with that quarrel. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, if I have the opportunity, I shall move to lay the whole matter on the table.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take up in any way the discussion of the merits of this case, but I wish to point out again that in substance, beyond controversy, the reputation and honor of a Member of the House have been assailed.

Now, such words as "false" appear in the Record, applied by one Member to another. The word "cowardice" was used on the floor of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman can not and will not doubt my friendship for him. Does he, for one moment, imagine that anybody on this floor would believe that he is a coward? Does he not take this matter too seriously?

Mr. HOBSON. I will answer the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple philosophy, if the gentleman wants me to state it.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I do.

Mr. HOBSON. As I say, I have a very simple philosophy which makes this matter very important to me. I am trying to render the maximum of service in my day and generation. I try to stand on the truth and to follow the path of duty. I am conscious now of having shaped my conduct in connection with this bill according to that philosophy; but a man goes through this world in contact with his fellows, and if they are aware that his honor has been justly called in question and has been impugned, his usefulness is at an end. I must draw a dead line and assert my rights as a man.

A number of years ago the press of the country assailed me on many lines, and I do not say anything against the press in this connection, but I found it was necessary to draw the dead line, and when any article reflected on my character I put it in the hands of my attorneys. Now, then, as between man and man I have not had any unkind feelings for any Member of this House, and I have the highest opinion of them, and I will take legitimate thrusts at the hands of Members of the House without complaining. I realized the exposure to attack of certain positions I occupied the other day in the line of duty, and I stood up and took the fire, but I submit that when one man uses the word "false" to another man, when one man calls another man a coward, it were better that the second man were dead than to have any such character prevail amongst his countrymen. [Applause.] It were better he were dead than to have his character impugned even before those who do not know him. My friend from Pennsylvania, I know he would not believe anything of the kind—

Mr. BUTLER. I would not believe the gentleman was a coward, it would not matter who said it. I do not think the gentleman is a coward; I know he is not, no matter who said it. No one will question his courage; the country approves it.

Mr. HOBSON. When those words are used a man crosses the dead line—

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; he does not.

Mr. HOBSON. I say to him—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I ask for one more minute. I do not apply it in this case, but as an illustration, there can arrive a time when two men can not live in the same world under certain conditions. I do not ask to be justified in that statement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked me a personal question and I am glad to answer him. I hate to put it upon a personal basis and I regret that the dead line has been crossed—

Mr. BUTLER. I can not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. And I think that I am entitled to a court-martial—that if I have done any man here wrong in his character I want to know it, and I will make abject apology. If the gentleman from Virginia has called me a coward on the floor, even though he removed it from the Record, I am entitled to an apology from him. [Applause.] Or else I am entitled to stand at the bar of my colleagues and ask him to prove it and specify the charges. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is a motion to lie on the table now in order?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Not until my time has expired. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. A motion to lie on the table would have been in order and preferential before the motion to refer, but the motion to refer has been before the House and debated, and it is now before the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] when he makes the suggestion that the gentleman from Alabama is taking this matter rather too seriously. I also agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no man upon this floor who really believes the gentleman from Alabama is a coward or that he would make an intentional false statement on this floor or elsewhere about anything.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman from Virginia will say that, this thing is over.

Mr. POU. In the heat of debate—

Mr. HOBSON. I suggest that the gentleman address his remarks to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. POU. No; I have a word I wish to say to the House. In the heat of debate a great many things are said which are not intended to be taken exactly as spoken. If we are to have an investigation every time one gentleman on this floor arises and says some other gentleman has made a statement that is not true we will not do anything but investigate charges of that kind. Now, the gentleman from Alabama can have, I imagine, all the time he desires to make any statement he wishes to make about this matter under the personal-privilege rule of the House, and it would seem to me that having availed himself of that privilege he has all opportunity to justify himself before the country and his colleagues in this Chamber. I would not think my distinguished friend from Alabama would care to pursue the matter further. I venture to repeat that no man in this Chamber, or in this Nation for that matter, believes the gentleman from Alabama to be a coward or that he would ever make a statement he did not believe to be true. But, Mr. Speaker, are we to have an investigation every time one gentleman challenges a statement made by another gentleman? I do not believe the House will establish any such precedent. Therefore, I am opposed to this resolution. I am opposed to its reference to the Committee on Rules; I am opposed to appointing a special committee to investigate charges between Members every time something unpleasant occurs in debate here. We have no right to spend the people's money for any such purpose, and I hope this House will vote down the resolution and the motion to refer to the Committee on Rules. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], because I believe that the resolution as now presented is too wide in its scope. There is one question of fact which ought to be reported to this House so that it will be a part of the record when the Members pass on the ultimate question that will be submitted. That question is, How much of the remarks, wherein the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] referred to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], and which prompted their observations on the succeeding day, were, as a matter of fact, delivered upon the floor of this House? That raises a question that should be settled by this House, and that is, Mr. Speaker, the extent to which any Member of this body, in availing himself of the privilege of inserting remarks in the RECORD, can refer to other Members, and especially in a manner that might reflect upon them in any position taken before this House. I for one would like to have a report on that question submitted to this body. I have decided views as to the extent the privilege should go of inserting in the RECORD remarks that should only be made in the presence of those to whom they are directed and when they can hear them and have an opportunity to reply.

I agree with the distinguished leader of the minority that this is a matter which lifts itself above the confines of partisanship, and that it should be so treated. I hope that when we come to its ultimate decision we will decide it in such a way that it will be a precedent for the future conduct of debate, and the use, or, rather, the abuse, of the privilege of inserting or extending remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that on Saturday last, under the stress and strain of the action of the gentleman from Alabama, which I thought was uncalled for, to say the least of it, on his part, I did use the word "cowardly" as applied to him, on the floor of the House. But I want to say further that I never believed that the gentleman was a coward. [Applause.] And to prove that, I did not permit that word to go in the RECORD. If I had thought that he was a coward, I would have permitted the word to stay in the RECORD. I want to say further, that while I must continue to assert that what the gentleman said about certain things in the preparation of the Army bill were not true, yet I do not believe for a moment that the gentleman intentionally stated what he believed to be untrue. [Applause.] I believe that the gentleman, when he made such a statement, was misled, and that when he stated it he himself believed it to be true. [Applause.]

And that is all I care to say. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] yield to me two minutes?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the statement of the gentleman from Virginia is manly, and it is generous, and it shows the same high type of character that I have always believed him to possess. [Applause.] I will make a request for unanimous consent, following my request to withdraw my resolution, as far as it pertains to the gentleman from Virginia, and ask that my remarks introduced in the RECORD, about which he took exception, and which pertain to him personally, and which I introduced solely because I felt that remarks of his had been personal and had not been removed from the RECORD of the previous day, be removed from the RECORD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] withdraws his resolution.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is still the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. Speaker, the reason why I injected myself into this situation at all was not with any idea of stirring up strife. Every Member who has served in the House for a long time knows that on several occasions when there has been unparliamentary language on the floor of this House I have taken it up and have insisted on the House taking some action in order to put a stop to that kind of a thing. In the last 10 years, since I have been here, I have seen this House grow from bad to worse in the matter of unparliamentary language. If when men ask for their day in court it is not accorded to them, then they will take their day out of court; and it was that precisely, both to stop that sort of thing and—

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKMON. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. Nothing. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Under the rules of the House, I was aware that a motion might be withdrawn until a secondary motion had been made. Does the Chair rule that there is no question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that when Capt. HOBSON withdrew his resolution, which he had a perfect right to do, there was not anything left before the House to refer, and therefore that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts falls to the ground. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Calendar Wednesday, the call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], a member of the committee.

PERMANENT MANEUVERING GROUNDS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to call up House joint resolution No. 178.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 178) creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of a permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, and to likewise report as to certain lands in and around the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that should be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the House automatically goes into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SULZER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 178) creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of a permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, and to likewise report as to certain lands in and around the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission consisting of five officers of the Army of the United States to make a full and complete investigation and consider carefully whether or not it is advisable to make, establish, and maintain a maneuvering ground and camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for United States troops at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama. Said commission shall fully consider the advantages and disadvantages of the lands contiguous to or near the city of Anniston, Ala., for the purpose herein stated, and report fully as to probable number of acres of land necessary to purchase and the probable cost of the same, and as to all facts and conditions material to be considered in the premises. The report shall be filed in the War Department by March 1, 1912, and communicated to Congress as soon as practicable by the President.

Sec. 2. That said board or commission shall also examine carefully all lands in and around the city of Anniston, Ala., that may be proposed to be donated to the United States for the establishment and maintenance thereon of a maneuvering encampment and rifle and artillery ranges for the assembling of troops from the group of States composed of Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina and report on the advisability of establishing such camps, rifle and artillery ranges on such lands proposed to be donated, and whether the lands proposed to be donated are suited and desirable for such purposes, and how much land would be properly required for said purposes, and whether the lands proposed to be donated are sufficient in quantity for the purpose proposed and conveniently located for use by troops from said States, and the facilities for transportation of troops and supplies to and from said lands, and such other facts as may be material to be considered in the premises.

Sec. 3. That the said board or commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be paid actual necessary expenses.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, this resolution creates a commission to investigate and report upon the advisability of the establishment of permanent maneuvering grounds and a camp of inspection, rifle, and artillery range, for the troops of the United States at or near Anniston Ala. This resolution comes to the House with a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs. It does not require the expenditure of a single dollar out of the Treasury that has not already been appropriated, or will be appropriated, in accordance with law. It is similar to the resolution that passed Congress and, I believe, was approved on the 24th day of February, 1911, to investigate the advisability of establishing a similar camp at Tullahoma, Tenn.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some gentlemen desire to address the committee on this resolution, I will move that the committee rise and make a favorable report.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments?

Mr. DENT. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to move an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. TILSON. I do not understand that the debate has closed, otherwise I would be glad to move an amendment.

Mr. DENT. Can I get an agreement as to general debate?

Mr. MANN. I do not think general debate will last long, but I can not make any agreement about it.

Mr. DENT. I did not understand what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. MANN. I was just waiting to see how the gentleman would proceed.

Mr. DENT. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise and report the resolution favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DENT. And report the bill favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. DENT. Then I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SULZER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House joint resolution 178 and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Has any gentleman any motion to make or any request to prefer?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move—

Mr. MANN. I move that the House do now adjourn, as there is no business before the House.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. DENT. I move that the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House joint resolution 178, and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman submits a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman bases his suggestion on the fact that the House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman is correct about that. But the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that when the House resolve itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of this joint resolution general debate be limited to 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I want to amend that by saying, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the other half by me.

The SPEAKER. One half to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have no intention of consuming much time, but in view of the fact that the gentleman has endeavored to take advantage of this side of the House in this way, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman objecting?

Mr. MANN. I do object.

Mr. DENT. May I ask the gentleman how much time he wants?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The House resolves itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Illinois objects, I move that general debate close in 30 minutes, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and one-half by myself.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, pending that—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion. The gentleman from Alabama moves that pending the House resolving itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union general debate be limited to 30 minutes.

The question being taken on the motion, the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, pending that I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how much time he desires?

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. Those in favor of limiting general debate to 30 minutes will answer aye, those opposed no, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 166, nays 86, answered "present" 10, not voting 131, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the House, under the rule, will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House joint resolution 178, with Mr. SULZER in the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this resolution provides for the appointment of a commission consisting of five officers of the Army to make a full and complete investigation, to consider and report whether it is feasible to establish and maintain maneuver grounds and a camp of inspection near the city of Anniston, Ala.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I believe, under the motion that was voted upon by the House, I have control of one half of the time and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that that motion was not put in the House, and hence it is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. DENT. I thought that was a part of the motion that was voted upon.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the House went into Committee of the Whole House on the condition that debate should be limited to 30 minutes, and that one half should be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and that was voted upon and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary clerk informs the Chair that the House ordered that general debate be limited to 30 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to do what I understood gentlemen on the other side to attempt to do, namely, take advantage in general debate. I therefore yield 15 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], and I hope that he will occupy it now.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the resolution provides for the inspection by a board of Army officers of a maneuver ground in Alabama. It is my intention at the proper time to move an amendment changing the time at which this commission shall report. The resolution at present provides that it shall report on March 1, and I shall move to amend it my making it May 1.

As to the merits of the proposition, there can be no question as to the fact that the United States is in need of maneuver grounds for the training of troops. In the northern part of the State of New York, at Pine Plains, we have already a great reservation, where troops can be maneuvered in large bodies. There is such a reservation in Texas, near San Antonio. There are reservations in the West, one particularly that I recall, in Kansas.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How large an area is required for maneuver grounds?

Mr. TILSON. For proper maneuvers, the way they are conducted now, less than 20,000 acres would be inadequate. I do not mean that it would be necessary for the Government to own the entire 20,000 acres. It will need to own a much smaller tract for camp sites, target ranges, and the like, but it should have permission to operate over at least 20,000 acres, if any considerable number of troops are employed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I suppose land would be selected that would not be particularly valuable for agricultural purposes, would it not?

Mr. TILSON. Usually so.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But the price of it would be probably about the price of agricultural land, would it not?

Mr. TILSON. As to whether it was a desirable piece of land for agricultural purposes or maneuver purposes, and as to whether the price was satisfactory, are questions that would be determined after an investigation by a board of officers.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the gentleman know about the price of land in the vicinity where it is proposed to buy this land?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know, but it is the purpose of this resolution that a competent board shall find out. The Member on the floor of the House who represents the district in which the land is situated can undoubtedly give the gentleman more detailed information on the subject than I can give.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The report indicates that the owners of about 4,000 acres of this land are prepared to donate that much land to the Government.

Mr. TILSON. That is the understanding.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman state what motive these men have in donating this land?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will have to excuse me from attempting to state the motives of men whom I never met and of whom I have no knowledge.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman state whether the men who are willing to donate the 4,000 acres are the owners of the other sixteen thousand or twenty-five thousand acres of land which it is proposed to sell to the Government.

Mr. TILSON. There is no such proposition, Mr. Chairman. It is not proposed to sell sixteen thousand or twenty thousand or any number of acres to the Government. Neither is it necessary for maneuvers, as I have just stated—

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did not the gentleman say that 20,000 acres was necessary for a complete maneuver ground down there?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; permission to maneuver over at least 20,000 acres would be necessary, but it is not necessary to own that amount. As a matter of fact, the Army has maneuvered in all parts of the country without owning such a large tract of land, simply leasing or otherwise securing permission to operate over a large area.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. This report does not indicate what it would cost to lease land, but it does state what it would cost to buy land surrounding the 4,000 acres that are proposed to be donated.

Mr. TILSON. The object of this resolution is not to purchase land or to lease it, but to get information as to whether this would be a desirable place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What I am trying to get at is the motive of the gentlemen who are willing to give these 4,000 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. TILSON. Three minutes.

Mr. DENT. I yield the gentleman that much time.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I am trying to find out the motive of these men who are willing to donate 4,000 acres when 20,000 acres are necessary.

Mr. TILSON. I hope the gentleman will pardon me if I decline to attempt to state the motives of men whom I have never met and concerning whom I know nothing.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. How are these men going to get even on this transaction—the men who are going to give the 4,000 acres?

Mr. TILSON. Well, I shall leave it to them.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Beware of the Greeks.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Where lands are leased for maneuvering purposes, how long is the term, ordinarily, of the lease?

Mr. TILSON. Well, the term ordinarily is a very short term, simply covering the time of the maneuvers; and I wish to state to the gentleman—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I would suggest, then, if the militia or Army are maneuvering over grounds it would be impossible to produce crops of any kind.

Mr. TILSON. Not at all; they maneuver right over—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Over the crops?

Mr. TILSON. They do not necessarily go through the highly cultivated fields, such as orchards and gardens, but certainly over cultivated land.

Mr. GOOD. They go right down the corn rows.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe it would be advisable to establish a maneuvering ground anywhere and depend upon the leasing of land for the purpose of maneuvering?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, it has worked very well.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Is it not true that where the Government has owned land and they want to maneuver over adjoining property that they have succeeded at times in leasing some additional land; and I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it advisable to establish a maneuvering ground on less land than will be required at any time?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly I do. I think it is not only desirable but absolutely necessary. We can not all go to Kansas and maneuver over the large reservations there.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. We might.

Mr. TILSON. Certainly we might, but it would be very expensive transporting troops. It would cost a large amount of money, and it is much better to have maneuvering grounds in some centrally located place—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Where the stimulating climate of Kansas may exert its quickening influence on maneuvers.

Mr. TILSON. But Kansas is too far away—

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. It is right in the center of the United States.

Mr. TILSON. Certainly it is, but the center is a long way off from the sides of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Exactly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The sides of the country are, then, to blame.

Mr. DENT. I will ask the gentlemen on the other side to use some of their time.

Mr. MANN. Well, I hope the gentleman will consume his time. I yielded to the gentleman, and I hope he will consume it, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is apparent to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman in charge of this bill is entitled to close debate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama does not quite understand the circumstances. I have the entire time of general debate, and I yielded to the gentleman from Alabama one-half of that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, as I understand, the gentleman from Illinois has entire control of the time because he was recognized by the Chairman instead of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I was entitled to recognition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama on the previous consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole had used his time and yielded the floor. He did not reserve his time, and he was not entitled to recognition when we went back into committee, although I generously yielded to him one-half of the time, the limited time which he himself had limited.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, it seems to me—

Mr. MANN. Now, I think it is rather imposing upon generosity to make the request which the gentleman now makes.

Mr. DENT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BROUSSARD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CURTIS, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 11.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the message of the President of the United States transmitting the report of the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission, together with the hearings held before the commission, of which 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and that there be printed as a Senate document, in one pamphlet, 25,000 copies of the message and report only, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 12,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,500 copies for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

PERMANENT MANEUVERING GROUNDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON]. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I rather think that some gentlemen are attempting to make a great deal out of what is not so important as they would have us believe. Here is a certain proposition. The War Department says that they need maneuvering ground in that group of States composed of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky. We are not proposing to sell any land to the Government, but I offer a proposition merely to have the proposition investigated in order to see if it is suitable for the purposes for which we are offering it. Now, that is all there is to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was on the very point that the gentleman raised. I tried to get the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] to explain. This does not contemplate a deed in fee simple to the United States for the land to be used?

Mr. BLACKMON. It means this, that after this inspection, if it is feasible, then the Government would determine whether or not they wanted these lands. They might never want them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. Now, that question being answered, I want to say to the gentleman that I think it is entirely commendable to have a maneuvering establishment as proposed if the War Department thinks it advisable, but I would like to ask whether it is contemplated by this bill to expend any money beyond the mere traveling expenses of the commission to be appointed?

Mr. BLACKMON. Not one dollar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Army officers who shall constitute this commission will receive their pay in the regular way, and the only extra expense to them would be traveling expenses, and that is what the bill proposes to carry?

Mr. BLACKMON. That is all, absolutely.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Suppose this commission should ascertain that territory in your locality is good territory for maneuvering ground. Would the land then be sold to the Government?

Mr. BLACKMON. If the Government should ask to buy it, and they could agree with the owners, I suppose they would.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The purpose, then, is eventually to sell the land to the Government if it is found satisfactory?

Mr. BLACKMON. If the Government wants it and it is suitable.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that the commission appointed by the War Department has already made a report upon a site in the State of Tennessee?

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KAHN. Now, all that you are asking under this resolution is to allow the War Department also to examine your site, with a view of having the Government take it over if it finds it is advantageous to do so?

Mr. BLACKMON. Absolutely; that is all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to that extent it is only a tentative proposition?

Mr. BLACKMON. That is all.

Mr. MADDEN. The purpose of introducing this resolution is to give the Government an opportunity first to decide between the maneuvering ground in Tennessee and the maneuvering ground in Alabama?

Mr. BLACKMON. That is it.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will, but I have only a moment.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Only one question.

Mr. BLACKMON. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. How many propositions are there pending now relative to these maneuvering grounds?

Mr. BLACKMON. Two—one in Tennessee and one in Alabama.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. How many more are likely to be brought in here?

Mr. BLACKMON. I will have to ask the gentleman to draw on his own fertile imagination. I can not answer that question for him.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I simply want to say this, that if it is to be a general proposition, why not create a committee that will have the power to act when they think it is necessary?

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. YOUNG] objected to my calling this resolution up when it was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I hope he will not interrupt me again, because I have only a few moments. I want to say that we are in the geographical center of this group of States that the War Department has designated as a certain group of States in which they want a maneuvering camp. We have three railroads. We are within an 11 or 12 hours' run of Pensacola and Jacksonville, Fla.; Mobile, Ala.; New Orleans; Norfolk; and Savannah, Ga. All this territory would be likely to contribute to the mobilization of troops, and it would cost very little to mobilize the troops at this particular point. If it were determined to mobilize the troops there, to be sent out for any purpose, it would be very inexpensive in the matter of railroad transportation, which the War Department regard as important.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. BLACKMON. I would like three minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama three minutes. He has been interrupted so much.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Illinois for the additional time he has given me.

Now, I want to say that I do not want to bore this committee with this proposition, but it is undoubtedly true that the War Department, by a regularly constituted committee, should have the right to select the best proposition within this group of States.

Now, if my proposition is not the best, I shall undoubtedly support the recommendations of the War Department. If it be Tennessee, Kentucky, or wherever else it may be, I will follow the recommendations of this board and of the War Department.

Now, that is what I am asking—an official board to examine these lands and determine whether or not my proposition is feasible. If it is not, then I assume that this board or commission will do its duty. If it is not suitable, I assume they will say so. I hope very much that this resolution will pass.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had two minutes, and I want to yield it back to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] yields back to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining? The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if this were a proposition to appoint a commission of the Army to investigate, first, as to the necessity of maneuvering grounds, and second, as to the location of those grounds, it perhaps might be unobjectionable. But this proposition is not to investigate the necessity of maneuvering grounds at all, nor is it to investigate the desirability of the best place for maneuvering grounds, but merely to get an opinion from the War Department, which has already investigated this place, as to these grounds being located at Anniston, there already being a proposition to locate the grounds elsewhere, under a resolution passed by Congress for another specific place, and no request and no proposition to have the Army say what is the best place in which to locate the maneuvering grounds, if they are to be established.

I do not know whether the property around Anniston is a good location for maneuvering grounds, but under some authority the War Department has already made an investigation of those grounds, and a report has been made by Stephen C. Mills, colonel, Inspector General. In that report, referring to the grounds which it is now proposed to investigate, he says:

The tract of land to which my attention was invited as being suitable for maneuver purposes lies to the north of Anniston, being approximately rectangular in shape, bounded on the north by the town of Jacksonville and the east and west roads through it, on the east by the Choccolocco Mountain Range, on the south by the Choccolocco and Blue Mountains, and on the west by the Rome and Meridian branch of the Southern Railway. It is indicated by red shading on a map appended, marked "B," which map shows in 50-foot contours the elevation of the country. This tract is approximately 9 miles from south to north and from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles from east to west. The boundaries to the north, east, and west are, of course, purely arbitrary.

That takes in a considerable tract of ground. But the milk in the cocoanut, the colored gentleman in the woodpile, comes in another part of his report, where he says:

The gentlemen who are desirous of attracting the attention of the War Department to this situation are prepared to donate to the Government 4,000 acres of land.

That reads very nicely up to that point. How are they going to pay for the 4,000 acres of land? Why do they propose to donate it, as some gentleman asked on the floor a few moments ago? The answer is not difficult. Proceeding to speak further in reference to these gentlemen, the inspector says:

And they say that lands up to, say, 25,000 to 30,000 acres can be purchased at an average price of $15 per acre. They, or various land companies which they represent, own a good deal of the land and have options on a considerable portion not owned by them.

We can understand now why they propose to donate 4,000 acres of land—in order to sell 25,000 or 30,000 acres which they own or upon which they have option.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. MANN. I did not cut off debate, and I yielded half my time to that side, and I want to occupy my remaining time.

Mr. BLACKMON. I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. MANN. When gentlemen insist on limiting debate—and the gentleman voted for it—I do not propose now to yield my remaining time.

Mr. BLACKMON. I voted for it, because I did not understand the gentleman wanted more time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, everybody understood that I wanted time. I wanted time to explain this bill. No wonder they wanted to cut off debate. If I had had an hour's time on this bill, I do not believe 40 gentlemen in the House would have voted for it.

They want to sell 25,000 or 30,000 acres of land to the Government. Of course, they can donate 4,000 acres when they can fix their price on the balance of it. The military authorities are never very particular about the price they pay for a thing which they say they want or must have. If Congress passes a resolution directing them to report upon the desirability of these grounds for maneuver purposes—they have already expressed an opinion favorable to the proposition—the military authorities will take it as a direction from Congress to report favorably upon the proposition, and leave it to us to judge of the price of the land; and when the undertaking is started the price of the land becomes of small moment. Why, the Inspector General, who has made this report, has already reported an indorsement from The Adjutant General's Office. He directs the officer designated to examine into the suitability of the land in question for permanent maneuver grounds. The officer has already examined into the suitability of these lands for maneuver purposes, and he says:

In my opinion, the tract of land indicated is excellently adapted for maneuver purposes.

Why do they want a resolution passed now? The military authorities have already examined the ground. They have already been directed to report whether the ground is suitable for maneuver purposes. They have already reported that the ground is suitable for maneuver purposes, and this proposition—to have the form of a commission—is simply to take one step further toward involving the Government in the purchase of 25,000 or 30,000 acres of land where some gentlemen offer to encourage us by giving 4,000 acres. Does anybody suppose that these distinguished gentlemen in Alabama who are offering this land, and buying these options upon the land, are doing it for their health?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know the gentleman wants to be perfectly fair about this. Will the gentleman read the following sentence, in which it is said that the country to the north and west lends itself perfectly to maneuver purposes?

Mr. MANN. I could not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman read what follows?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman again that I did not limit the debate on this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I simply asked the gentleman to read right along instead of stopping where he did.

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to read it for the satisfaction of the gentleman if he will tell me where he wants me to read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The latter part.

Mr. MANN. On what page?

Mr. RICHARDSON. On page 4 of the report.

Mr. MANN. I will read it again. Here was a question which had been answered by the inspector, that the land in question is excellently adapted to maneuver purposes. Now, the gentleman wants me to read this:

The question as to the size of the maneuvers possible is entirely one of the amount of money obtainable for the purchase of lands, since the country to the north and west of this tract lends itself perfectly to maneuver purposes, and lands could be obtained at a comparatively low price per acre of sufficient extent for the maneuvering of any force we are likely to be able to concentrate.

Is that in addition to the 30,000 acres of land already provided in the report?

Is it to be not 30,000 but 100,000 acres of land? The reading of that was superfluous. That has nothing to do with it. Of course, we determine in the end whether we buy the ground at all. This is an offer of these gentlemen, having bought options on this ground, to unload it on the Government at a higher price than the land is worth in the market. They bought the options because they propose to make a profit on it. They offer to give 4,000 acres of land to the Government because they propose to more than recoup themselves out of selling the ground upon which they have purchased options, or that is controlled by land companies which they represent.

Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to enter upon these land schemes. If the Government of the United States needs maneuver grounds for the national militia in these States, appoint a commission to investigate the subject and see where the grounds ought to be located, and not in response to the request of gentlemen who hold options on the land which they wish to sell to the Government, appoint a commission to make a report already made in order to start the wheels in motion that will take out of the Treasury of the United States higher value for land which gentlemen own on options.

We have always refused to do this; we ought not to begin, and if you gentlemen on that side of the House want to plunge into this sort of an undertaking, do it if you will, but you will find it most expensive to the Treasury and most damaging to the people who engage in this option land business. [Applause].

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission consisting of five officers of the Army of the United States to make a full and complete investigation and consider carefully whether or not it is advisable to make, establish, and maintain a maneuvering ground and camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for United States troops at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama. Said commission shall fully consider the advantages and disadvantages of the lands contiguous to or near the city of Anniston, Ala., for the purpose herein stated, and report fully as to probable number of acres of land necessary to purchase and the probable cost of the same, and as to all facts and conditions material to be considered in the premises. The report shall be filed in the War Department by March 1, 1912, and communicated to Congress as soon as practicable by the President.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the first section of the resolution by striking out, from line 10, page 2, the word "March" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "May."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is acceptable to this side of the House.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the word "March" and insert in lieu thereof the word "May."

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Connecticut what is the purpose of his amendment?

Mr. TILSON. To give a longer time in which to make the report. As the resolution now reads, it requires a report to be filed on or before March 1, 1912.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman will agree with me that if the resolution passed on February 29 they could make the report by March 1.

Mr. TILSON. They ought not to.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that they have already reported on it. It is a mere matter of form; it may take longer than this to get the bill through the Senate—I hope so.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the gentleman from Illinois sees such terrors in this bill. Certainly he is able to see more than the members of the Military Committee were able to see in it. This is not the only proposition that has been made for inspection of grounds for maneuver purposes. As has been already stated, one in Tennessee has been investigated. We had a hearing this morning before the committee, and a gentleman from central Tennessee proposed something of a similar nature, with 4,000 acres or thereabouts.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. DENT. Is it not a fact that a resolution exactly similar to this, except as to location, was passed by Congress in February, 1911, and approved by the President?

Mr. TILSON. It was, and nothing was said about it; no danger was seen in it. In fact, Mr. Chairman, there is no necessary connection between the examination of a parcel of land to see whether it is fit for maneuver grounds, and whether it is desirable for the Government to purchase it, and the actual purchase of the land at an exorbitant figure. As a matter of fact, 4,000 acres of land would be ample for camp purposes, target ranges, and for all purposes for which it would be necessary to own the land.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKMON. Is it not a fact that the Government owns two sections of land contiguous to these 4,000 acres?

Mr. TILSON. Whether it does or not, it might prove to be a most desirable maneuver ground if these people would donate to the Government the 4,000 acres of land for use as a permanent camp site and for target ranges. We all know that time and time again the Government has held maneuvers entirely on leased land leased at a modest figure, and in this case if it acquire sufficient ground for camp sites and target ranges, the land necessary for maneuvers outside of the camp ground and target ranges could be easily rented for occasional use at a nominal figure.

In fact, it has been done in all parts of the country. There is comparatively little damage, as I know from actual experience. We went through the eastern part of Massachusetts, a closely inhabited country, with intensive farming of various kinds, especially cranberry beds, and yet the Government report showed, after we had been through that country from New Bedford north to Boston, that the damage was inconsequential.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, what I particularly object to here is that it should be assumed that there is some scheme into which this committee has entered to force the Government into a policy of buying lands at an exorbitant figure for the benefit of some land companies or some other gentlemen in the State of Alabama. The Committee on Military Affairs has been desirous that we shall have the very best ground in the country at the most reasonable figure for purposes of training troops. We are willing and thought it a desirable thing that we should pay the traveling expenses of a small board of officers—and that is all it would cost—to go to Alabama to examine this land and report as to whether or not it is suitable for that purpose, whether the Government should accept the 4,000 acres, and also whether it would be desirable to purchase any more. That is all there is to it, and that is as far as this resolution goes. The Government is not committed to anything by this resolution, nor is it anticipated that it will be in the future, unless it be something that the War Department itself, representing the Government, believes to be beneficial for the national defense, and such a recommendation would have to be approved by Congress. We have tried in this resolution to give our Government the benefit of information secured, after a careful examination, by a board of officers, with no expense whatever except their traveling expenses to Alabama, as to a proposition believed to be favorable to the United States and useful in preparation for the national defense. If this should prove to be true, then I say that this committee would be derelict in its duty if it did not report such a resolution and give the Government an opportunity to take advantage of such a benefit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama a moment ago, I believe, stated that the Government owned two sections of land which might at some place come in connection with these maneuver grounds. I suppose if the Government owns two sections of land down there it is owned under some provision of law susceptible of being entered by—

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENT. I understood that the Chair was putting the question as to whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut should be adopted by the committee. I do not think it has been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been voted upon.

Mr. DENT. I understood the Chair to submit the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been voted upon. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the Government owns these two sections of land down there adjoining this land, upon which the other gentlemen had the option, why has not somebody entered that land; why has not somebody taken it; why does not somebody homestead it and get possession of it at a dollar and a quarter an acre? I suppose it is because it is not worth a dollar and a quarter an acre, although right alongside of ground for which we are expected to pay $15 an acre in order to recoup the gentlemen who own the options on it for giving the 4,000 acres to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "five," in line 5, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "three"; and insert after the word "States," line 5, the following:

"And three Members of Congress, one from the Senate, appointed by the Presiding Officer of that body, and two from the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker."

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I am offering that amendment for the purpose of accentuating a situation that I think I have detected in the short stay that I have had in Congress. That is that this House seems to have relied, in the past at least, entirely upon such information as it might be able to secure through the Departments of the Navy or the Army. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that, since Congress is charged with the responsibility of the expenditure of funds, since it is charged with the care of the Public Treasury, that there ought to be somebody who is a Member of this branch of the Government to look into deals of this kind, upon which we are called ultimately to put our approval by the appropriation of funds.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PROUTY. I will.

Mr. HOBSON. Does not the gentleman think that in connection with the final report upon the question of the adoption or purchase that that would be the time for the joint commission?

Mr. PROUTY. Relying upon the statement of the gentleman, as lately withdrawn but formerly in the RECORD, I am inclined to think that it is time to begin this matter early, in order to ascertain the facts, and not look to the departments for information, as the gentleman indicates has been done in another bill.

I am in earnest about this matter. I am frank to say I could pick out two men from this floor who if they would go down there and look over this situation and tell me that this land was worth so and so and could be bought for so and so, knowing they are in the same position before the American people that I am as guardians of the Public Treasury, I would accept their judgment; and you will pardon me, Mr. Chairman, if I hesitate somewhat to accept the judgment of officers of the Army in these matters over which and for which they are in no manner responsible. There have been four or five cases coming before my attention during the discussion of various bills before this House in which—

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. DENT. I would like to ask the gentleman if his amendment were adopted if it would not require an additional appropriation in order to get somebody to act outside of the Regular Army officers?

Mr. PROUTY. I think not, sir. I have asked that they be appointed from the Members of the House and the Senate. I understand all of those gentlemen to be getting salary now and it is claimed some were getting two salaries. The expense of Members of the House and Senate going down there would be no greater than members of the Army, and, judging from what I have heard, I am inclined to think their expenses would not be quite so large.

Mr. DENT. But you certainly would increase the expenses by increasing the number.

Mr. PROUTY. Well, it adds one only, and I am inclined to think that even the two we take off the Army will equal the expenses of the three we put on from the House and Senate. But I am presenting this matter seriously because we are facing a matter which is important. I have been told again and again that the expenses of the Army and Navy are becoming topheavy in this country. As one gentleman stated the other day, there seems to be no limit of expenditures in those departments, and it seems to me it is time for the Members of this House, who are primarily responsible for expenditures, to look into these investments before they get too far along. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the views of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa. I imagine, though, if we should select him, for instance, to make the investigation, or if I should be selected, that the gentleman and myself would know about as much, or our views would be worth just as much, on the subject of maneuvering grounds as would be the curl of a pig's tail concerning the price of pork. We would not know anything about it, and I for one am willing to leave the Army officers to deal with a question that is solely within the province of that department. I do not believe that they are robbing the people or spending improvidently their money. If that be true, I am sorry that the distinguished gentleman has not discovered during his long service that that was taking place, and not wait until this late date, when a resolution comes up authorizing an investigation of a proposition from Aniston, Ala.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, yeas 81. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the War Department has recently sent an answer to this body, responding to a resolution passed by the House in reference to the abandonment of various military posts. It seems a very strange thing that the Democratic side of the House, with the recommendations before it that we abandon a lot of Army posts, proposes, instead of doing that, to purchase a lot of additional land. We have Army posts, so the War Department now says, that have cost us close to $100,000,000, but valueless, they say, for Army purposes. And yet we have had no legislation with reference to abandoning them. But now, on the plea of economy, we have a proposition involving the purchase of 30,000 to 40,000 acres of land at a high and unconscionable price, because the passage of this resolution means that. Why should not you gentlemen who want to economize, economize once in a while? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I can not see the force of the contention of the gentleman from Illinois. The policy of the abandonment of small posts widely scattered is a part of a general policy of concentration of larger numbers of troops. The abandonment of the many expensive small posts entails the development of economical posts of larger dimensions. An investigation of this question of Army concentration would bring out the fact that geographically the trend of the movement of our Army posts must be southward.

I further call to the attention of Members that even in as small a war as the Spanish War, located in the West Indies, the Government sent its troops southward, and they actually occupied by choice this region near Anniston as the best in which to concentrate the troops. Now, nature has given many advantages to this point over all other points. It is well watered, and watered in such a unique way as to be free from typhoid and similar contagions. It has just the right altitude and rainfall to make the climate almost perfect the year around. The railroad facilities are excellent. The topography, the stretches of level land with the buttresses of hills, is unusually advantageous for the purposes of a great Army post and great maneuver grounds. The strategic location marks it as the region for concentration of troops for the wars of the future.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman state what additional information on this subject this board or commission to be proposed to be appointed in this resolution could give further than the information now contained in the report by Col. Mills?

Mr. HOBSON. I will be very glad to do that, because that is the crux of the situation.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does that not cover the rainfall and other questions involved?

Mr. HOBSON. I will tell the gentleman that the report already made is precisely the first preliminary report that is made on any such a project, just like a reconnaissance of a river leading to its survey as to whether its navigation ought to be developed or not. The second regular step is the step now proposed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not seem to grasp this fact. This is not a question of the purchase of land. It is not a question of deciding upon a location for maneuvering grounds, but simply to make a more detailed investigation of the suitability and advantages of the region in question. The fact remains that it will be necessary for us in carrying out the present policy of economical concentration of our troops to have large maneuvering grounds somewhere. The natural tendency will be southward for geographical, climatic, and strategic reasons, and it is most opportune now, with the approaching opening of the Panama Canal, to begin serious investigation of particular regions. An examination will certainly show, just as the Spanish War brought out the fact, that in northern Alabama, and probably in the neighborhood of Anniston, is the best location in America for just such a post and maneuver grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, this question is merely to appoint what is in every way a proper commission at this stage to make a proper survey and report. I can say for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois that his theories of extravagance and possible graft are not well grounded. Tell me where else in the United States could you get land for $15 an acre suitable for maneuvering.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman say why they are to donate these 4,000 acres?

Mr. HOBSON. I will say that it is done just precisely as the public-spirited citizens of a community will frequently contribute land for public purposes, say, a public building. The impulse is patriotism and public spirit. The great opportunity here open ought to be brought to the attention of the Government. I do not say the establishment of a post or maneuver grounds would not be a benefit to the community. Doubtless it would. But that question is not involved here. The question of whether certain citizens will make money out of it eventually is not involved.

Mr. GOOD. If we are to adopt a policy of consolidating the Army posts and adopting the policy of establishing maneuvering grounds generally, would not that be accomplished more economically by appointing a commission to look over the entire scope?

Mr. HOBSON. I am in entire agreement with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. GOOD. And would not this work in direct conflict with that kind of a survey or examination?

Mr. HOBSON. On the contrary, I think this would be a preliminary part of such a work, and the moment the gentleman wishes to have that general proposition taken up I am sure he will find sympathetic support. And I will say to him further that there is a bill pending, that will probably come before the House before long, creating a council of national defense, that will probably take up this question and similar questions for the whole country. But here is a meritorious proposition just to find out, without expense, whether the Government has not a splendid opportunity here in this location.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that this would be a good place for the location of a consolidated Army post, and that that was one of the arguments which the gentleman was advancing in favor of this location.

Mr. HOBSON. I think that in addition to maneuver grounds it would be a very desirable location for a consolidated Army post; one of the most desirable locations in this country.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think we ought to undertake to purchase grounds for a consolidated Army post without having first a view of the whole country?

Mr. HOBSON. I think the gentleman is correct in that, but this present proposition does not have in view the purchase of any land at all; only an investigation.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on this resolution. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman whatever time he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] was talking I asked him in what respect the board or commission to be created by this resolution would report more completely and more thoroughly than the man that examined into the subject.

Mr. HOBSON. I meant to answer the question of the gentleman more at length.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman said, "I am just going to do that," but he talked on other subjects, and he did not touch the point I wanted him to explain.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will yield me time now I will cover that point.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I have been trying, Mr. Chairman, to find out from the beginning of this discussion, since the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] began the explanation of this resolution, why certain gentlemen down there who are interested in land companies are so generous as to offer 4,000 acres of land for nothing, to donate it to the Government. It appears that those gentlemen are interested in twenty-five or thirty thousand acres more of land surrounding the 4,000 acres which they propose to donate, and they say they have options on it and that it can be bought for $15 an acre. Beware of Greeks bearing gifts to the Government. There is always a "nigger in the fence" when people are willing to give away something, and it always arouses my suspicion.

Now, at the request of somebody—and I think it was the request of the gentleman from Alabama, who introduced this resolution, by a letter that he wrote to Gen. Wood—Col. Mills was sent down there to investigate. He did investigate, apparently. He has brought back and submitted here a comprehensive report, stating practically everything, so far as I know, which would be ordinarily necessary to inform the War Department as to the merits of this proposition.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I can not yield.

Mr. HOBSON. This would be a good point at which to make one little statement.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman will have a chance probably later on. I am afraid to let the gentleman start to make a statement in my time.

Mr. HOBSON. This board would make surveys which the other one could not undertake.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Why should we pass an act directing the attention of the War Department to this particular proposition submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, if we are going later on to create a commission to go over the country and pick out the best and most available locations and territory for the general maneuvers of the Army? Why not create a commission or board now, with power to examine all the propotions and all the locations submitted to them for consideration, and report upon them all and recommend the one which they think is the best? This resolution gives such a board or commission no such power. This resolution is simply framed up in such a way as to compel the War Department actually to accept this particular proposition. It ought to be beaten, and it ought to be beaten on the merits. No man can defend it on the ground of economy or anything else. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL]. His amendment was to strike out the last three words, and if that amendment should be agreed to it would provide that this board should be paid. I am not in favor of the board being paid.

I have been in this House quite a number of years and I have seen some remarkable propositions presented to the House at one time and another, but it seems to me that as a really unique and unusual proposition this particular measure takes the cake—the entire bakery, in fact.

I understood that the Committee on Military Affairs had turned over to the War Department this question of concentration, of saying where the troops should be housed and where they should be maneuvered. In the Army bill, passed the other day, the War Department was given carte blanche to abandon $90,000,000 worth of property in the great Northwest, much of it new, up-to-date, first-class buildings—splendid Army posts—constructed within the last few years. Their abandonment is left entirely to the discretion of the War Department. And in order that that department may be encouraged to abandon these buildings forthwith, the Democratic majority here has prohibited the Secretary of War from using any portion of the appropriation for the purpose of stopping any leaks that may occur in the roofs of any of these buildings or in any way caring for them. But so anxious are the gentlemen now to reverse the policy adopted a few days ago, so far as the great State of Alabama is concerned, that they now propose to have Congress actually take a hand in the matter of asserting its authority as to the establishment or selection of grounds for maneuver purposes down in the State of Alabama. I suppose eventually this will be one of the great concentration posts of which we have heard so much.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman says this is the most unique proposition he ever heard of.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Was the gentleman a Member of this body on the 24th of February, 1911?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe that I was; yes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Did the gentleman know that a resolution absolutely similar to this was passed at that time, with the exception that the words "Tallahoma, Tenn.," were contained therein, while this one contains the words "Anniston, Ala."?

Mr. MONDELL. What gentleman was up for renomination in that district?

Mr. BLACKMON. I do not know; but the gentleman's long service and his watchfulness did not seem to prevent the passage of that resolution.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Had there been a report made already on that proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not claim to have been overwatchful. I do not know the name of the gentleman in whose district it was proposed to have that examination. I have no doubt the gentleman's services were well worth it, and I have no doubt that the services of the gentleman in whose behalf this resolution is presented are well worth this expense.

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman was more generous with the gentleman from Tennessee than he is with the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MONDELL. I am generous with both gentlemen, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. BLACKMON. Evidently.

Mr. MONDELL. Only I do not want the money paid out of the Treasury of the United States to help this scheme along.

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman did on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution to the House as amended, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SULZER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House joint resolution 178, creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of a permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, and to likewise report as to certain lands in and around the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the joint resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution and amendment to the final passage.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 67, noes 15.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DENT. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House will be taken automatically if this motion fails. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn. All those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-two gentlemen have arisen.

Mr. SULZER. Let us have the other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the other side. All those opposed to the motion will rise. [After counting.] Seventy-nine gentlemen have arisen, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 37, nays 175, answered "present" 7, not voting 174, as follows:

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois with Mr. KOPP.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi with Mr. LAWRENCE.

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution and amendment to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the reading of the engrossed resolution. That puts an end to the consideration of the resolution for the present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the previous question having been ordered, as I understand it, the engrossed resolution will come up to-morrow first thing.

The SPEAKER. That is true. It would come up right now if we had the engrossed copy here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The engrossed copy is not at the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. No.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4197. An act for the purchase of a site for the erection of a post-office and public building at New Martinsville, Wetzel County, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution for an exhibit at the Fifth National Corn Exposition at Columbia, S. C.; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Senate concurrent resolution 11.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of the message of the President of the United States transmitting the report of the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Commission, together with the hearings held before the commission, of which 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and that there be printed as a Senate document, in one pamphlet, 25,000 copies of the message and report only, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 12,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,500 copies for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate—to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (H. R. 20482) to establish a post office at Texarkana, Tex., and to provide for the appointment of a postmaster, was changed from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Thursday, February 22, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting estimates of appropriation for continuing the construction of Cavalry post, Hawaii Territory (H. Doc. No. 555); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Apoon mouth of Yukon River, Alaska (H. Doc. No. 556); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Biscayne Bay, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 554); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Harlem River, at Johnsons Iron Works, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 557); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution, additional information relative to certain matters in regard to Pay Department of the Army (H. Doc. No. 558); to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred sundry bills of the House, reported in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, accompanied by a report (No. 329), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred sundry bills of the House, reported in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 20586) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, accompanied by a report (No. 330), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 20576) to regulate the officering and manning of vessels, to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 22, 1912.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the God of our fathers, we thank Thee for the providence which brings us to this day of sacred memory. Our fathers trusted in Thee, and were not ashamed. And now Thou hast increased Thy people greatly and hast strengthened us on every side. To us as to our fathers be Thou our hope and our stay. Defend us in the time of trouble and preserve our liberty, that we may keep unspoiled our priceless heritage.

We thank Thee for the life which we this day commemorate. As he, being dead, yet speaketh, incline our minds to heed his words of wisdom. Upon the altar of our hearts kindle anew the fire of patriotic devotion, that by Thy grace we may ever be that happy Nation whose God is the Lord.

And as Thou wast with our sires, so be Thou, O God, with their sons and with our children now and forevermore. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the order heretofore made by the Senate that upon this day Washington's Farewell Address shall be read to the Senate, and pursuant to the designation heretofore made by the Chair, the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] will now read Washington's Address to the Senate.

Mr. KERN read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—northern and southern, Atlantic and western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesale plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foment occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined as far as should depend upon me to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after 45 years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

Go: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19, 1796.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is safe to say that at least one-half of the membership of the Senate is engaged in very important committee work. There seems to be nothing urgent before the Senate at present. I therefore move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next. The motion was agreed to.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the vessel schooner Alfred, Elbridge Drinkwater, master (H. Doc. No. 561), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the vessel schooner Rhoda, Uriah Green, master (H. Doc. No. 562), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by the court in the following causes:

Elizabeth P. O'Connor, widow (remarried), and Edward B. Wright, son and only child of Edward Maxwell Wright, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 341);

Annie E. Ruff, executrix of estate of Charles Frederick Ruff, deceased, v. United States (S. Doc. No. 340); and

J. P. Deiter v. United States (S. Doc. No. 342).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—THE POSTAL SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 559).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In transmitting the annual report of the Postmaster General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, it gives me pleasure to call attention to the fact that the revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, amounted to $237,879,823.60 and that the expenditures amounted to $237,660,705.48, making a surplus of $219,118.12. For the year ended June 30, 1909, the postal service was in arrears to the extent of $17,479,770.47. In the interval this very large deficit has been changed into a surplus, and that without the curtailment of postal facilities. Indeed, in the same time there have been established 3,744 new post offices, delivery by carrier provided in 186 additional cities, and new rural routes established, 2,516 in number and aggregating 60,679 miles in extent. The force of postal employees has been increased by more than 8,000, and a liberal policy in the matter of salaries has been followed, so that the amount expended for salaries is now $14,000,000 more than two years ago. The average salary has been increased from $869 to $967 for rural carriers, $979 to $1,082 for post-office clerks, $1,021 to $1,084 for city letter carriers, and $1,168 to $1,183 for railway postal clerks.

The report shows that the Postal Savings System was begun experimentally in January, 1911, and that it has now been extended so as to include 7,500 presidential post offices, which includes practically all of the post offices of that class. Preparations are also being made to establish the system at about 40,000 fourth-class offices. The deposits in 11 months have reached a total of $11,000,000, distributed among 2,710 national and State banks.

The Postmaster General recommends, as I have done in previous messages, the adoption of a parcel post, and the beginning of this in the organization of such service on rural routes and in the City Delivery Service first.

The placing of assistant postmasters in the classified service has secured greater efficiency. It is hoped that the same thing may be done with all the postmasters.

The report of the Postmaster General is full of statements of the important improvements in the organization and methods of the postal service made since the last annual report, and of tentative drafts of legislation embodying certain recommendations of the department which need legislation to carry them out.

There is only one recommendation in which I can not agree—that is one which recommends that the telegraph lines in the United States should be made a part of the postal system and operated in conjunction with the mail system. This presents a question of Government ownership of public utilities which are now being conducted by private enterprise under franchises from the Government. I believe that the true principle is that private enterprise should be permitted to carry on such public utilities under due regulation as to rates by proper authority rather than that the Government should itself conduct them. This principle I favor because I do not think it in accordance with the best public policy thus greatly to increase the body of public servants. Of course, if it could be shown that telegraph service could be furnished to the public at a less price than it is now furnished to the public by telegraph companies, and with equal efficiency, the argument might be a strong one in favor of the adoption of the proposition. But I am not satisfied from any evidence that if these properties were taken over by the Government they could be managed any more economically or any more efficiently or that this would enable the Government to furnish service at any smaller rate than the public are now required to pay by private companies.

More than this, it seems to me that the consideration of the question ought to be postponed until after the postal savings banks have come into complete and smooth operation and after a parcel post has been established not only upon the rural routes and the city deliveries but also throughout the department. It will take some time to perfect these additions to the activities of the Post Office Department, and we may well await their complete and successful adoption before we take on a new burden in this very extended department.

I can not speak with too great emphasis of the improvement in the Post Office Department under the present management. The cutting down of cost, the shortening of methods, and the increase in efficiency are shown by the statistics of the annual report.

One of the most important matters referred to by the Postmaster General is the proposed fixing of new rates of postage for second-class mail matter. In connection with this subject, I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the Commission on Second-Class Mail Matter, appointed pursuant to a joint resolution of the Sixty-first Congress, approved March 4, 1911.

The commission consists of Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University; and Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Association of Commerce of the city of Chicago, whose character, ability, and experience command for their findings and recommendations the respect and confidence of the Congress and the country.

The report discloses a most exhaustive and critical inquiry into the subject of second-class mail matter after adequate notice to all the parties in interest. Extensive hearings were held by the commission, at which the Postmaster General and the Second and Third Assistant Postmasters General appeared and submitted formal statements presenting the various contentions of the Post Office Department, together with all the relevant official data and evidence relating to the cost of handling and transporting second-class mail matter. Certain of the leading magazines were represented by counsel, while various other publications appeared by representatives and were heard in oral argument or permitted to submit written briefs setting forth their respective reasons for opposing a change in the present postage rate on second-class mail. The Second and Third Assistant Postmasters General, together with minor officers of the department, were critically cross-examined by the counsel and representatives of the periodicals, and all the various phases of the second-class postage problem were made the subject of a most painstaking investigation.

The findings of the commission confirm the view that the cost of handling and transporting second-class mail matter is greatly in excess of the postage paid, and that an increase in the rate is not only justified by the facts but is desirable.

The commission reports that the evidence submitted for its consideration is sufficient to warrant a finding of the approximate cost of handling and transporting the several classes of second-class mail known as paid-at-the-pound-rate, free-in-county, and transient matter, in so far as relates to the services of transportation, post-office cars, railway distribution, rural delivery, and certain other items of cost, but that it is without adequate data to determine the cost of the general post-office service and also what portion of the cost of certain other aggregate services is properly assignable to second-class mail matter. It finds that in the fiscal year 1908, the period for which the statistics for the Post Office Department were compiled, the cost of handling and transporting second-class mail, in the items of transportation, post-office cars, railway distribution, rural delivery, and certain miscellaneous charges, was approximately 6 cents a pound for paid-at-the-pound-rate matter, and for free-in-county and transient matter each approximately 5 cents a pound, and that upon this basis, as modified by subsequent reductions in the cost of railroad transportation, the cost of paid-at-the-pound-rate matter, for the services mentioned, is now approximately 5½ cents a pound, while the cost of free-in-county and transient matter remains as formerly, namely, each at approximately 5 cents a pound.

Since the commission has determined that the cost of handling and transporting second-class mail is approximately 5½ cents for matter paid at the pound rate and approximately 5 cents each for free-in-county and transient matter, without taking into account the cost of the general post-office service and certain unassignable items of expense, it is apparent that the aggregate cost of all service performed by the postal establishment in connection with this class of mail matter is considerably above that amount.

The postal service is now, for the first time in years, operated upon a self-sustaining basis, and, in my judgment, this is a wise policy; but it should not be carried out at the expense of certain classes of mail matter that pay revenue largely in excess of their cost. It is not just that some classes of mail should be exorbitantly taxed to meet a deficiency caused by other classes, the revenue from which is much below their cost of handling and carriage. Where such inequalities exist they should be removed as early as practicable. The business enterprises of the publishers of periodicals, however, have been built up on the basis of the present second-class rate, and therefore it would be manifestly unfair to put into immediate effect a large increase in postage. That newspapers and magazines have been potent agencies for the dissemination of public intelligence and have consequently borne a worthy part in the development of the country all must admit; but it is likewise true that the original purpose of Congress in providing for them a subvention by way of nominal postal charges in consideration of their value as mediums of public information ought not to prevent an increase, because they are now not only educational but highly profitable. There is no warrant for the great disparity between existing postage rates on periodicals and the cost of the service the Government performs for them. The aggregate postal revenues for the fiscal year 1911 were $237,879,823.00, derived mainly from the postage collected on the four classes of mail matter. It is carefully estimated by the Post Office Department that the revenue derived from mail matter of the first class is approximately one and one-half times the cost of handling and carriage; that the returns from third and fourth class matter are slightly in excess of their cost of handling and carriage; and that while second-class matter embraces over 65 per cent of the entire weight of all the mail carried, it nevertheless yields little more than 5 per cent of the postal revenues.

The recommendations of the commission as to the postage rates on second-class mail are as follows:

1. The rate of 2 cents a pound on copies mailed by publishers to subscribers, to news agents, and as sample copies, and by news agents to their subscribers or to other news agents.

2. The rate of 1 cent for each 4 ounces for copies mailed by other than publishers and news agents; that is, the present transient rate.

3. The present free-in-county privilege retained, but not extended.

The commission also recommended that the cent-a-copy rate for newspapers other than weeklies and for periodicals not exceeding 2 ounces in weight, and the 2-cent-a-copy rate for periodicals exceeding 2 ounces in weight, when mailed at a city letter-carrier office for local delivery, be abolished.

As to the effect and adequacy of the proposed increase of 1 cent a pound in postage the commission says:

Such an increase will not, in the opinion of the commission, bring distress upon the publishers of newspapers and periodicals, or seriously interfere with the dissemination of useful news or information. A reasonable time should be allowed, after the rate is fixed, before it is put into effect. While the new rate will be very far from compensating the Government for the carriage and handling of second-class matter, it will to some extent relieve the existing burden and result in a more equitable adjustment of rates.

The commission suggests that the department "maintain an adequate cost system, so that the effect of the new rates may be closely observed and a proper basis may be secured for the consideration of any future proposals."

In these recommendations the Postmaster General and I heartily concur and commend them to the early attention of Congress. The proposed increase of 1 cent a pound in the second-class postage rate, I believe, to be most reasonable, and if sufficient time is allowed before the change goes into effect it should work little serious injury to the business of the periodical publishers, while equalizing, at least in a measure, the burdens of postal taxation.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 22, 1912.

[NOTE.—Reports, exhibits, and other papers accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Fairland, Ill., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 58, United Mine Workers of America, of Kewanee, Ill., remonstrating against the Navy Department compelling enlisted men to perform work formerly done by civilian employees, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CRANE presented petitions of 700 citizens of New Bedford, Mass., praying for the ratification of the proposed treaties of arbitration between the United States, Great Britain, and France, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 459. A bill to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians (Rept. No. 401); and

S. 4734. A bill for the relief of Mary G. Brown and others. (Rept. No. 400.)

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5255) increasing the compensation of the collector of customs, district of Puget Sound, State of Washington, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 402) thereon.

UNRIGGED VESSELS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 4445) to direct the Commissioner of Navigation to list as rebuilt unrigged vessels; and to prescribe what shall be considered a rebuilt unrigged vessel, and I submit a report (No. 399) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the committee is to strike out all after the enacting clause and to substitute the following words:

That upon affidavit by reputable shipbuilders of the United States that unrigged wooden vessels have been rebuilt, giving the date and place of such rebuilding, are sound and free from rotten or doted wood in structural parts, properly fastened and calked and in strength and seaworthiness as good as new, the Commissioner of Navigation shall include in the list of merchant vessels a notation to that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I do not feel like having the bill passed without some explanation. There are grave abuses in this very matter of rebuilt ships. I should like to know the reason for this change.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from New York that this bill is applicable to barges, and it is important that the bill should get through speedily in order to get them in the Blue Book of 1912.

It only differentiates between good boats and bad boats. For instance, you can take two barges that were built in 1900. One may have been rebuilt in 1910 and made as good as new. As the matter now stands there is no differentiation between the two barges. This is only to show the difference between the one and the other.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask if there is any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. This bill has been favorably reported on by the Commissioner of Navigation; it is really a bill from the Commissioner of Navigation. It has just been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce, and there is a report accompanying it.

Mr. ROOT. I think it had better go over.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? The substitute is a bill recommended by the Commissioner of Navigation. It simply authorizes that in case one of these craft—and they are not the ordinary sailing or steam craft—is rebuilt and repaired the man who repairs or rebuilds it shall file an affidavit with the Commissioner of Navigation or in the department, and thereupon the fact that that boat has been rebuilt shall be noted. That is all there is to it. It does not affect shipping in general.

Mr. ROOT. I will make no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill concerning unrigged vessels."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understood, and I think it was the general understanding among Senators, that there would be no business transacted to-day after the reading of the farewell address. I know many Senators have gone away with that understanding. There was no formal understanding placed in the RECORD, but I think it was generally so understood. I merely call attention to the fact that many Senators are away on that understanding.

CLAIM OF HENRY A. V. POST AND OTHERS.

Mr. JONES. I report from the Committee on Claims a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 229) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the claims of Henry A. V. Post, individually and as liquidating partner of the firm of Clark, Post & Martin (S. 5420), and the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. and Walston H. Brown (S. 5432), now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if those are not claims which have already been to the Court of Claims.

Mr. JONES. They have not. Similar claims have gone to the Court of Claims and have been paid by Congress, but these are claims that were not included in the bills passed by Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Are these steel billets claims?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If they have never been to the Court of Claims, I have no objection to the resolution, but I had an impression that they had already been there.

Mr. JONES. These claims have not been to the court.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 5441) for the relief of William Thomas; and

A bill (S. 5442) to correct the military record of Hezekiah Cullen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5443) for the relief of Susan Dye Baylies; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5444) granting an increase of pension to Darwin Zeek (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5445) granting an increase of pension to Ann De Monbrum (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5446) relating to partial assignments of desert-land entries within reclamation projects made since March 28, 1908; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BROWN:

A bill (S. 5447) granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. Ellis (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5448) granting an increase of pension to Calvin E. Barney (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 5449) granting an increase of pension to William Spotts (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5450) granting a pension to Ida Collins (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BOURNE submitted an amendment proposing that hereafter enlisted men of the Marine Corps may be designated as Marine Corps mail clerks, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for ordnance stores—ammunition, from $250,000 to $350,000—intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for small-arms target practice from $740,000 to $900,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL SERVICE PENSIONS.

Mr. BURNHAM. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico. Accompanying the amendment is a statement. I ask that the amendment and accompanying statement be printed and that they also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment and accompanying statement are as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. BURNHAM to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved February 6, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, shall, upon making proof of such facts, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows:

"In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $12 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $15 per month; 1 year and a half, $16.50 per month; 2 years, $18 per month; 2 years and a half, $19.50 per month; 3 years or over, $21 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $14 per month; 6 months, $15.50 per month; 1 year, $17 per month; 1 year and a half, $18.50 per month; 2 years, $20 per month; 2 years and a half, $21.50 per month; 3 years or over, $23 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $16 per month; 6 months, $17.50 per month; 1 year, $19 per month; 1 year and a half, $20.50 per month; 2 years, $22 per month; 2 years and a half, $23.50 per month; 3 years or over, $25 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $20 per month; 6 months, $21.50 per month; 1 year, $23 per month; 1 year and a half, $24.50 per month; 2 years, $26 per month; 2 years and a half, $28 per month; 3 years or over, $30 per month.

"That any person who has served 60 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the War with Mexico and has been honorably discharged therefrom shall, upon making like proof of such service, be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month.

"All of the aforesaid pensions shall commence from the date of filing of the applications in the Bureau of Pensions after the passage and approval of this act: Provided, That pensioners who are 62 years of age or over, and who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Bureau of Pensions, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; and nothing herein contained shall prevent any pensioner or person entitled to a pension from prosecuting his claim and receiving a pension under any other general or special act: Provided, That no person shall receive a pension under any other law at the same time or for the same period that he is receiving a pension under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a greater pension, under any other general or special law, than he would be entitled to receive under the provisions herein shall be pensionable under this act.

"SEC. 2. That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

"SEC. 3. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $5, which sum shall be payable only after the allowance of the claim and upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, out of the amount allowed, and by the pension agent making payment of such pension, and no agent, attorney, or other person shall demand or receive, directly or indirectly, any compensation in advance of such allowance, or other compensation than herein prescribed; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or who shall wrongfully withhold from a pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold any affidavits or other proofs in support of a claim, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That no greater fee than $2 shall be allowed or paid in any claim for increase of pension under this act.

"SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of Pensions shall make, at the time of submitting his next annual report, a separate report for each county of each State, Territory, or District, containing a statement or table which shall contain the names, lengths of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners of the United States; and shall thereafter, as said annual reports are submitted, make separate reports similar in all respects, except that such subsequent reports shall contain only those added to the pension roll during the fiscal year for which each annual report is made."

PROPOSED PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Monday, immediately after the routine morning business is finished, I will address the Senate upon the subject of pension legislation.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20182. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1900, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 26, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 22, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, God over all, our Father, whose invisible hand may be traced in shaping and guiding the destiny of men and of nations, in every great crisis Thou hast brought forth the man panoplied in light to guide, strength to sustain, courage to overcome, every opposing force in the onward march of civilization.

To-day the heart of every lover of liberty throughout the length and breadth of our land—yea, in all the world—is going out in praise and gratitude for the peerless Washington. Great in war, great in peace, great in the hearts of his countrymen, pure, noble, generous, glorious, he lived a light to guide the patriot on his way, the statesman in his quest for the betterment of conditions: A Christian whose example inspires faith, confidence, hope in the eternal verities. Grant that the story of his life may be told round the fireside, in every school, in every hamlet, in every city throughout the world, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE BOLL WEEVIL.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD certain material bearing on the boll weevil.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks on the boll weevil. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman how much there is that he desires printed?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, it will be in two parts, but it will not be oppressively long. The Department of Agriculture has been getting up a printed bulletin on farming under boll-weevil conditions. The boll weevil has just now reached my district. The department expected to get the bulletin by the first of the year, so that it would be available for use.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of the boll weevil.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know yet just how long it will be, but I desire to have some preliminary outline of the summary so that we can send it to the farmers now before they begin their spring planting. This part of it will certainly not be long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOBSON. Under leave to print, I will at this time print a letter being sent to my constituents in Alabama summarizing briefly the general conclusions arrived at in the special bulletin in course of preparation by the Department of Agriculture on the subject of farming under boll-weevil conditions:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONSTITUENT: The Department of Agriculture has found it impossible to complete the bulletin on Farming Under Boll Weevil Conditions, about which I wrote you some time ago, and I will send this bulletin to you just as soon as it is completed.

But in the meantime, in contemplation of starting spring work, I wish you to know the general conclusions at which the department has arrived. It is needless for me to inform you that the weevil has reached Alabama, invading from the Mississippi line, and is now intrenching itself in the sixth district. Let me remind you again, as I did in my previous letter, that when the boll weevil comes he always remains. There is no choice in the matter.

The question is urgent, and the information has a vital meaning for you and all of our people. The fundamental conclusions may be summarized as follows:

1. We must raise cotton intensively, which requires reduction in acreage and adoption of scientific methods, deep plowing, choice of early maturing variety of seed, frequent, light cultivation, use of manure, etc.

2. We must not depend upon the cotton crop alone, but must raise our own supplies, adopting diversification and rotation in crops, especially increasing grain and forage crops, and raising live stock, especially hogs, also home gardens, with milch cows and poultry.

This is the only rational plan for our farmers, even if the boll weevil did not make it a necessity. It would, above all, enable our farmers to market their cotton crops slowly and get prices in keeping with the true value. It is nothing short of a tragedy that, in spite of a general shortage in the world's supply of cotton, compared with its increasing demand, our southern farmers have received $200,000 less for this year's big crop than they did for last year's small crop.

Holding myself always ready to serve you, I remain, with good wishes,

Your friend,

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ELEVATORS IN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House resolution 403, directing the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to make inquiry as to prices paid for elevators used in Government buildings under control of the Treasury Department, of date January 31, 1912, referred to the Committee on Rules, be rereferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask to what the resolution relates.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 403.

Directing the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to make inquiry as to prices paid for elevators used in Government buildings under control of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. Has not that committee already authority to make that investigation?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; but the resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. It is a rule, and it belongs to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LOBECK. I understand, but there is no objection on the part of the Committee on Rules to having this referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. Has not the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department authority to make the investigation?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the object of the change?

Mr. LOBECK. To get the matter before the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. HARDWICK. And that is the very reason that the Committee on Rules has not opposed it. The Committee on Rules thinks that the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department already has jurisdiction to make the inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the change of reference is made.

FAREWELL ADDRESS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House for nearly seven years. Until the convening of this Congress this House was in the control of the Republican Party. Every year I have seen some Democrat rise on this floor and ask for the reading of George Washington's Farewell Address, which request was denied by the Republican majority. I now move in a Democratic House that the Clerk of the House read that address to the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that some gentleman read George Washington's Farewell Address from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Florida be given that privilege.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I requested that the Clerk do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Inasmuch as the Farewell Address is not here, while we are sending for it, without objection, the Chair will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States, and it will be read.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

The Clerk read the President's message.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this day.]

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the message itself is ordered printed, and the documents are sent to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, unless some Member wants a different disposition of them. There is an immense quantity of them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the report of the commission on second-class mail matter will be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I hope the report of the commission on second-class mail matter, which accompanies the President's message, will be printed. It is a matter of very wide interest.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is ordered printed with the message. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] will proceed to read George Washington's Farewell Address. [Applause.]

FAREWELL ADDRESS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. CLARK of Florida read the Farewell Address of George Washington as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made. [Applause.]

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both. [Applause.]

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows, that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as a palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint councils and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endeavor to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political system is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. [Applause.] The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize factions; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests, in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member to the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally. [Applause.]

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty. [Applause.]

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foment occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. [Applause.] The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in the place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world [applause], so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and the other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined as far as should depend upon me to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after 45 years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

Go: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19, 1796.

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. CULLOP and Mr. NORRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to the memory of Washington I move that the House do now adjourn. The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas seemed to have it; the yeas had it—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. It is rather late.

Mr. NORRIS. I called for a division as soon as I could.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, yeas 93.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that 20,000 copies of the Farewell Address of George Washington, just read by the gentleman from Florida, be published and placed in the folding room, to be prorated among Members for distribution.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of order that the motion is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

PERMANENT MANEUVERING GROUNDS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the reading of the engrossed copy of House joint resolution 178, creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of a permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, and to likewise report as to certain lands in and around the city of Anniston, county of Calhoun, State of Alabama, proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the demand for the reading of the engrossed copy.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House joint resolution pass?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty gentlemen are present—not a quorum. Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary. The call of the House comes automatically when the House is dividing. The Door-keeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of House joint resolution 178 will, as their names are called, answer "aye," and those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 181, nays 61, answered "present" 11, not voting 140, as follows:

YEAS—181.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, is recorded.

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. I have a pair with the gentleman, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present."

The name of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, was called and he voted "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which House joint resolution 178 was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This really is Monday on account of a trade that was made the other day by which Thursday was substituted for Monday in the transaction of business. The Clerk will call the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

PAYMENT OF INDIAN DEPREDAATION CLAIMS.

The first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14667) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of paragraph 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"First. All claims for property of citizens or inhabitants of the United States, except the claims of Indians heretofore or now in tribal relations, taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for, and in all adjudications under said act as now amended the allegiance of the claimant shall not be a defense to said claims: Provided, That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian territory: Provided further, That all cases heretofore filed under said act of March 3, 1891, and which have been dismissed by the court for want of proof of the citizenship of the claimant, shall be reinstated and readjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims: Provided further, That all acts and parts of acts, in so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] make a statement regarding it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in 1891 a bill was passed by Congress permitting persons who had suffered the loss of property from Indian depredations in the United States and who were citizens of the United States to bring suits in the Court of Claims to establish their right and to recover damages from the United States for the loss of property stolen or destroyed by the Indians. This law had a limitation clause of three years in which suits had to be filed. In 1895 the time within which this could be done, as fixed by the bill, expired. During that time several hundred suits were brought, involving several million dollars' worth of property. After the expiration of that time no more suits could be filed.

This bill revives one class of these suits, in this that the original bill provided that only citizens of the United States should be entitled to bring these suits, we find that a great many cases were dismissed on demurrer, because the claimants could not prove that they were citizens of the United States. In many instances the fathers of claimants were known to be from other countries and to have become naturalized citizens of the United States, but had lost during the Civil War their naturalization papers showing that they had become citizens of the United States. It was found after these suits were brought, to prove citizenship in many of these cases the burden of proof was upon the claimants to show that they, or their parents before them, whose property had been destroyed, were citizens at the time the property was taken. On account of their inability to prove their citizenship their cases were dismissed from the court of appeals. This bill simply reinstates those cases only, and permits these people to prove that they or their parents were inhabitants of the United States at the time that their property was lost. This bill amends the old law by using the word "inhabitant" instead of "citizen." I think that no one can justly deny that if they were inhabitants of the United States, even though their allegiance may have belonged to a foreign country, they should be entitled to receive the same damages as if they were citizens of the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. This bill, then, only reaches those who could not prove their citizenship?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It includes only that class of cases. It includes only the cases that have been dismissed from the dockets heretofore because of that very defect in their proof.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Has the gentleman any information as to about how many cases there are which this bill would reach?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have a statement in a letter from the Attorney General in which he estimates that it would cost the Government to pay these claims only about $300,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. My question is, Why is it that he has not put the amity clause in?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would state to the gentleman that I have been pressing a bill ever since I have been a Member of Congress with the amity clause in it, and have failed to get it through the House, because of departmental and other objections.

Mr. MANN. The amity clause involves what?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will read to the gentleman the letter which I received from the Attorney General only day before yesterday, if he desires it. This letter gives full information on the subject of costs.

Mr. MANN. The House is entitled to have that information, because that is a heavy cut in the amount involved.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. After the lapse of 40 years it is almost impossible to prove these claims, and the claimant has the laboring oar, because the burden of proof is cast upon him, and he must come into court and establish the facts, just as one would establish a claim against a railroad or other company in a damage suit. Many of the claimants' witnesses are dead or their whereabouts unknown, and it is almost impossible after 30 years or more to prove up these claims and secure judgment thereon.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Just in a moment.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the letter read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Answering the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the Attorney General in his letter says:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1912.

HON. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have your letter of the 9th instant, addressed to Assistant Attorney General William H. Lewis, with reference to H. R. 14667, and inquiring whether the estimate in my letter of the 6th ultimo of the probable increased liability of the Government if the proposed bill should be enacted into law, viz, $500,000, excluded those cases of non-citizens where the defense of nonamity was also available.

In reply, I beg to say that that estimate was made without reference to this defense. With regard to your further query, as to the probable liability of the United States if this class of cases is eliminated from consideration, I beg to advise you that probably 40 per cent of the total number of cases disposed of to date have been dismissed because of the hostility of the defendant Indians. There is no reason to doubt but that this defense would be applicable in the same proportion to the cases affected by the proposed bill, and the estimate of $500,000 is therefore susceptible to a reduction for this reason of 40 per cent, or $200,000, leaving $300,000 as the ultimate liability of the United States if the proposed bill becomes law. It is possible that this amount may be further reduced by reason of the inability of some of the claimants to make the proof necessary to establish their cases.

That was signed by Mr. Wickersham, Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. That does not relate to the statement of the gentleman that the amity clause involved only half a million dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have stated that it involves several million dollars, but that we could not prove more than half a million.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman let me read from the report of the committee on the subject?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You can read the letter. It is explanatory.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman had finished the letter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let the Attorney General explain, and not the gentleman from Illinois. That part of the letter is as follows:

With reference to the probable time it would require to try such cases, I beg to say that that is a very difficult matter to approximate, for the reason that the progress of the defendants in this respect is regulated to a great extent by the activity of the claimants and the condition of the calendar of the court; but, assuming that the cases affected by the proposed bill could be tried to the exclusion of all others, in my judgment it would probably require three years to dispose of them.

Mr. MANN. That does not answer the question which I asked the gentleman, where he got his information that the amity clause only affected half a million dollars of probable claims that would be allowed against the Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman misstates the proposition. I stated that there can not be more than half a million dollars recovered under that clause.

Mr. MANN. Under the amity clause?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think there could be, and that is what I understand to be the statement of the Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to read from his own report?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What page?

Mr. MANN. Page 5:

The amity clause defeats about $11,000,000 of these. If that clause were removed a fair estimate of the recovery resulting therefrom is $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When was that written?

Mr. MANN. I do not know when the gentleman wrote his report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a statement in some old report.

Mr. MANN. That is a statement in a report made in the Sixty-first Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas support an amendment to this bill striking out all reference to the question of amity?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In what respect?

Mr. MONDELL. It will be very easy to amend this bill so as to allow those cases to come in, where the question of amity is now raised, by amending line 11 and striking out the words "in amity with and."

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he will notice that the bill is so skillfully drawn that the striking out of five words from the bill, without any other amendment, would admit liability for all of these so-called amity claims. I do not know who drew the bill, but it was drawn by a very skillful man.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the amendment I have in mind and would like to offer, and I asked the gentleman from Texas if he would support it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have been endeavoring for many years to secure some tangible results from this matter; and having gone over the matter so carefully with the department and with the various interested parties and having a great many claimants in my own district, I am constrained to refuse the amendment, not on the ground that it is unjust but because we know that it can not pass here in this House.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman support an amendment to strike out the third proviso?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Lines 13 to 16?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The words are:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims.

I should like to see that go out, because I would like to see the law of 1891 reinstated, but that, again, would prevent the passage of the bill. It would open wide the door for the passage of all these claims, and I do not believe it could be passed through this House in that shape.

Mr. JACKSON. My objection was that it seemed to prefer a certain class of claimants who filed their claims at a time when they had no right to file them. I shall oppose the bill for that reason, because it is clearly in the interest of a certain number of the claims that have been filed in the court and adjudicated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much is the aggregate of the claims already filed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. About $7,000,000 or more have been filed, but that was under and included the amity-clause cases and under the act of 1891, which expired by limitation in 1905.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the aggregate of claims filed is much in excess of $7,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. I do not believe if this legislation is enacted that it will take more than $150,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Attorney General, in the letter I have read, says that it will not cost more than $300,000. It will be nothing but an act of justice to the men whose cases have been dismissed because they could not prove their citizenship, now living in that country, to reinstate their cases and try them. I do not think there should be any objection to it, and I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if it be in order I would like to propose an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, because the House has not yet given consent to consider the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, if this bill should pass the House simply providing for the payment of claims on account of citizenship, and it should go to the Senate, and the Senate should add an amendment allowing the payment of claims on the amity proposition, and it came back to the House in that way, the bill, unless by unanimous consent, would be referred back to the Committee on Indian Affairs and receive consideration in the House. But if this bill, in the way it is drawn, goes to the Senate purporting to allow claims on the ground of citizenship, and the Senate should strike five words out of the bill, it would come back to the House and would not require any consideration in the House except the motion to concur in a Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not that be subject to an "aye" and "no" vote in the House and discussion?

Mr. MANN. It might not be subject to discussion in the closing hours of the session. The gentleman would move to concur in the Senate amendment, and demand the previous question, and under the stress of business that would be done without consideration, instead of following the usual course where the Senate adds an amendment which ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole or in the House and be considered there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman from Illinois believe that the House can limit amendments on a bill going to the other body?

Mr. MANN. No; but it can reserve the right to consider them in Committee of the Whole after the committee of the House has reported upon them.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois agree to let this bill pass if the advocates of it will agree to oppose any amendment placed on it in the Senate?

Mr. MANN. We all know that there is no way of making an agreement of that sort effective.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I wanted to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois. I believe the gentleman from Illinois realizes that these claims are just; that it is very unjust to raise the question of amity against American citizens whose property was taken by Indians; that it is not fair that the mere fact that an Indian tribe was declared by some one to be at war with the United States should be a bar to the recovery by American citizens for property destroyed by the wards of the Government.

These claims are as just as claims we are now paying, and would the gentleman oppose the passage of the bill simply because it might result in the payment of just claims against the Government in behalf of the pioneer citizens of the West?

Mr. MANN. There are no just claims against the Government on account of the depredations of Indians. In 1859, under a Democratic administration, Congress repealed the law at that time which granted any claims against the Government in any shape whatever for Indian depredations. It was while this law was repealed, with no right on the part of anyone to make a claim against the Government for these depredations, that these depredations occurred, and it was not until a few years ago that Congress provided for the adjudication of any claims at all. When the circumstances under which these claims are now made occurred, there was an express statute on the statute books declaring that the Government assumes no liability whatever and would make no payment of any claims for Indian depredations.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. MANN. I have answered it to the best of my ability.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's assertion is that there is no legal claim. We all understand that, and yet the frontiersman of the West could not select whether he should have his property destroyed and family murdered by Indians said to be at amity with the Government or by marauders belonging to a tribe that some one said was at war with the Government. It does not alter the justice of these claims that there was a law on the statute book denying their payment; certainly that law was not placed there for the purpose of preventing pioneers from going forward into the West and there carving out States from the wilderness, in doing which they were set upon by savages. Many were killed and much property was destroyed. It was no fault of theirs that the Indians who destroyed their property are held by the courts to have been at war against the Government, instead of simply marauding bands of tribes not at war.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wyoming allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman from Wyoming take into consideration the fact that at no time in the history of the Government have we ever recognized depredations?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. We did for many years.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No, no.

Mr. MONDELL. Depredations committed by the public enemy?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. By Indians not in amity with the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The statement that the gentleman makes is this, if I understand him correctly, that the cases that would arise by reason of depredations committed by Indians not at amity have as much merit as these other claims.

Mr. MONDELL. That is my statement.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We have never at any time recognized such claims.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the fact that we have not recognized them legally alters the character of the claim one iota. The pioneer went to the western plains, and he went there with his family.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand.

Mr. MONDELL. He established his home. He was in the vicinity of Indian tribes. If two or three bloodthirsty marauders from one of those tribes broke loose and destroyed his property, he could collect; but if the entire tribe bore down upon him and wiped his property from the face of the earth this Government assumes that that tribe is a public enemy—the ward of the Government held to be the public enemy—think of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. Under the law he could not collect in either case.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not a dollar.

Mr. MONDELL. He could collect if the members of a tribe not at war with the Government destroyed his property.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. He could not collect for anything.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the only class of cases in which he can collect—where the Indians were not officially at war.

Mr. MANN. That law was passed long after the depredations had taken place.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question. The men who are deprived from presenting a claim against the Government for these depredations were never deprived of their right to recover against the tribe for them, were they?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman lives in the country where these Indian tribes roved, and he knows how utterly impossible it would be to collect against a tribe in cases of that character. The trouble is that we have treated the wards of the Government, when in open revolt as the public enemy, as if on any reasonable theory they could be so classified. They are all of them the wards of the Government, and what difference does it make whether the banner of revolt was raised by 50 men or by a marauding expedition organized by 5 men? The depredation was the same in either case, and the Government in justice and in righteousness is as much bound to pay in one case as in another. There has been nothing on the statute books of the Nation that constitutes a greater reflection upon the sense of fairness of the people of this Republic than the denial to the pioneers of the West of the right to recover for property destroyed by murderous marauding bands of the Government's wards.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman has made this speech twice, and I presume he is prepared to vote for this bill, but I doubt whether he will have the opportunity.

Mr. MONDELL. I will vote for it in any form, and the broader it is the more willing shall I be to vote for it.

Mr. JACKSON. I agree with the gentleman that it is not broad enough. The fact is that these men do not have any better right to recover on these claims than any man whose horse is stolen has a right to recover from the thief who has stolen it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we seem to have nothing else on hand unless somebody asks for the regular order. Reserving the right to object, the fact is that originally no person had the right to go into the Indian country at all under the law except by permission of the department, and when people went into the Indian country and determined to go into it, apparently contrary to the law, Congress passed a law—

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me, Mr. Speaker, right there?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. Congress passed a law that so much of the act entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30, 1834, as provides that the United States shall make indemnifications out of the Treasury for property taken or destroyed in certain cases by Indian tribes on white men as described in said act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

And the people who went into the Indian country after that law was passed took their chance as pioneers everywhere took their chance, some against sickness, disease, Indians, the Government doing the best it could to protect them, but with the distinct understanding that the Government was to make no indemnification to the pioneers who went into those countries, and my father was one who went into the western country. Now, they took the chance hoping they would receive their reward by the great benefits they obtained in the securing of the property.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with the gentleman's logic is that it is not, it seems to me, based on a true conception of the facts. The gentleman refers to people having gone into the Indian country. Now, there have been comparatively few claims for Indian depredations committed within what might properly be called the Indian country. There was a time when the Black Hills territory was Indian country and a man who went there was a trespasser and took his chance, but nine-tenths of the depredations that were committed on the western plains and in the western mountains were committed on lands subject to homestead settlement, lands opened by the Government to settlement, lands not the property of the Indian in any sense whatever. I know of no claim in my State that is founded on a depredation committed in territory that by any possible construction can be held to be Indian territory.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may not know of any claim, but a large portion of the claims involved under this bill are of the very character of which I spoke.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not believe there is a man on the floor of this House who would object to an amendment that would prohibit the payment of any claim for depredations committed in what was legally forbidden territory, or Indian territory, as the gentleman calls it. We are perfectly willing to eliminate them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One of the clauses of this bill itself shows clearly the objection of the gentleman from Illinois is not well taken. Beginning line 5, page 2, we have this language:

Provided, That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian territory.

Mr. MANN. I understand—

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How would it be possible—

Mr. MANN. What I said was, originally Congress passed a law forbidding people to go into Indian territory, and subsequently, when it was permitted to those people to go into this territory, they passed a law providing that they would not make indemnification. In the one case they were prohibited from going into the country; in the other case they were permitted to go in, with the express understanding that if damaged they would not be indemnified by the Government. If the gentleman has finally secured my idea, I think I am logical.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman permit me? What right has a man under the conditions which the gentleman from Illinois mentioned, and as mentioned by my friend the gentleman from Wyoming, who went on public land and refused to become a citizen of the United States, even though he went there to take land, if he refused to avail himself of the protection of the United States Government—what right has he now to come here and say that he is entitled to damages? Under the laws of Canada he would not be permitted to be upon the land at all.

Mr. MILLER. I want to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois, if I have an opportunity. If I understood him, he made the statement that originally we enacted legislation prohibiting people going in the Indian country. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House just what is constituted by law Indian country? If he is unable to do so, I will recall to him that it consisted of the western part of what is now the State of Tennessee, and that only.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. We have had that up and discussed it in the House before. Everyone else in the House, possibly except my distinguished friend from Minnesota, knows that the Indian country is not, and never was, confined to Tennessee.

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not say it was. I said the part designated by that act and by that treaty comprised a line drawn through the State of Tennessee and swept through the Indian country, what is now the western part of Tennessee, or then the western part of North Carolina, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says "that act." I will undertake to find for the gentleman, I think, a dozen acts referring to the Indian country and forbidding trespassing in the Indian country.

Mr. MILLER. Let us pass that. That was 1791. I will ask the gentleman—

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the act that I am talking about was not in 1791. The trouble with the gentleman is that he goes so far back, and I come down nearer 1911. That is the difficulty with the gentleman; he is not informed as to the acts since 1791. No wonder he does not know where the Indian country is. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. I will simply say in reply to the gentleman that I was going back in order to get started right and not going back to a way station.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois one more question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is asking me a question. I do not undertake to answer all these questions.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume the gentleman from Illinois has read the bill. He generally reads these bills with great care.

Mr. MANN. I am not seeking any advertisement.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois does not require any advertising. I shall not say that he advertises himself, because that would not be polite. [Laughter.] The bill says:

Provided, That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully in the Indian Territory.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will do me the honor to read my remarks in the RECORD, he will find that I have fully answered that proposition three times already.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is complaining that if we strike out the amity provision it would allow the payment of claims to men who were unlawfully in the Indian country—whatever that country may be. Whereas there is a prohibition against the payment of such claims.

Mr. ADAMSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Are we trying this case or only moving a continuance?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not pass on that.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole at some time, and in the proper way, and I shall have to object to the present consideration of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will call the next bill.

COURTHOUSE RESERVE AT POND CREEK, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 17119, granting the courthouse reserve at Pond Creek, Okla., to the city of Pond Creek for school and municipal purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17119) granting the courthouse reserve at Pond Creek, Okla., to the city of Pond Creek for school and municipal purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That block No. 43, designated "Courthouse reserve," in the town site of Round Pond, Okla., as appears from the official survey and plat thereof, approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on September 14, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, donated and granted to the city of Pond Creek, Okla., for municipal and school purposes, and that the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patent therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask something about this bill.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the facts are these: When what was known as the Cherokee Strip, now a part of the State of Oklahoma, was open for settlement in 1893, there were certain reserves for courthouses where there were Government town sites, and there was a Government town site reserved by proclamation of the President, at that time President Cleveland, in each county. In addition to the courthouse reserves, where there were Government town sites, there were certain park reserves. At what is now Pond Creek, which was design-nated at that time as Round Pond, by the proclamation of the President there was reserved for courthouse purposes a block as described in this bill, and subsequently, after statehood, the county seat was changed from Pond Creek to Medford. The county is no longer in need of this block for courthouse purposes, and they now desire to use it for school purposes. The town of Pond Creek is not large. This block is comparatively worthless for any other purpose than for public schools. The city, I am advised, has already voted bonds on the theory that this will be given to the city for a school site. They are simply waiting now to construct a school building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much did the United States turn over to Oklahoma for school purposes in the enabling act, $5,000,000?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. They got $5,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it reserved lands in various places, did it not?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, the $5,000,000 was in lieu of lands that we would be entitled to in the east end of the State, a section of country as large as the State of Indiana; but we could not get any school lands there because of the fact that it was all formerly an Indian reservation, and it was subsequently divided into Indian allotments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How large a town is Pond Creek?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Pond Creek, I should say, is a town of fifteen hundred or two thousand people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the State of Oklahoma volunteered to furnish the United States with sites for public buildings?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Well, that is entirely foreign to the subject matter of this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. My recollection is that on one day not very long since some gentleman from Oklahoma introduced bills, all in that one day, providing for the acquisition of sites in 13 different places in Oklahoma. If we are to adopt the policy of purchasing sites for Federal buildings and then giving to Oklahoma and its municipalities sites for school and municipal purposes when it is not possible in the House even to consider legislation for the purchase of property in the city of New York belonging to the United States, I should think it would be a very desirable thing to be a citizen of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is. [Laughter.] Nearly 3,000,000 people think so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is, Mr. Speaker, and I think that the State of Oklahoma has been generously treated by the United States. I doubt the propriety of passing this bill in this way, particularly in view of the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, which accompanies this bill, in which he says he is not sufficiently informed as to the facts to enable him to make a recommendation as to the propriety of the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. In that connection will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question—the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. How much land was reserved in this town site for parks, schools, and other public purposes?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There was very little. I think two or three blocks.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I have a letter here from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I can read it for the information of the gentleman. It will advise the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman state how much was reserved? It is a very simple matter.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The commissioner in his letter says:

Section 22 of the act of May 2, 1890 (26 Stat., 91), provides that all town-site surveys thereafter made shall contain reservations for parks, schools, and other public purposes, embracing in the aggregate not less than 10 nor more than 20 acres; "and patents for such reservations, to be maintained for such purposes, shall be issued to the towns respectively when organized as municipalities."

The proclamation was issued under authority of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 640), which, after making several reservations, further provided that—

"And the President of the United States, in any order or proclamation which he shall make for the opening of the lands for settlement, may make such other reservations of lands for public purposes as he may deem wise and desirable."

Under said proclamation block 43 in the plat of the official survey of the town site of Round Pond was designated "courthouse reserve," and contains 4 acres. Said town site embraces the land described in said proclamation as reserved for "County L," and the same is now within the limits of the town of Pond Creek. No patent has been issued to the country for said "courthouse reserve," and the legal title thereto is in the United States. I have no knowledge as to whether the county has placed any improvements thereon or has ever made any use of it, or whether it now contains any improvements. It is still covered by the reservation created by said proclamation and is not subject to adverse entry. Any use of it for other than the purpose for which it was reserved would, of course, be without authority of law and subject to further legislation. Its description is "block 43," designated "courthouse reserve," in the town site of Round Pond, Okla., as appears from the official survey and plat thereof approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on September 14, 1893.

Very respectfully,

S. V. PROUDFIT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. MANN. With all due deference to the gentleman, the letter does not answer the question I asked.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentlemen, as I understand it, wanted to know how much was reserved for courthouse, school, and other purposes?

Mr. MANN. How much was reserved for parks and schools?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not know that, but in this particular case it is 4 acres.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is in addition to the land reserved for schools and parks?

Mr. MANN. In this town are there 20 acres reserved for parks and schools?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not think so, but I think I am safe in saying that there were not 20 acres reserved.

Mr. MANN. There could not be less than 10 under the law—

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Or more than 20.

Mr. MANN. This was intended for the county seat?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It was. Under the law the Congress of the United States said it should be done. It is a matter of law. Whether it was or was not reserved does not make any difference, so far as the equity of this case is concerned.

Mr. MANN. It makes quite a difference when we have already given a town 20 acres for park and school purposes, and reserved a site for a county courthouse, and it has been determined not to have a county courthouse in that town because it is not the county seat any longer, whether in addition to that we should give this town that much more than was received by any other town.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It was reserved for a courthouse. It was not used for a courthouse because the county seat was taken to another town, and that town purchased land for a courthouse. Now, I ask that this block be turned over to the town, not for a courthouse, but for educational purposes. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. MANN. If another town got the county seat, and paid for a courthouse site in order to get it, does not the gentleman think that the equity would be to give that town the benefit of the value of this lot rather than to give it to this town which escaped the construction of a county courthouse?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The land is worth very little.

Mr. MANN. How much is it worth?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I should say two or three hundred dollars.

Mr. MANN. Then we had better keep it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Very well; if the gentleman wants to do it.

Mr. MANN. If it is not worth more than $200 or $300 the town ought not to have it.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know that I can add anything to what my colleague [Mr. McGUIRE] has said other than this: That the people of Pond Creek suffered quite a loss two years ago when the county seat was removed from their town.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who took it away?

Mr. FERRIS. It was done by a vote of the people. The county seat is no longer at Pond Creek. It is a town of 800 or 900 people. When it was designated as the county seat this block was reserved. They no longer have the county seat and this block is now needed for school purposes. I can not imagine why the Federal Government should want to hang onto it. It is not a large enough town to have a Federal building. If it was a large enough town for that, then it might be conceived that this land should be reserved for a Federal building site.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman state how much land was reserved in this town for school purposes or for public purposes?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not know how much was reserved. My recollection is that there is a park in addition to this courthouse square. I know that this block is very conveniently located for school purposes, but the location would never do for a Federal building. In addition to that, the chances are a thousand to one that there never will be a Federal building located in a town of a thousand people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman from Oklahoma believe that the House is entitled to know how much land was reserved in this town, and how much has been utilized by the town? There are only 900 people there, and in addition to these 4 acres they have already had some 10 or 20 acres additional for park and school purposes. It might be an injustice to the town not to dispose of this land and make it a part of the taxable area of the community. Not long ago we heard the argument advanced that as we were taking out of the taxable area of a small and not very rich community land for public purposes, the Federal Government should contribute to certain things that were not at all within the functions of the Federal Government.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me the question I am about to ask is the most important one in connection with this matter. The gentleman says this is in the Cherokee Strip.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It is in what is known as the Cherokee Strip.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, I want to know of the gentleman seriously whether there is any political significance in this measure? In other words, to make myself plainer, seeing a gentleman on the Democratic side and a gentleman on the Republican side advocating this measure, I wish to know whether the passage of this bill will have any tendency to diminish the number of reservations over on the "Cherokee Strip" in this House? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It will help transfer the "Cherokee Strip" from this side to the other side; and if it does not, there will be other things that will. [Laughter.]

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There will be no change until after the next election.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

ENROLLMENT AND LICENSES OF VESSELS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18001) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to simplify the issue of enrollments and licenses of vessels of the United States," approved April 24, 1906, is hereby amended by striking out the words "of 20 net register tons or over," so that it will read as follows:

"That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to consolidate into one document, in the case of any vessel of the United States, the form of enrollment prescribed by section 4319 of the Revised Statutes and the form of license prescribed by section 4321 of the Revised Statutes; and such consolidated form shall hereafter be issued to a vessel of the United States in lieu of the separate enrollment and license now prescribed by law, and shall be deemed sufficient compliance with the requirements of laws relating to the subject."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this bill has reference to what is known as the official list of vessels of the United States issued by the Bureau of Navigation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It has not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has no reference to vessels known as barges that have been refitted or built over?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It will not affect any vessels at all, except the smaller craft on the Great Lakes, and is intended to simplify the law. These vessels on the Great Lakes are now required to have a license and enrollment. This is to amend the law so that a consolidated document may be issued to them. It saves labor to the customs officers and the expense and annoyance to the vessel owners. According to the statement of the Commissioner of Navigation, there are now 3,285 vessels on the Great Lakes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it does not refer to barges refitted from sailing vessels, which are now rapidly disappearing from the coastwise trade, I have no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not refer to such vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make this statement: As this affects primarily vessels now on the Great Lakes, in addition to the letter from the Secretary in the report, I asked the Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. Chamberlain, in regard to this bill, and he informed me that this would not require the enrollment or license of any vessel which is not now required to be enrolled or licensed; and that the only effect of the bill, if enacted into law, would be to consolidate the two documents now required, one of enrollment and one of license, into one document; that it would not add in any way to the requirements of existing law in reference to vessels, but would be of advantage to them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 4475 be substituted for the House bill, as it is identical in form and has passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 4475, of like tenor, be considered and the House bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAW RELATING TO PATENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7711) to amend section 4889 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4889 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4889. When the nature of the invention admits of illustration by drawings, the applicant shall furnish one drawing signed by the inventor or his attorney in fact, and attested by two witnesses, and also such additional copies, photographic or otherwise, of such drawings as the Commissioner of Patents may prescribe, which shall be filed in the Patent Office; and a copy of the drawing, to be furnished by the Patent Office, shall be attached to the patent as a part of the specification."

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1911, and shall not apply to any application filed prior to that date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ESCH. Reserving the right to object, as I understand the reading of the bill it says that it is to go into effect on July 1, 1911.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "eleven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, GA.

The next business was the bill (S. 4551) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Savannah River, at or near the mouth of Stevens Creek, between the counties of Edgefield, S. C., and Columbia, Ga.," approved August 5, 1909.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time in which to complete the actual construction of the dam authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Savannah River, at or near the mouth of Stevens Creek, between the counties of Edgefield, S. C., and Columbia, Ga.," approved August 5, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, extended until August 5, 1915.

With the following amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "fifteen," insert: "Provided, That such dam shall be constructed, maintained, and operated in accordance with an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906, as amended by an act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 23, 1910."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "An act to extend the time for completion of a dam across the Savannah River, at or near the mouth of Stevens Creek, between the counties of Edgefield, S. C., and Columbia, Ga., authorized by an act approved August 5, 1909."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1680) to enable the city of Phoenix, in Maricopa County, Ariz., to apply a portion of the proceeds derived from the sale of its sewer bonds to the purchase of the sewer system of the Phoenix Sewer & Drainage Co. in said city.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Phoenix, situated in the county of Maricopa, Territory of Arizona, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to use and apply $60,000 of the proceeds of its issue of $400,000 of sewer bonds to the purchase of the existing sewer system now owned and operated in said city by the Phoenix Sewer & Drainage Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it may not be necessary to take up this bill, since the consent of the Federal Government may not be necessary to the disposition of the funds of Phoenix, because of the fact that Arizona has come into the Union as a State.

Mr. MANN. We have nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. MADDEN. We have nothing to do with it, and I suggest that it be stricken from the calendar. I object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 18792) for the relief of homestead entrymen under the reclamation projects in the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no qualified entryman who prior to June 25, 1910, made bona fide entry upon lands proposed to be irrigated under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, the national reclamation law, and who established residence in good faith upon the lands entered by him, shall be subject to contest for failure to maintain residence or make improvements upon his land prior to the time when water is available for the irrigation of the lands embraced in his entry, but all such entrymen shall, within 90 days after the issuance of the public notice required by section 4 of the reclamation act, fixing the date when water will be available for irrigation, file in the local land office a water-right application for the irrigable lands embraced in his entry, in conformity with the public notice and approved farm-unit plat for the township in which his entry lies, and shall also file an affidavit that he has reestablished his residence on the land with the intention of maintaining the same for a period sufficient to enable him to make final proof: Provided, That no such entryman shall be entitled to have counted as part of the required period of residence any period of time during which he was not actually upon the said land prior to the date of the notice aforesaid, and no application for the entry of said lands shall be received until after the expiration of the 90 days after the issuance of notice within which the entryman is hereby required to reestablish his residence and apply for water right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I noticed in the thirteenth line of the second page it is provided that no application for the entry of said lands shall be received after the expiration of 90 days after the issuance of notice. What sort of application for entry is in the mind of the gentleman from Colorado in making that provision?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, section 4 of the reclamation act requires the Secretary of the Interior to give public notice of the date when water will be available for the irrigation of the lands under each project, and the provision in this bill to which the gentleman from South Dakota refers is inserted to allow the homestead entrymen within all the various reclamation projects 90 days' time after the issuance of that notice within which to get back on the land, reestablish their residence, and apply for a water right. In other words, that provision prevents anyone else besides the original entryman from filing on his land during that 90 days. The land is not jumpable during that period. No other application to enter the land will or can be received until after the expiration of that 90 days.

Mr. MANN. So that nobody else could get in.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is to prevent adverse claims being filed during that time?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir; no adverse claimant will be permitted to make an entry until after the 90 days' time allowed the original homesteader to get back and reestablish himself on his land. That provision is a limitation against the assertion of adverse claims, any kind of interference with the entryman's rights, and also a limitation of time within which he must get back and assert his rights.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say to the gentlemen that it is a limitation in this, that the entryman can not in the interval relinquish his right to another party.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In other words, no entry whatever can be made during that 90-day period.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the intent of the law.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the author of the bill [Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado] a question. It strikes me 90 days is a rather short time. I do not see any substantial objections to giving him 6 months to get back on the land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say to my colleague that that time is rather short, but the officials in the Interior Department were of the opinion that 60 days' time after the notice was given would be sufficient. I thought it ought to be at least 4 months, but the Public Lands Committee decided that 3 months was long enough, so I agreed to it.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. In line 8 of the bill should not the word "not" be inserted after the word "shall"?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will look at line 3 I think he will see that the grammatical construction is correct.

Mr. FERRIS. That is all right.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House I will briefly explain the objects of this bill and the necessity for this legislation.

Owing to the unexpected and unavoidable delay in the construction and completion of the various reclamation projects throughout the western part of the United States, and to relieve the homestead settlers under those reclamation projects from the useless hardships of trying to maintain residence upon and cultivate their respective claims before any water was available, Congress passed the act approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act granting leaves of absence to homesteaders on lands to be irrigated under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902" (Public, No. 314), which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all qualified entrymen who have heretofore made bona fide entry upon lands proposed to be irrigated under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, known as the national irrigation act, may, upon application and a showing that they have made substantial improvements and that water is not available for the irrigation of their said lands, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, obtain leave of absence from their entries until water for irrigation is turned into the main irrigation canals from which the land is to be irrigated: Provided, That the period of actual absence under this act shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law. (36 U. S. Stat., 864.)

I took an active part in the passage of that law, and it was the intention and belief of the Public Lands Committee and the Members from the States in which those reclamation projects are situated that that act would amply protect the rights of the entrymen and relieve them from all requirements of residence and cultivation until such time as the Government completed each project and was in position to furnish water for irrigation to the homestead settlers thereunder. And the Secretary of the Interior, on September 13, 1910, issued to the registers and receivers of the United States land offices a "Circular of instructions under the reclamation acts of June 11, 23, and 25, 1910, relative to entry assignments, leaves of absence, etc.," which was undoubtedly intended to carry out the intentions of Congress in the enactment of that law. But notwithstanding the passage of that act, the Secretary of the Interior, on July 12, 1910, rendered a decision denying the petition of W. L. McLaughlin and others, of Montrose, Colo., for the relief of the homestead entrymen within the Uncompahgre Valley irrigation project, and thereby substantially, if not directly, limited the effect and operation of that act to such an extent that neither the Government officials nor the attorneys generally now consider that law broad enough or sufficiently specific to fully protect the rights of the entrymen; and thereupon the Government agents proceeded to contest in the United States land office at Montrose, Colo., the rights of some 150 homestead entrymen under the Uncompahgre project, upon the ground of their failure to continue residence and cultivation on their claims, when there was no possibility of their being able to obtain any water for the irrigation of their lands for many years to come.

For the purpose of protecting the undisputed rights of those homestead settlers under that particular project I introduced House bill 9839 on May 18, 1911. That bill was referred by the Public Lands Committee to the Secretary of the Interior for his opinion and report thereon. On August 3, 1911, the Secretary rendered a report saying, in part, that—

The records of the General Land Office show that nearly 150 adverse reports have been submitted by special agents of that office against entries in this project, owing to the fact that the entrymen have failed to comply with the requirements of the homestead law as to residence and cultivation. Inasmuch as it is admitted that cultivation of these lands was utterly impossible without water, and as no water has been available for the lands embraced in many of the entries made under this project, it would seem to be at least harsh to enforce the strict letter of the homestead law and cancel these entries.

The department is of the opinion that entrymen who have in good faith made entries in the belief that the Government would furnish a suitable supply of water within a reasonable time are entitled to favorable consideration, and as the proposed law will afford a proper measure of relief I have no objection to offer to its enactment.

In the meantime, and until action is taken by Congress on this bill, the department will not cancel any of the entries for failure to comply with the requirements as to residence and cultivation.

While the action of the Secretary in suspending those contests temporarily protects or holds in abeyance the rights of those homesteaders, pending action by Congress on that bill, yet that only applied to that particular project and afforded no relief to the settlers under any of the other projects. Thereupon, in the fall of 1911, the Government agents proceeded to prosecute contests against some of the homestead entrymen under the Grand Valley High Line project in Colorado. For the purpose of guarding those settlers against these contests, upon the reconvening of Congress on December 6, 1911, I introduced House bill 14665, for the relief of the homestead entrymen under the Grand Valley High Line project in my State. The Public Lands Committee referred that bill to the Secretary of the Interior for his opinion and report, and on December 18, 1911, the Secretary transmitted to the Committee his report saying, in part, that—

The department is of the opinion that entrymen who made entries in the belief that the Government would furnish a suitable supply of water within a reasonable time, and who make showing, as provided by the proposed bill, that the entry was made in good faith and not for speculative purposes, and that they have established residence on the land and placed valuable and permanent improvements thereon, are entitled to favorable consideration, and as the proposed law will afford a proper measure of relief, I have no objection to offer to its enactment.

The department will not cancel, for failure to comply with the requirements as to residence and cultivation, any of the entries on this project, which it is intended to protect by this bill, until after the end of the present session of Congress.

After the receipt of that report the committee took up for consideration jointly H. R. 9839 and H. R. 14665 and appointed a subcommittee to confer with the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the necessity or advisability of making the legislation general and applicable to all homestead entrymen under all the various reclamation projects in the United States, instead of confining it to the two projects in Colorado. After extended conferences by the subcommittee among themselves and with the department officials the Secretary made a third report, recommending that the act be made general. On receipt of that report the full Committee on the Public Lands again took up the consideration of the subject at two different sittings and coincided with the Secretary in the recommendation that the act should be made a general law, applicable to all the reclamation projects in the United States. For the purpose of carrying out that determination and making the proposed law sufficiently specific to fully and unquestionably protect the legal rights of all bona fide entrymen under all the 32 reclamation projects until such time as water is available for the irrigation of their lands, the committee unanimously agreed upon the appropriate amendments, and in the amended form I reintroduced this general bill (H. R. 18792), which is indorsed by the entire committee in its present form. This proposed act is not intended to repeal or amend the act of June 25, 1910, but is supplemental thereto and intended to definitely grant the relief which it was hoped and intended that act would accomplish.

It is fully recognized by the Government officials and everyone else that it would be not only utterly useless, but almost inhuman, to try to compel settlers to remain upon barren desert lands for many years before there is any water to irrigate them. Improvements would be worthless and the raising of crops impossible. Many of the settlers have been compelled to haul water many miles for domestic purposes. Many of the settlers have been reduced to destitution, besides enduring untold hardships and depriving their children of schooling facilities in their efforts to hold on to their claims.

The effect of the passage of this bill will be that no qualified entryman who, prior to June 25, 1910, made bona fide entry upon lands proposed to be irrigated under a reclamation project, and who established residence in good faith upon the land entered by him, shall be subject to contest for failure to maintain residence or make improvements upon his land prior to the time when water is available for the irrigation of the lands embraced in his entry. But no such entryman shall be entitled to have counted as part of the required five-years period of residence any period of time during which he was not actually upon his land.

The Secretary of the Interior expressly decides in these matters that residence and cultivation upon the land before the water is obtainable is not only useless but impossible. Neither the law nor common sense requires anyone to do an utterly useless thing. Practically all of these homestead settlers are poor people. They can not conduct litigation with the Government. And, in the opinion of the committee, every person who was a qualified entryman and made a bona fide filing upon land under reclamation projects, and thereafter in good faith established his residence upon the land, should not be compelled to litigate either with the Government or private individuals to maintain his rights, or to prove residence or cultivation at any period prior to the time when water is available for the land. The passage of this bill will be an act of simple fairness and equity between the Government and the homesteaders, and it will relieve thousands of worthy settlers from harrassing, vexatious, and utterly unwarranted contests and litigation, and will tend to the speedy and orderly development of the country under each of the numerous reclamation projects throughout the Western States.

The bill is preeminently just and necessary, and I hope it will pass without amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENTS BY CERTAIN HOMESTEADERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3475) extending the time of payments to certain homesteaders on the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore made a homestead entry for land which was formerly a part of the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, or the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, authorized by the act approved May 29, 1908, may apply to the register and receiver of the land office in the district or districts in which the land is located for an extension of time within which to make payment of any amount that is about to become due, and upon the payment of interest for one year in advance, at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due, and payment will be extended for a period of one year, and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment is due; that all moneys paid for interest as herein provided shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians as a part of the proceeds received for the lands.

SEC. 2. That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payment at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided, will forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid adverse claim initiated prior to the passage of this act.

The committee amendments were as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "due," strike out "and" and insert "such."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "payment," strike out the words "is due" and insert "becomes due by the terms of the act under which the entry was made."

Page 2, line 9, after the word "lands," add: "And provided further, That any entryman who has resided upon and cultivated the land embraced in his entry for the period of time required by law in order to make commutation proof may make proof, and if the same is approved further residence and cultivation will not be required, but patent shall be withheld until full and final payment of the purchase price is made in accordance with the provisions hereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether the last amendment proposed by the committee has been submitted to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I will say it has not.

Mr. MANN. Well, I would like to ask whether this would be the effect of the amendment if agreed to, that whereas now a man is required to live on his homestead for five years, unless he commutes and pays for the land before that time, that under this amendment he would have the liberty of removing from the land at the end of two years, or whatever time it is—two years—and not require him to live on it the rest of the time until the five years were up?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Upon the payment of interest at 5 per cent in advance upon each payment as it became due, and I want to say to the gentleman that this is not really and should not be a homestead proposition in the sense that we apply the application of the homestead law to the public domain. These are Indian lands. The law provided that the lands should be appraised and disposed of in tracts of 160 acres each to settlers under the homestead law. The lands were appraised at a maximum price of $6 per acre, a price that was excessive, in my opinion—much greater than it is possible for the settler to pay and comply with the requirements of the law to the extent of living there for five years. These settlers who made entry paid in advance one-fifth of the purchase price at the time they filed. There was absolutely no crop whatever grown in the years 1910 and 1911 in that section of the country where these lands are located. It was so dry last year, I may say, that the grass did not even start in the spring. There was no vegetation at all until along in the month of September, when they had rain. Now, then, these lands, those appraised at the maximum price, as I say, were sold at $6 an acre.

It is a physical impossibility for the people who have made these entries under the adverse circumstances, some of which

I have referred to, to remain upon the land and make their living for five years, and unless we pass some such remedial legislation as this they will abandon the lands and forfeit what they have paid. Then, at some later date, the lands, I presume, will be reappraised and they will probably sell at one-half, if not less, than what these people who have filed upon them have contracted to pay. Under the law as it is at present, after they have resided upon their homestead for 14 months they may commute and pay the balance of the purchase price and receive a patent for their land, and thereafter, of course, they are not required to reside thereon. Unfortunately the lands are not of sufficient value so it is possible for a man to borrow the amount of money that would be necessary to pay the commutation price, namely, $4.80 an acre on the $6 land. This bill simply does this: In addition to extending the time of the payment of the purchase price, after a man has lived upon his homestead the time required to make the commutation proof, it provides that then he may be excused from continuing further residence and improvement upon the land and be entitled to the extension by paying 5 per cent interest in advance upon the amount due, thereby making it possible for a settler to go elsewhere and earn money to pay this balance of $4.80, if that is the amount, as it would be on the land sold at $6 per acre, thus giving the Indians the benefit of the sale of the land at $6 an acre. And in regard to the extension, if the settler was to come in under 14 months and pay this balance of the purchase price, it would go into the Treasury to the credit of the Indians and draw interest at 3 per cent per annum. In order to take advantage of this extension the settler is required to pay interest in advance at 5 per cent per annum, thereby benefiting the Indian to the extent of 2 per cent per annum. It does seem to me that it is a wise provision. And, so far as what the department may think about it, I do not believe it is a question that makes any difference or ought to make any difference to this House as to what that opinion might be. It seems to me it is a proposition that is so fair and so reasonable and so just, not only to the settlers but a proposition that is a good one for the Indians, that it ought to be permitted to become a law.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. All right.

Mr. FERRIS. I asked the gentleman to yield that I might make the observation that even though the proof has been submitted and the Land Office is satisfied at the end of 14 months, which is the commutation period, no title passes to the purchaser until every cent of the Indian's money is paid, with all interest. And that preserves the Indian fund and does not do a thing except release the purchaser from the rigorous provisions of the homestead law, which he ought not to be subjected to so long as he pays for the land in cash.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman seems to assume that this is a matter wholly between the Indian fund and the settlers. The Government has expended a large amount of money in the purchase of a portion of this land for public donation for school and other purposes in order to open up this land to homestead entry. It may be that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] should go into the law, but it absolutely reverses the policy of the Government from the beginning of the homestead laws down to date, and I am unwilling to let such an amendment go through the House by unanimous consent until, at least, we have the opinion of the Land Office in regard to it.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit me, this does not reverse or change the policy of the Government.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of opinion. I think it does.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me say to the gentleman here that I think it does not, and I am sure I am so familiar with homestead proceedings in the West that I can not be mistaken about that. The law of commutation prevails over a great portion of the West, and the law of commutation prevails all over our State.

Mr. MANN. I am aware of that. On the other hand, the Government opened this land under the homestead law, and unless the land is paid for the homesteader must live on the land for the required five years as he lives upon other land where he obtains it without price at all. In both cases the commutation may be made, but the same argument can be made in behalf of some poor fellow who has taken a homestead claim at some desert portion of the country, stayed there 14 months, and then, say, let him go and make a living until the end of five years and then give him title to the land.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman permit? Does not he make any distinction between the man who pays cash for land and the man who pays nothing for land as to how the provisions of the law should be applied to him? In one case he gets it for nothing and in other cases he pays $6, which is all it is worth.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In this instance the settler gains nothing by a full five-year residence. He must pay the price, no matter when he pays it.

Mr. MANN. I understand the country derives a value from having settlers live upon the land, and that when we pay an exorbitant price, as we did for the school lands in these sections to donate for school purposes, in order to throw the land open to homestead entry, we did it with a view of having people settle on the land, so that there should be a population there to cultivate the soil.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we made an appropriation to pay for sections 16 and 36 in this section of country, that was formerly Indian reservation, at $2.50 an acre.

Mr. MANN. We were only supposed to pay $1.25.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The question of homestead settlement was not considered at all; it was simply carrying out the solemn obligation of the Government, the enabling act admitting South Dakota into the Union having guaranteed to the State sections 16 and 36 in all of the Indian reservations.

Mr. MANN. And we had agreed to pay $1.25 an acre, and we paid $2.50 an acre.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That has nothing to do with it. The only question there is whether or not we will allow these poor settlers, who have paid one-fifth of the purchase price, to go away after they have lived upon the land 14 months and earn money to pay the balance of the purchase price, and thereby try to save what he has already invested, or whether we will say, by refusing to legislate, that they will have to comply strictly with the law as it now exists, which means that 95 per cent of them will abandon the country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my beloved friend from South Dakota did not hear, or does not remember, one of the statements in President Washington's Farewell Address, where he said that it would often happen under the stress of some hard circumstance that we would be asked to change the law, and thereby create a precedent which would be of inestimable damage to the Republic.

That is this case exactly, and unless the gentleman will submit this to the department and present to the House the department's opinion, whether it be favorable or unfavorable, I will not consent to have the bill passed by unanimous consent without amendment. The gentleman can probably take it up later on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman contend that the propriety of legislation depends on the position taken by the departments on the several bills that come before the House?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think that question is worthy of an answer, and therefore I will not answer it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, considering the present attitude of the gentleman from Illinois in this discussion, I will ask unanimous consent that this matter be passed over.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, under the rules the gentleman can place the bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar the second time.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Can that be done if it is objected to?

Mr. MANN. Yes, it can; otherwise I would feel differently about it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not care to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is stricken from the docket. The gentleman has the right to reinstate it once, but not twice.

CLASSIFICATION AND APPRAISEMENT OF UNALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 49) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be classified and appraised, in such manner as he may deem advisable, the unallotted or otherwise unreserved lands within any Indian reservation opened to settlement and entry which were not classified and appraised in the manner provided for in the act or acts opening such reservations to settlement and entry.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from South Dakota give us an explanation of this measure?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that if he will examine the report—and if he has not done so I will call his attention to it—he will find that the report on the bill explains in detail the purposes of the bill. The gentleman will remember that in these reservations where the surplus land has been authorized to be sold in recent years the law provides for a board of appraisers to appraise the land, and all of these bills, so far as I remember, limited the existence of the board of appraisers to six months, and they were obliged to complete their appraisal within that time.

Now, that was done and the lands were appraised. It subsequently transpired that there were occasional tracts, for instance, those which had been erroneously allotted, or a few isolated tracts that were overlooked by the appraisers, and there are a few tracts in some of these reservations that there is no claim to, and yet under the law they can not be disposed of. The purpose of this bill is simply to enable the Secretary of the Interior to appraise them and to fix the price at which they may be disposed of under the homestead law.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the Indian Office hold that it has no authority to make appraisals unless they have made them within the time prescribed in the acts?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Within six months after the passage of the acts. The only provision in the law is that the appraisal must be made by a commission, and it must be done in six months.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the thought I had in my mind when I rose to interrogate the gentleman: There are Indian reservations which have been opened to settlement and entry recently where there was no definite or specific provision for classification. This bill seems to be general in character. Query: What view would the Indian Office take of a reservation in my State, for instance? I do not recall anything in the bill covering the opening of those reservations which called for any particular classification. There was no such thing as an appraisal or classification of the lands.

Mr. MANN. Then this bill would not apply to it.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, possibly not. But the gentleman, perhaps, is aware of the curious interpretation of departments in matters of legislation.

Mr. MANN. Well, I subside when the gentleman recalls that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I assume no reasonable man would say it would apply to a reservation that it does not apply to in express terms, but still it is so general in its character that I am a little afraid that the department might start out to make some kind of an appraisal or classification in reservations where no provision therefore has been made.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the language in the bill? The amendment inserts the word "hereafter," so that this would apply only to land heretofore opened to settlement and entry and classified and appraised in the manner provided for in the act or acts opening such reservations to settlement and entry.

The department says there are at this time small areas of unclassified and unappraised land within the former Cœur d'Alene Reservation and within those parts of the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Reservations that were opened to settlement and entry last year. These tracts were omitted from the schedule of classification and appraisal by reason of being included within Indian allotments which were subsequently suspended, or within lands relinquished by Indians for the purpose of changing their allotments.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman remembers that the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming was opened to settlement and entry some years ago. There was no specific provision for classification or appraisal of these lands.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, this bill would not apply to these lands.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is sure that the bill would not apply to these lands?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am very confident of it.

Mr. MANN. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to reclassify where the lands have been erroneously classified.

Mr. MONDELL. There has been no classification made. They were being disposed of in accordance with law, and I assume that no one has a disposition to apply this law to these lands; but I should like to have it appear, at least that the gentlemen who are responsible for the legislation—

Mr. MANN. That is the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we are not fortunate enough to be Members of that exalted body.

Mr. MANN. We are fortunate enough not to be.

Mr. MONDELL. As the gentleman desires to have it. His judgment is generally better than mine. If the gentleman is very sure that the department will not attempt to apply this to cases where there was no specific provision for allotment and appraisal, I shall not object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I can not promise the gentleman what the department may do, but I can assure the gentleman that this bill will not give them any authority to make any such claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 405, now upon the Union Calendar, for House bill 49, it being identically the same as this bill and having been reported by the committee, and that the House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 405 be substituted for House bill 49, and that House bill 49, of identical tenor, be laid upon the table. Is there objection to the request to consider the Senate bill instead of the House bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the Senate bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be classified or reclassified and appraised or reappraised, in such manner as he may deem advisable, the unallotted or otherwise unreserved lands within any Indian reservation opened to settlement and entry but not classified and appraised in the manner provided for in the act or acts opening such reservations to settlement and entry, or where the existing classification or appraisal is, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, erroneous.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. In line 7, page 1.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In line 7, page 1, after the word "reservation," insert the word "heretofore."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 1, after the word "reservation," insert the word "heretofore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT BEMIDJI, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16837) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Bemidji, Minn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Minnesota & International Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Mississippi River at a point in the northwest quarter of section 16, township 146, range 33 west, at or near Bemidji, in Beltrami County, State of Minnesota, suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 7, page 1, after the word "point," insert the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

In lines 10 and 11, page 1, strike out the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, in line 7, after the word "point," insert the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, in line 11, strike out the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is an amendment to the title.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Minnesota & International Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Bemidji, Minn."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SETTLERS UPON CERTAIN LAND GRANTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18964) to amend section 6 of the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908, entitled "An act authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That all persons being then qualified homesteaders and who, under an order issued by the Land Department bearing date October 22, 1891, and taking effect November 2, 1891, made settlement upon and improved any portion of an odd-numbered section within the conflicting limits of the grants made in aid of the construction of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway and the Wisconsin Central Railroad, and were thereafter prevented from completing title to the lands so settled upon and improved by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Wisconsin Central Railroad Co. v. Forsythe (159 U. S., p. 46), shall be entitled to select and receive patent to other lands, not exceeding one quarter section, subject to homestead appropriation, and in making such selection shall be given credit for the full period of their actual residence upon and the amount of their improvements made on the lands for which they were unable to complete title: Provided, That such credit shall not extend beyond the date of judgments in ejectment against such settlers rendered by the courts. In the event of the death of any person who, if living, would be entitled to the benefits of this act, the right to make such selection and to receive such credit shall inure to those persons only who, under the homestead laws, would be entitled, upon the death of a homestead entryman, to complete and receive title to a homestead initiated by him: Provided, That this act shall not be considered as entitling any person to the benefits of its provisions who shall have received title, under the homestead laws, to one quarter section of land since being prevented, as aforesaid, from completing title to the lands, as aforesaid, settled upon and improved by him, and the rights hereby conferred shall be accepted in full satisfaction of all rights under the homestead laws. In the event that a beneficiary of this act shall be able to establish by his affidavit, corroborated by two witnesses having knowledge of the facts, whether such affidavits have been heretofore or may hereafter be executed, that the period of residence had and the amount of improvements made on the land to which he was unable to complete title, as aforesaid, prior to the date of his ejectment therefrom would have been sufficient to have entitled him, upon the payment of the fees and commissions required by law, to a patent to such land had the Government been in position to grant such patent, such beneficiary shall, in making the selection hereby authorized, be relieved from compliance with the provisions of section 2290 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; but in all cases where the residence and improvements on the original canceled claim, prior to the date of ejectment therefrom, were for a less period than five years such beneficiaries of this act, in making application for new entry hereby authorized, shall comply with all the provisions of the homestead laws and reside upon and improve such second entry to such an extent as, when such residence and improvement is added to the period for which credit is given under this act, the same will equal a full compliance with the homestead laws: Provided, That in all selections or entries made under provisions of this act the fees and commissions required by law shall be fully paid: And provided further, That all applications or entries heretofore made under section 6 of the act of May 29, 1908, which substantially complied with the provisions of said act as hereby amended, be, and the same are hereby, approved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he thinks this bill will accomplish the purpose sought for, Congress having three times tried its hand at it without success?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I hope it will. We have tried very hard to draft this bill so that it will afford the relief to those 80 or 100 homestead entrymen who were deprived of their homes by the errors of the Interior Department and give them another entry. We believe this will do so. I may say that this matter has been submitted to the department, and the legal officials have given it careful and exhaustive examination.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman not have the report from the department?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Because they have reported upon it two or three times before, and they have always recommended that remedial legislation be granted for the purpose of affording those homestead entrymen the right to make another homestead entry. When the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] passed the bill in 1908 the Secretary of the Interior reported that the purpose of the bill would serve to give these people the needed relief. I am now, and by this bill, endeavoring to carry out that intention and afford remedial legislation at this time.

The bill I passed about two years ago for the relief of these people was held insufficient. I do not agree with that decision, but I do not have the deciding of the matter, and I have tried to make the language of this bill broad and specific enough to accomplish what Congress has all along intended and what the Interior Department has repeatedly recommended. It seems to me the objects and justice of this bill ought to appeal to everyone who will look into the merits of the matter.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, Congress passed an act in 1904 which did not accomplish the purpose. In 1908 a new bill was introduced for the purpose of carrying into effect what was intended to be done by the act of 1904, and the department was asked for an opinion, and the opinion is printed in the report. Following that opinion we passed the act of 1908 for the purpose of carrying out the intent of the act of 1904. We did not succeed, and thereupon we passed an act in 1910 to carry out the purpose of the act of 1908, the purpose of that act being to carry out the purpose of the act of 1904. Now we have the fourth trial, and it seems to me that before we pass the fourth act on the subject we had better get in advance the opinion of the department that is to enforce the act.

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to think that the mistake we have made heretofore was in accepting the department's draft of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that the department drafted the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. They thought they knew what was desired and what was necessary, and on at least one former occasion we accepted their draft of the bill; but when we came to enact the bill into law it was discovered that it did not mean exactly what we thought it meant at the time we passed it. The attitude of the department in regard to the matter is now, as I understand it, that if we really want to accomplish what we started out to accomplish several years ago we must have this legislation. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse] started this good work, and we concluded it would be well to frame a bill in the hope that we can now accomplish what we have been endeavoring so long to accomplish.

There is nothing in the bill that is objectionable, providing that we agree to the proposition that those people who were deprived of their homes and farms by a decision of the Supreme Court shall be placed in exactly the same position now in regard to homestead entry that they were in when they were ousted from their lands in Wisconsin. That is all we have endeavored to do, and we believe that we have finally reported a bill that will accomplish this highly meritorious purpose.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me from the reading of the bill that you have accomplished considerably more than that and given to these men a second right of homestead entry, although they may have practically exhausted their first right, not on this land, but on some other land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. I am quite sure the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have great faith in both gentlemen, but having tried three times, and now admitting their failure, I do not feel like taking their opinion the fourth time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman will remember that I called his attention to the fact that heretofore the department has had something to do with framing the legislation, but we have not agreed as to interpretation.

Mr. MANN. I do not so understand.

Mr. MONDELL. I have had something to do with this legislation, and my recollection is that we have heretofore largely followed the department's suggestions in regard to the form of legislation.

Mr. MANN. The latest report we have from the department was in 1908, and since then we have passed two acts on the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me? I was in charge of the bill reported in 1910, and at that time we had an elaborate report, which I have not copied here—

Mr. MANN. Why has not the gentleman put it in this report?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Because the old report is full and specific.

Mr. MANN. Then, the one in 1910 was not full and elaborate, because this is not. Neither of them is full and elaborate. I think we are entitled to the opinion of the department about technical matters relating to work in the department.

I do not say that we should follow their bill, which they prepare, or their opinion. I think that a committee is guilty of neglect if it does not itself carefully scan a bill, although the draft of it may have been made in the department; but that is no reason why the Members of the House should not have the opinion of the department in relation to legislation directly affecting the work of that department. I served notice in this House some time ago that I would not permit the passage by unanimous consent of bills reported after that time which were properly referable to departments where no such reference had been made, and I am going to insist upon that now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I understand from the gentleman's remarks that when this bill was up before it was accompanied by a report.

Mr. MANN. Which time?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The last time—1910.

Mr. MANN. No; there was no report.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Then 1908 or 1904—whatever time it was.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Nineteen hundred and ten also.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And the gentleman approved of this bill at that time.

Mr. KENDALL. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I have not made any such statement as that. This bill was not before the House at that time.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. A similar bill—

Mr. MANN. Quite a different bill.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Undertaking to accomplish the same object. Does not the gentleman realize this is a meritorious bill? It needs only the confirmation of the department. Since the gentleman himself said that this bill ought to pass—

Mr. MANN. I am satisfied that this bill in the shape it is ought not to pass.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Then, does the gentleman yield his opinion to the opinion of the department?

Mr. MANN. I might, if I had it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not a fact that the gentleman never does yield his opinion to the department?

Mr. MANN. I frequently yield my opinion to gentlemen who can give me information. Can the gentleman from Colorado do that?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Certainly not; and I defy anybody to give the gentleman from Illinois any information.

Mr. MANN. That is the gentleman's position and I think it is correct, so far as he is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CERTIFIED CHECKS DRAWN ON NATIONAL AND STATE BANKS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13679) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the receipt of certified checks drawn on national and State banks for duties on imports and internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to authorize the receipt of certified checks drawn on national and State banks for duties on imports and internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a section to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, direct the collectors and others receiving checks under this act, or otherwise, to deposit the same in depository banks to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, and the Secretary may authorize the transfer of such deposits to the credit of disbursing officers in subtreasury cities and Washington as elsewhere."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CANAL AT SEATTLE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 17242) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Wisconsin, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington, at a point at or near the head of Salmon Bay suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Wisconsin, and having authority under the said laws to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the waterway connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington, at a point at or near the head of Salmon Bay, is hereby authorized to cross and occupy with said structure the right of way owned by the United States adjacent to and along said waterway, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may deem equitable and fair to the public, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906."

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I observe that on the first page, line 5, of the bill, the railway company was to be authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, and so forth. The authority was to be to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and so forth, across the canal. As reported, the amendment asserts that the railway company already has that right, having authority under the laws of Wisconsin to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the waterway. The authority which was asked for in the original bill is assumed in the amendment, and then the amendment proceeds to give this company authority to construct and occupy with said structure the right of way owned by the United States adjacent to and alongside of the waterway. That is considerably more authority than was asked for in the original bill. It proposes to give the railway company the right not only to build across the canal, but to occupy with said structure the right of way owned by the United States adjacent to and along said waterway. What is the object in changing the whole apparent intent of the bill in that way?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he has read the report of the Chief of Engineers, accompanying the bill?

Mr. COOPER. No; but I saw an extract from a letter by the Assistant Chief of Engineers.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can state briefly to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the bill was drawn by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], under a misapprehension of the situation. The exact situation was called to his attention by the report of the Secretary of War on this bill, a report made in response to our reference of the bill to the War Department, suggesting that the bill be amended as we have reported it. The reply was that authority had been given last summer by the War Department under the river and harbor act of 1899, and specifications had been approved for a bridge across the canal just as proposed in the original draft of the bill. The difficulty now existing and then existing, and provided for by the amendment as suggested, was that the Government owned the right of way along the canal, and the approval then was made on the condition that the railroad should secure from Congress at this session permission to cross the strip itself on which the Government owned the right of way, which the War Department had no authority to grant. If the gentleman will notice the amendment, it provides that the right is granted on terms to be fixed by the Secretary of War. Of course they should pay something for the right to build the bridge and approaches across the right of way belonging to the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, I notice that the bill as amended provides that the Northern Pacific Railway Co.—

Mr. ADAMSON. One moment, is the gentleman from Wisconsin sufficiently answered?

Mr. COOPER. I will wait until the gentleman from Wyoming concludes.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee amendment says that the Northern Pacific Railway Co. is a corporation organized under the laws of Wisconsin and having authority under the said laws to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the waterway connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington at Seattle. In what manner could the laws of Wisconsin authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to build a bridge and approaches across the channel between Lake Union and Lake Washington?

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose the idea attempted to be expressed by that language was that the corporation was chartered under the laws of Wisconsin, and it is recognized that the consent of the Government to cross that right of way along the canal must be obtained by an act of Congress, and that is what is asked for.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not that a curious sort of legislation to present to the House, legislation that states on its face that the laws of the State of Wisconsin gave this company the right to construct a bridge across the waters of Puget Sound connecting the Sound and Lakes Union and Washington?

Mr. ADAMSON. It may be possible, geographically speaking, there is a misprint and Washington should be changed into Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will take one at a time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. How could the laws of Washington authorize that, inasmuch as that is a navigable stream?

Mr. ADAMSON. I should think that a State in which an operation is proposed to be made might provide the legal modus operandi, if any is necessary at all. The Government of the United States does not undertake to do anything except to consent that a navigable stream may be crossed.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Wyoming permit me to ask one question? Has he read on the second page of the report a part of the statement of the Acting Chief of Engineers, as follows:

By an instrument executed August 16, 1911, the department approved the plans presented by the Northern Pacific Railway Co. for a bridge to be built across the waterway connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington, in the city of Seattle, under authority granted by the Legislature of the State of Washington.

Now, I did not understand how a bill came to be brought in asking only for authorization to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the canal, and then the committee bring in an amendment assuming that this company already had that authority, and granting authority to occupy the right of way owned by the United States adjacent to and along the waterway.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the War Department itself has authority to issue a permit to construct a bridge across the canal, but not to use the Government property for the approaches, and I understand that is the point the gentleman did not understand, how they had that authority.

Mr. COOPER. But the original bill only gives authority to construct a bridge, and the amendment assumes that they already had that authority.

Mr. MANN. But the report of the War Department, the gentleman will notice, states that they already have authority to construct a bridge, but what they want is authority to put approaches on the land owned by the Government on each side of the canal.

Mr. COOPER. But the gentleman from Illinois will observe that the Acting Chief of Engineers said that the company had the right to build that bridge under the authority granted by the Legislature of the State of Washington, and the bill says "organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin and having authority under the said laws."

Mr. MANN. That is erroneous. I quite agree with the gentleman upon that. The words "said laws" I have marked to strike out, if the bill should pass, leaving it to read "having authority to construct a bridge," and so forth.

Mr. COOPER. Then it is not under the laws of the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. It is under authority, first, of the laws of Washington, to the company, and second, under the laws of the United States, which allow the War Department to issue a permit.

Mr. COOPER. It was confusing in phraseology, and I did not understand it.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman was quite right in calling attention to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Wisconsin, and having authority under the said laws to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the waterway connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington, at a point at or near the head of Salmon Bay, is hereby authorized to cross and occupy with said structure the right of way owned by the United States adjacent to and along said waterway under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may deem equitable and fair to the public, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

"Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think I will suggest another amendment in line 8, on page 2. The amendment ought itself to be amended by striking out the words "under the said laws," and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "To authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to cross the Government right of way along and adjacent to the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE WHITE RIVER AT OR NEAR COTTER, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16680) to authorize the board of county commissioners of Baxter County and the board of county commissioners of Marion County, in the State of Arkansas, acting together for the two counties as bridge commissioners, to construct a bridge across the White River at or near the town of Cotter, Ark.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of county commissioners of Baxter County and the board of county commissioners of Marion County, in the State of Arkansas, duly constituted and appointed under the laws of said State for the respective counties aforesaid as bridge commissioners, acting together for the two counties under such regulations as are now prescribed by the laws of said State, or may hereafter be prescribed by the laws of said State, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River at or near the town of Cotter, Ark., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near First Street in said town, in section 1, township 19 north, range 15 west, fifth principal meridian, or at a point near Third Street in said town, in section 6, township 19 north, range 14 west, fifth principal meridian, in the said county of Baxter, the abutment and approaches of said bridge on the opposite side of said river to be located at a point in section 29, township 19 north, range 15 west, fifth principal meridian, in said Marion County, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, page 1, after the word "under," strike out the word "such."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, page 1, after the word "regulations," strike out the words "as are now."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, page 1, after the word "State," strike out the words "or may hereafter be prescribed by the laws of said State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 1, after the word "River," insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out the lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and the words "in said Marion County," in line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "Cotter," strike out the remainder of the line, and all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. ADAMSON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 0.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 19238, a bill to amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 90 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 90. The State of Mississippi is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Mississippi.

The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Alcorn, Attala, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Clay, Itawamba, Lee, Lowndes, Monroe, Oktibbeha, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Tishomingo, and Winston, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Calhoun, Carroll, De Soto, Grenada, Lafayette, Marshall, Montgomery, Panola, Tate, Tippah, Union, Webster, and Yalobusha, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bolivar, Coahoma, Leflore, Quitman, Sunflower, Tallahatchie, and Tunica, which shall constitute the Delta division of said district. The terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; and for the western division, at Oxford on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the third Mondays in June and December: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Clarksdale are furnished free of expense to the United States. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Adams, Amite, Copiah, Covington, Franklin, Hinds, Holmes, Jefferson, Jefferson Davis, Lawrence, Lincoln, Madison, Pike, Rankin, Simpson, Smith, Scott, Wilkinson, and Yazoo, which shall constitute the Jackson division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Claiborne, Issaquena, Sharkey, Warren, and Washington, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clarke, Jones, Jasper, Kemper, Lauderdale, Leake, Neshoba, Newton, Noxubee, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Forrest, Greene, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Lamar, Marion, Perry, and Pearl River, which shall constitute the southern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the Jackson division shall be held at Jackson on the first Mondays in May and November; for the western division, at Vicksburg on the first Mondays in January and July; for the eastern division, at Meridian on the second Mondays in March and September; and for the southern division, at Biloxi on the third Mondays in February and August. The clerk of the court for each district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place in his district at which court is now required to be held at which he shall not himself reside, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. The marshal for each of said districts shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place of holding court in his district."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "third Mondays in June and December" and insert in lieu thereof "fourth Mondays in January and July."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the title so that it will read: "A bill to amend section 90 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the title offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 90 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Calendar for Unanimous Consent is exhausted. It is true there are three or four more bills on that calendar, but they have not been on long enough.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that there be printed for the use of the House 20,000 copies of the Farewell Address of George Washington, the same to be placed in the folding room and prorated among the Members for their use in distributing the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] moves that there be printed for the use of the House 20,000 copies of the Farewell Address of George Washington, to be distributed pro rata among the Members.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has an official estimate of what the cost will be?

Mr. CULLOP. I have. I sent and got the cost of the same. The cost of printing 20,000 copies would be about $165, a mere nominal sum.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, if a thousand copies were prorated equally among 394 Members—

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to print 20,000 copies.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will not object, as I understand we are likely to have a report from the Committee on Printing on another matter that I am interested in, although at one time I had made up my mind to object to any more printing resolutions until that report had been received.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESERVATION OF NIAGARA FALLS.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering House joint resolution 232, as amended, relating to the preservation of Niagara Falls.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from New York first to let me ask him or the Chair to submit a request for unanimous consent to consider these "minority" bills, against which the Speaker has pleaded minority, saying they were too young to be considered to-day.

Mr. SULZER. This joint resolution is now on the calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I will ask unanimous consent to modify my request and ask unanimous consent to complete the calendar.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is a matter of such importance that it should be passed immediately. The time under the existing law expires March 1, and—

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the request or remark of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. I requested the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] to modify his application to the Chair and to the House and to request unanimous consent to complete this calendar, including his resolution. The bills on the calendar now have not been on long enough under the rule, but under unanimous consent all of them can be considered or called, at least.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I will make that request just as soon as this resolution is passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it wise to depart from the rule, or the letter of the rule, in reference to the consideration of these unanimous-consent bills. If it is done to-day the same request could be preferred on any day. I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is right, and if the gentleman had not objected the Chair himself would have objected. The Chair has as much right to object to a request for unanimous consent as any other Member has. The Chair recollects hearing Speaker CANNON say once, directly after this rule was established, that it was a great relief both to the Members and to the Speaker, and it is, if it is properly carried out. Every man now knows his bill is coming up, and he does not have to go to the Speaker and request permission to bring it up.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest that there are certain conditions connected with this joint resolution which make it desirable to pass it to-day.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I have moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is in order. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read House joint resolution 232, extending the operations of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes, as amended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as follows:

Whereas the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes," approved June 29, 1906, and extended to June 29, 1911, by joint resolution (Public Resolution No. 56), approved March 1, 1912, by joint resolution (Public Resolution No. 9), approved August 22, 1911: Be it therefore Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the aforesaid act be, and they are hereby, extended from March 1, 1912, being the date of the operation of said act, to May 1, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is the motion of the gentleman to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, or to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution with the committee amendments?

Mr. SULZER. With the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. With the committee amendments.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, there is a typographical error in line 5, page 2. The word "operation" should be "expiration." I ask unanimous consent that the word "operation" be changed to "expiration."

Mr. MANN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York can modify his proposition, but after the House once votes on it it can not be changed.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. In order to expedite the matter I demand a second. No second has yet been demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct about that. The Chair should have asked, Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I do not understand what the motion of the gentleman is, whether it covers the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; it covers that. I make the motion now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make that motion after a second is ordered.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, then I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be amended, on page 2, line 5, by striking out the word "operation" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "expiration." That is a mere typographical error.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the word "operation" be changed to "expiration," at the place in the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from New York observed that on the first page of the bill, beginning with the word "whereas," that paragraph is not a complete sentence? It has no meaning as it reads there.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. SULZER. I think it would be just as well to amend the "whereas."

Mr. COOPER. The word "approved," in the fourth line from the bottom, should be stricken out and the word "expires" should be inserted. It could not have been approved March 1, 1912.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include that amendment. The gentleman is correct; and I want to say I did not draw this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to make a modification, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "approved," in the fourth line from the bottom of the whereas, and insert in lieu thereof the word "expires."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words. The so-called Burton Act regarding the taking of water for power purposes at Niagara Falls expires by limitation on the 1st day of March, 1912; in other words, in a few days. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House has had under consideration for some time legislation in regard to this matter, and has been holding extended hearings which have just been printed. The members of the committee have therefore been unable to formulate legislation in regard to the proposition.

At a recent meeting of the committee it was thought advisable to extend the so-called Burton law until May 1, 1912, in order to give the committee an opportunity to carefully consider the testimony which has been adduced before it and prepare and report to the House a bill to carry the treaty between Great Britain and the United States into effect regarding the preservation of Niagara Falls. The committee is diligently at work in the matter.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman will observe another omission in that "whereas"; there is no recital in the clause that the act was extended to March 1, 1912. There is a recital that it was extended to June 29, 1911, but not that it was again extended to March 1, 1912.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, no; the whereas declares that "public resolution No. 9, approved August 22, 1911," carries the Burton Act to the 1st of March, 1912. That is substantially all that I believe is necessary for me to say about this legislation. It is a matter of much urgency; and at the request of several Members I have called it up to-day in the absence of the member of the committee who reported it to the House. The committee deems it a matter of much urgency to pass this legislation as soon as possible in order to continue the Burton law until the 1st of next May.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What would happen if the Burton Act were not extended beyond the 1st of March?

Mr. SULZER. The whole matter would be open under the treaty provisions.

Mr. MANN. What could be done by anybody if the act should not be extended?

Mr. SULZER. That matter was carefully considered by the committee during the extraordinary session, and it was thought advisable that the Burton Act be extended. I believe that we ought to continue the Burton law until Congress can enact legislation to carry the treaty into effect.

Mr. MANN. Considering the fact that Congress has already heretofore extended the Burton Act by two different joint resolutions, what makes the gentleman believe that they will now be able to finally settle the question by additional legislation by the 1st of May? They have had the subject under consideration for years and evaded it, in a way at least, by extending the provisions of the Burton Act. Why does anybody now think that we can get through Congress before the 1st of May an act settling the whole question?

Mr. SULZER. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to say on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that a subcommittee has just been appointed to consider all legislation now pending in regard to this matter. We hope to prepare a bill which the committee will report ere long to this House to carry the treaty into effect; a bill which I hope will do substantial justice to all concerned.

Mr. MANN. But suppose the committee does report a bill. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has just been passed on a call of committees, and certainly will not be reached again by the 1st of May; and even if it were the bill would have to go through two bodies before it can become a law. I have not the slightest doubt that the gentleman from New York will be in the House again before the 1st of May with another resolution to extend a little further the operation of the Burton Act.

Mr. SULZER. If the committee does not report a bill, I am in favor of continuing the Burton Act until better legislation can be passed. I want to preserve the scenic beauties of Niagara Falls and at the same time do no injustice to anyone concerned. I believe that this Congress will legislate intelligently on the subject matter.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that it can legislate intelligently, but not by the 1st of May.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a word to what the chairman has already said in reply to the gentleman from Illinois. The committee has spent a great deal of time in listening to parties interested in this subject, and the committee is firmly of the opinion that it is going to be able, as the chairman indicates, to submit in the near future a bill which will meet with the approval of the House, and we hope to get that bill through before the 1st of May. In the meantime we offer this resolution. It will go over to the other branch of Congress.

Mr. MANN. And be extended.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Very likely, if it is necessary to extend the date beyond the 1st of May it will be amended so as to extend it. But if it is found unnecessary to extend the date beyond the 1st of May, there will be no amendment; and if later on we should find that it is necessary to introduce another resolution, it will not be a very serious matter. I think everyone is in favor of letting the conditions at Niagara remain in statu quo until a conclusive and final arrangement is agreed upon and put into law. Therefore I trust that there will be no opposition to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the House joint resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the resolution was passed.

REPORT OF TARIFF BOARD ON SCHEDULE K.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I present the privileged concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 32.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 additional copies of House Document No. 342, being the message of the President of the United States transmitting a report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K of the tariff law, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 8,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Report No. 347 to accompany House concurrent resolution 32.

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 32) providing for the printing of House Document No. 342, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $13,517.06.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the resolution and report fully explains the proposition before the House. This provides for a reprint of the report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K. There has been considerable demand for it, and in the opinion of the Committee on Printing the resolution should pass.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understood the reading of the resolution, it provides for the printing of 20,000 copies of this report, 8,000 for the use of the Senate and 12,000 for the use of the House.

Mr. FINLEY. That is correct. The committee reported the resolution in the identical language in which it was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will these reports be placed in the folding room?

Mr. FINLEY. They will go to the folding room.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

AMERICAN RED CROSS.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 20287, to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American Red Cross," approved January 5, 1905, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act for the incorporation of the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905, be, and the same hereby is, amended so that the annual meeting of the said organization shall hereafter be held on Wednesday preceding the second Thursday in the month of December in each and every year.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I will briefly explain the bill. All it does is to change the time for the annual meeting of the American National Red Cross from the first Tuesday after the first Monday in December each year to the Wednesday preceding the second Thursday in the month of December of each and every year. There is no objection to this change. The following letter, which I will read, explains it:

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS AMERICAN RED CROSS,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1912.

HON. WILLIAM SULZER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SULZER: The Red Cross desires to change the date of its annual meeting from "the first Tuesday after the first Monday in December," as now required in the charter, to "the Wednesday preceding the second Thursday in the month of December," because of the fact that during the early part of December many business and other meetings elsewhere require the attendance of a number of Red Cross delegates, and also because of the fact that during the week of the desired later date certain other annual meetings of important associations occur in Washington, some of whose members are or are apt to be delegates to the Red Cross meeting, which they will thus be able to attend. It is, therefore, to provide for a more convenient time for the delegates to meet in Washington that this change to another date for the annual meeting is desired.

Yours, sincerely,

MABEL T. BOARDMAN.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ITASCA COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 18155) authorizing the town of Grand Rapids to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Itasca County, State of Minnesota, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the town of Grand Rapids, a municipal corporation organized and existing under and pursuant to the laws of the State of Minnesota, to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from a point on the northerly bank in said river in lot 4, section 18, to a point on the southerly bank of said river in lot 5, section 18, both points being in township 55 north, range 25 west of the fourth principal meridian, Itasca County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] A second not being demanded, the question will be taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

BRIDGES ACROSS KOOTENAI RIVER, LINCOLN COUNTY, MONT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 3776 with committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3776) permitting the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, State of Montana, to construct, maintain, and operate three bridges across the Kootenai River in the State of Montana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, State of Montana, to construct, maintain, and operate three bridges, and approaches thereto, across the Kootenai River, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, located as follows, all in Lincoln County, Mont.:

Near the town of Rexford, Mont.: From a point on the south bank of said river in the northwest quarter of section 21, township 36 north, range 28 west, Montana meridian, in Lincoln County, Mont., to a point on the north bank of said river in section 21, township 36 north, range 28 west, Montana meridian, in the same county.

Near the town of Libby, Mont.: From a point on the south bank of said river in the northeast quarter of section 3, township 30 north, range 31 west, Montana meridian, to a point on the north bank of said river in section 3, township 30 north, range 31 west, Montana meridian, in the same county.

Near the town of Troy, Mont.: From a point on the south bank of said river in the southeast quarter of section 12, township 31 north, range 34 west, Montana meridian, to a point on the north bank of said river in the northeast quarter of section 12, township 31 north, range 34 west, Montana meridian, in the same county: Provided, That the aforesaid bridges shall be constructed, maintained, and operated in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges upon navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, State of Montana, to construct, maintain, and operate three bridges across the Kootenai River in the State of Montana."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no demand.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 8784, as amended in the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may dispense with the reading of the bill and read the amendment, the amendment being in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. As a bill is read so it is passed or rejected, and the Clerk will read the amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8784) to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act of June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands."

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, which have been withdrawn or classified as coal lands or are valuable for coal shall, in addition to the classes of entries or filings described in the act of Congress approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," be subject to selection by the several States within whose limits the lands are situate, under grants made by Congress, and to disposition, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under the laws providing for the sale of isolated or disconnected tracts of public lands, but there shall be a reservation to the United States of the coal in all such lands so selected or sold and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same in accordance with the provisions of said act of June 22, 1910, and such lands shall be subject to all the conditions and limitations of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Each side is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think the amended title should be reported, because this is a motion to suspend the rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend the act of June 22, 1910, entitled 'An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill pass?

Mr. MANN. Not yet, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman took the floor, I understood, to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand any explanation was desired. I do not care to take up the time of the House unless an explanation is desired.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is proper to pass a bill of this sort without some statement of what it is.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be very glad to make a statement. The bill extends the provisions of what is known as the surface act by providing for two additional classes of entry under that act. It provides that in addition to the homestead, desert, reclamation, and Carey Act entries, that can now be made on lands of that character, the State shall have the right to make selections of the surface of such lands under congressional grants, and that the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, shall have the right to dispose of isolated and disconnected tracts of such land. The bill is in the form recommended by the Interior Department, and was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Is this bill, as now proposed, in the same form as the bill was reported into the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. There is a Senate bill on the same subject which I have not seen, but my understanding is that the Senate bill only covers one class of these entries.

Mr. MANN. Well, my recollection is that the Senate bill covered all classes of these entries and is of considerable length.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, this bill was of considerable length originally, as the gentleman will see, but the department suggested that instead of reenacting the act itself it would be better to enact a short provision which would carry out our intent.

Mr. MANN. What I was seeking to learn was information in regard to the probable form of the bill when it passes both bodies, if that should ever happen.

Mr. MONDELL. My desire is that this bill shall not be changed at all when it becomes a law, and, unless there is some very good reason, which I do not know of now and that I do not have in mind now, why it should be changed, I certainly should insist upon the bill passing as it passed the House.

Mr. MANN. I understand that is the position of the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not heard any suggestion, I will say to the gentleman, of any change in the form of the bill or any further extension of it.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason why I asked whether the bill as reported in the Senate was in the same form as now reported in the House. My impression was it was a very different bill, aimed to cover all these matters in the bill in a different way perhaps.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know as to that. I knew there was such a bill, but I do not think it covers anything but State selections. My thought was that it was very proper to do what this bill does, but I had not any thought of going further in extension of this act. And I know of no one else who has.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the title be amended by striking out the word "amend" and inserting the word "supplement." We do not amend this statute; we supplement it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ISOLATED TRACTS OF PUBLIC LAND.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 19342) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to isolated tracts of public land.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2455. It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market and sell at public auction, at the land office of the district in which the land is situated, for not less than $1.25 an acre, any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain not exceeding one quarter section which, in his judgment, it would be proper to expose for sale after at least 30 days' notice by the land officers of the district in which such land may be situated: Provided, That any legal subdivisions of the public land, not exceeding one quarter section, the greater part of which is mountainous or too rough for cultivation, may, in the discretion of said commissioner, be ordered into the market and sold pursuant to this act upon the application of any person who owns, or holds a valid entry of, lands adjoining such tract, regardless of the fact that such tract may not be isolated or disconnected within the meaning of this act: Provided further, That this act shall not defeat any vested right which has already attached under any pending entry or location."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to 20 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the present law in relation to the sale of isolated tracts of public land is identically the first part of the bill as just read down to the first proviso, together with the second proviso. The first proviso is the only amendment sought to be made by this bill.

I have no intention or desire to change the present law. I am leaving it exactly as it is. But I am trying to add to this section 2455 of the United States Statutes the provision contained in the first proviso, for the sole purpose of making the isolated-tract law applicable to the conditions existing in the mountainous portions of the West. The present law and the rules and regulations thereunder, as set forth in the circular of the Department of the Interior and the General Land Office, dated June 6, 1910, renders the law practically a dead letter so far as the mountainous portions of the country are concerned.

I originally introduced this bill as H. R. 17938. That bill was referred to the Department of the Interior for its consideration. The Secretary, on January 26, 1912, rendered the opinion set out in the report which I have made on the bill.

For the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the Secretary, as well as complying with some minor suggestions of the Public Lands Committee, I redrafted and reintroduced the bill in its present form. According to the construction placed upon the present law by the Department of the Interior, no tract of land can be considered isolated or disconnected until all of the surrounding lands have gone to patent, or at least been entered within the meaning of the land laws. That kind of a construction and that kind of a law may be all right so far as the plains or level country is concerned. But in the mountainous portions of the West there are, comparatively speaking, no tracts of good land whatever left vacant that are entirely surrounded by patented lands or even entered lands.

The object of the proposed amendment to the existing law is to make the isolated tract law applicable to the mountainous region, especially where the valleys are very narrow and the creeks run diagonally through the legal subdivisions leaving a large number of small, usually three-cornered, patches of Government land—subdivisions that corner down into the valley or bottom land and the greater part thereof extend up onto the mountains or onto broken land or foothills that are too rough for cultivation. Those little corners or patches of land are especially valuable to the adjoining owners and have little or no appreciable value to anyone else, because a homesteader can not afford to put in five years' time on a 5 or 10 acre patch of land, and go to the expense of putting in a long and costly ditch and probably purchase a road through other people's property to get to it. Whereas if these little irregular patches could be purchased from the Government at a fair price and included within the land under the adjoining owner's ditch and connected with his fields, they would be valuable to him and would become taxable property and help enrich the country, rather than remaining idle as thousands of them are at the present time. The adjoining owners are even compelled to fence around them to avoid violating the law. Those vacant pieces are good land and ought to be in cultivation, but they are of no use now to the Government and are a nuisance to the adjoining owners.

They never will become isolated within the construction of the present law, because they extend up on the mountains or onto broken, worthless land that may not be patented land for a hundred years yet, if ever.

The committee deems this not only proper but very important legislation toward the development of the West, and feels that the safeguarding provisions that I have put in this amendment will prevent any possibility of monopoly or speculation in any way. Moreover, the question as to whether or not any tract shall be sold and the conditions under which it shall be sold are left entirely to the discretion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. And even if his discretion should some day be as liberal as possible, no one could get more than 160 acres of land, and the greater part of that would necessarily have to be mountainous or too rough for cultivation and therefore practically worthless. There is no practicable way at present for anyone to obtain title to those small pieces of land.

If this bill becomes a law and is construed by the Interior Department in accordance with the way the committee and I intend, it will have the effect of allowing in every mountainous State hundreds of small irregular tracts aggregating many thousand acres of good land to go into private ownership and become productive, and neither the Government nor any person can by any possibility be defrauded or injured in any way, and the whole country will be greatly benefited thereby. This bill is being heartily indorsed by the boards of county commissioners and public officials throughout the West wherever it has been heard of, and if it becomes a law and is fairly construed it will be worth many millions of dollars to each one of those Western States.

When we consider the high cost of living, which keeps getting higher every day, and reflect that just a few years ago 80 per cent of all the population of this country were farmers, while to-day less than 30 per cent are engaged in agricultural pursuits, it does seem to me that any bill that will in an orderly manner tend to bring more good land under cultivation ought to receive the hearty indorsement of every thoughtful American citizen.

I earnestly trust that this measure may receive the favorable consideration of this House and become a law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 17837.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17837) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands and as such entitled to the protection of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain signed at Paris December 10, 1898: Provided, That the Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized to provide by law for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by those natives of the Philippine Islands who do not come within the foregoing provisions, the natives of other insular possessions of the United States, and such other persons residing in the Philippine Islands who could become citizens of the United States under the laws of the United States if residing therein."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] A second not being demanded, the question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill pass?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that having been determined, I make the suggestion that there is no quorum present, and it is now 5 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 23, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, draw us by Thy holy influence close to Thee, and make dominant in our hearts the angel song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," that we may be at one with Thee, and enjoy a foretaste of the heaven which waits on the faithful. And songs of praises we will ever give to Thee. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4445. An act concerning unrigged vessels.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4445. An act concerning unrigged vessels; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

MAJ. GEN. F. C. AINSWORTH.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report the following privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] reports a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will read, and asks for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 415.

Whereas on February 15, 1912, there was read in the House of Representatives a letter from the Secretary of War containing extracts of communications alleged to have been sent by Maj. Gen. F. C. Ainsworth, The Adjutant General of the Army, to the Secretary of War and to other officers of the Army; and

Whereas justice demands that the whole correspondence be disclosed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the House of Representatives full and complete copies of all memoranda, indorsements, reports, and other records which are on file in any bureau or office of the War Department which have any bearing on the extracts from communications of The Adjutant General of the Army which were embodied in the letter of the Secretary of War dated February 14, 1912, to The Adjutant General of the Army, which letter was read in the House of Representatives on February 15, 1912, and published on pages 2218 and 2219 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15, 1912.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (No. 349) to accompany House resolution 415:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 415, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments:

In line 5, after the word "Department," insert the word "and," and after the word "which," in the same line, insert the words "contain or."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order, and ask the gentleman whether this report or resolution is opposed by the minority members of the committee?

Mr. HAY. It is not.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAY. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. This is Friday, Private Calendar day, and pensions have priority.

Mr. ADAIR. I ask unanimous consent that all bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman confine it to pension bills?

Mr. ADAIR. To pension bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that pension bills on the calendar be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. On the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. On the Private Calendar.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the pension business I shall ask that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, the gentleman from Kentucky serves notice that as soon as these pension bills are disposed of he will move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the fortifications appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the business on the Private Calendar to-day I shall ask that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York serves notice that when these pension bills are disposed of he will make the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. During the consideration of the pension bills would it be in order for the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to arrange that matter in the lobby?

The SPEAKER. The Chair rather thinks it would. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the statement I made was with proper consideration of the fact that the House ought to know what would likely be the business to come before it. I consulted with the Speaker of the House, and while the recognition necessarily rests with him as to motions of equal privilege, assuming that the recognition would be given to me for this purpose, I made the statement for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House understood that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, on to-day's Private Calendar is Senate bill 2453. Would that not be in order after the disposition of private pension bills?

The SPEAKER. This is private-bill day, and the parliamentary situation is this: If these gentlemen with these privileged bills wanted to antagonize this pension business and the rest of the private bills they could do it by simply making a motion; but that does not mean that the motion would prevail. When we get through with these pension bills, of course the rest of the Private Calendar is in order, unless the House votes to take up one of the appropriation bills.

Mr. RAKER. I am satisfied that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will not oppose this little matter. It is unanimously reported by the committee and is easy to dispose of.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman draws his own conclusion.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] to consider pension bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana if he proposes to take up both special bills at this time under his motion?

Mr. ADAIR. I propose to take up the bills H. R. 20586 and 20585. In the two bills there are 354 claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Indiana that these bills will be called in their order on the calendar.

Mr. ADAIR. They are only called up in the order they are on the calendar.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. If unanimous consent is granted, will there be any disposition to prevent a motion for the consideration of the bill, paragraph by paragraph, as each pension is reached?

Mr. ADAIR. The bills will be considered in the House as they always have been considered heretofore, by reading each item from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the fact that these bills have just been reported and that the report has just been made available to Members this morning, the bill covering 350 pensions, that it does not give the membership an opportunity to look into the bills and the reports?

Mr. ADAIR. I scarcely think so; this has been the custom in the House for 20 or 25 years, and I see no necessity for varying the rule. In the past it has worked well; no harm has been done to any person, individual, or to the country. These bills are unanimously reported from the Committees on Pensions and Invalid Pensions, and I see no objection to proceeding in the usual way in passing the bills.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I object.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask if the gentleman will allow an amendment.

The SPEAKER. This matter has been disposed of by the objection of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. RUCKER of Colorado in the chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 20628.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that these bills must be called up in the regular order in which they are found on the calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But it has been agreed upon between the gentleman from Indiana and myself that this bill shall have precedence. These bills are from different committees.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent. A private agreement to that effect can not be recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to call up the bills from the Pension Committee first.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 20585.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the bill H. R. 20585, the first pension bill on the calendar. The Chair will inform the gentleman that these bills must be called up in the order in which they are found on the calendar, unless it is determined otherwise by unanimous consent.

Mr. ADAIR. Then I will ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 20585 be taken up and now considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk reported the bill S. 2453, an act for the relief of Benjamin F. Martz, and for other purposes.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FULLER. Are not pension bills given the right of way under the rule at this time? I think private pension bills have the preference under the rule, and should be first considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is right, pension bills do have the preference under the rule, and the Clerk will report the first pension bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask which bill the gentleman proposes to take up?

Mr. ADAIR. It is the bill H. R. 20585.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Did I not understand that the bills were to be taken up in their order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that pension bills should be taken up in their order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to object to the gentleman's request, which, in effect, is to go directly to the bill and let it receive consideration.

We have had no time to examine the bill, and the objection to the gentleman's request is not a desire to pursue a dilatory course, but that objection will give the Members, if they desire it, a few moments' opportunity while it is being read to look over this report, and I respectfully object.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It has to be read a second time; this is the first reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

During the reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order; we can not tell from the reading of the bill what is being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask on which page the Clerk is reading, and what line?

The CHAIRMAN. Page 6, line 12.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the Clerk is not reading the bill; that he is skipping lines; that he is skipping amounts; that he is skipping entire lines.

Mr. SULZER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, and insist on the point of order, that the bill be read in full.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair has directed the Clerk to read the bill, and unless informed in some official way to the contrary, the Chair holds that the Clerk is performing his duty.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. In what official way can that point be brought to the Chair's attention?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that the Chair up to this time has not followed the reading, but he will do so from now on.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the Chair through the Clerk what page he is now on?

The CHAIRMAN. Page 8, line 17, and the Clerk will read. The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order now; general debate has not been closed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized to speak to the bill under general debate. Mr. Chairman, the bill just read to the committee is what has come to be known as a private pension bill. The measure is not misnamed; it is a system, as gentlemen say, with ample precedent of many years. In many instances a Member of Congress from a multitude of pensioners among his constituents elects out a number of those who have contributed to his political fortune in the past and who he may hope will contribute to his fortunes in the future—both he and his kinsfolk—and forthwith introduces private bills for them. To do what? To separate one pensioner from the great class of Federal pensioners, to take his name from the roll where his comrades stand, to take him from the operation of the general law, and where he, along with his comrades for like injury under like circumstances, is receiving $8 a month, segregating him from the rest, and give him $30 a month.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Certainly.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman voted for the bill which passed the House known as the Sherwood bill, which sought to take care of all the soldiers?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. One trouble with voting for that bill is, there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday a statement by a distinguished Senator that that bill carries an additional appropriation of $75,000,000 for the people of this country to pay, and I voted against it. [Applause.]

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. I take it that the gentleman thinks that it is impossible at this time to pass a bill which will do justice to all the soldiers of the country. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I do not mean to so state at all. When the Democratic members of the Committee on Pensions, whose chairman is the venerable and distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, brought into this House a pension bill by the provisions of which soldiers who had scarcely been enlisted in the Army could not be pensioned; further providing that soldiers who were obtaining the benefits of the soldiers' homes could not under certain conditions be incorporated in it; still further providing that soldiers with $1,000, $2,000, $3,000, $4,000, $10,000, $20,000, $30,000 annual income should not be pensioned; and when that bill was brought in, supported by him, and his colleagues on this side left his leadership, left the Democratic committee, and engrafted on the Sherwood bill injustice, discrimination, and privilege, the like of which a Republican Congress refused to do [applause], I was against the bill, and so voted.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] further yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON]?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman say now to the House and to the country that he would have voted for the Sherwood bill if it had not been amended?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Under no circumstances.

Mr. JACKSON. Then what is the gentleman complaining about now?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I am not making any complaint whatever. I am seeking a fair consideration of pending legislation.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman understand that until the Sherwood bill or some similar act is passed there is no way on earth to relieve these special cases of destitution on the part of old soldiers except by these pension bills, which were passed upon by a committee of the gentleman's own party?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. One of the reports contains 85 pages of closely written matter, and another report contains 78 pages of closely printed matter, and in the cursory investigation I have been able to give it in the last 25 or 30 minutes, during which time only the reports have been available, I find scarcely a single case where a party named in the pending bill is not to-day drawing a pension under existing law—not a case. I can see no justification for the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. JACKSON. Let me ask the gentleman the same question in a little different form.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman mean to impeach the honesty and good faith and the efficiency of the Pension Committee, the majority of which is composed of gentlemen upon his own side of the House?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I would not submit the slightest unkind suggestion to the gentleman, but my observation in life has been that he who first suspects another may be well suspected himself.

Mr. JACKSON. Applying that doctrine, I think I understand what is the matter with the gentleman, because if he will simply read this bill he will find if the committee has made any error at all it is in refusing to do justice by these soldiers. So I take it, applying the gentleman's doctrine, that there must be some sinister motive behind the gentleman's inclination to criticize that committee and the country for granting these bills.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, there may be a sinister motive behind my conduct. If there be such a motive, I may say that no manifestation of it on my part is made with the desire to ingratiate myself with the old soldiers in order that I may come back to Congress.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I do.

Mr. JACKSON. Is the gentleman quite sure that the conduct of other Members who sit upon this floor and the floor of the other branch of Congress is not an attempt to ingratiate themselves into the regard of soldiers who unfortunately happened to be on the other side in the Civil War?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman propounds the question, and I will answer it. And lest my answer might be discredited here among my colleagues, because I come from a State far to the South and thereby suspicion of sinister motive might be imputed to me, I will make no answer in my own language, but I will reply to the gentleman's question by quoting the language of a soldier of the Union Army who says he followed the Flag of the Union throughout the four long years as one of the Federal generals, and who lives to-day and fears not to pronounce his judgment on this species of legislation and to express his opinion as to what the purposes and motives are. I will now read from Gen. Francis Adams. I state by way of preface that the three articles contributed by Gen. Adams in a late magazine were afterwards put in pamphlet form, and the general, before publication of the pamphlet, did not call upon some friend of his to prepare a preface or introduction. He wrote it himself and to it he affixed his own name, and gave along with it the titles which he honorably bore during that great war.

Gen. Adams says:

The subject matter discussed in the following paper is momentous, reaching down, as it does, to the very base of our American institutions—the purity of the constituencies. The fast-developing pension system is nothing more nor less than the initial step in what will, and at no remote day, surely become an established policy of general bribery and corruption. At present, in dealing with the subject, Members of Congress and others are either shortsighted or foolish enough to say that, though the amount expended is large and steadily increases, it will be but for a brief time. In 10 years the veterans will all, or nearly all, be dead; the thing will then stop of itself.

Nothing of the sort will occur. On the contrary, it is vastly more probable that 10 years hence the pension roll of this country will be $300,000,000 a year than that it will be less than it now is. What has hitherto been done in this way, or is now being done, is merely the entering wedge. It is so safe, as well as so personally inexpensive, for Members of Congress to buy votes with the public money.

That is no reflection by a gentleman who has sinister motives, but it is the language of a soldier who followed the flag of the Republic on the Union side throughout that great struggle.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not until I have finished answering the gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.] I read further:

The order of future events will proceed somewhat as follows: We now have a "veteran" pension system affecting, on an average, about 2,600 voters in every congressional district north of the Potomac and, with a few exceptions only, in all of those west of the Mississippi. The parties openly and avowedly bid against each other for that vote—Democrat against Republican.

It is Gen. Adams who says it is that way, not I. He goes on:

It already involves an annual disbursement of about $400,000 a year in each congressional district. Under the proposed "dollar-a-day" largess measure this amount will be increased to about $600,000 a year in each district. Next in order will be the volunteer officers' retired list, involving an annual expenditure of about $15,000,000—$50,000 on an average in each district. Next come the widows and dependents of the "veterans," involving an amount impossible now to estimate. If fixed at $20 a month, as proposed, it will probably be $100,000,000 a year for an indefinite future period and affect a number of households not easy to calculate. That the "old militia men and teamsters and telegraphers and the other men who did so much for the Union cause" should now be given a pensionable status is next urged. And why not? They also have votes in congressional elections!

So Gen. Adams says. Then he goes on:

The system thus fairly inaugurated, the next move, already agitated, is to pension the civil-service officials.

And on yesterday Members of Congress found on their desks a communication from the District committee of one hundred, proposing to go down here in the Pension and other departments where the employees sit under electric fans in the summer time and beside steam-heated radiators in the winter time—employees who report for duty from the street car at 9 o'clock in the morning and who knock off at half past 4 in the afternoon—selecting them from the masses who give their lives to labor, and pension them. At whose expense? At the expense of the old fellow who is sweating out in the sunshine, at the expense of the man who is cleaning out drains in his fields in shivering cold, who is digging in the mines, who is shoveling in coal, who is blasting out stone. These men will pay the proposed pensions of the radiator-favored and electric-fan-cooled civil-service and other officials in the Government employ, who sit in their comfortable places and draw a salary, followed by a pension. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, now will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not until I have finished answering the gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.] When did we get the right to tax the American people to give those civil-service employees jobs as long as they want them and then put them on the retired pension list for the balance of their lives when they take a notion to quit work?

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman, until I have finished answering the gentleman's first question. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman withdraws his question.

Mr. KENDALL. He withdraws the first question.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, while we are on the subject of civil pensions, when these ladies and gentlemen who are working for the Government in Washington find their salary so small that they can not accumulate any money for a rainy day let them give up their jobs and go out in the country and accumulate something. There are more people hammering before the office doors of Congressmen and requesting leave to fill the places of those people than we could hope to provide for if we devoted our lifetimes to that purpose alone.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Not until I have answered the other question.

Mr. ANSBERRY. He has withdrawn his question.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will yield to the gentleman in a few moments. Let me read further from Gen. Adams, and then later on I may revert to the proposition to pension the lifelong sitters under the Dome of the Capitol.

Under the system hitherto in vogue in this country—

Mr. BATES. From what page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the gentleman reading?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I heard the distinguished leader on the gentleman's side of the House say that no Republican would read the fine print in the RECORD, and I decline to give it. [Laughter.] But as a matter of courtesy to the gentleman, I will give him the information he wishes. Page 1974 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 9.

Mr. BATES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Gen. Adams says:

Under the system hitherto in vogue in this country of progressive pensions—that is, annual increases promised by candidates for office—it is not too much to say that at a not remote period the Government will thus at each election be practically put up at auction.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will my friend permit an interruption?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I object to being interrupted by the gentleman just now.

Gen. Adams says:

At a not remote period the Government will thus at each election be practically put up at auction. Each congressional candidate—

Now, listen. I do not know whether this fits the gentleman from Kansas or not—

Each congressional candidate will travel through his district, hat in hand, promising to be more liberal in the way of pensions, etc., than his opponent.

I wonder if any gentleman has adopted that line of procedure before now.

"Codlin's the friend, not Short. Short's very well as far as he goes, but the real friend is Codlin—not Short." The result of such competitive election bidding any disinterested citizen can with no considerable difficulty work out for himself.

I now read the concluding paragraph from Gen. Adams, by way of answer to the gentleman from Kansas:

The writer has frequently been asked why, in face of the apparently inevitable, he assumed the not inconsiderable task of preparing the following papers. His reply is simple. Having himself done military duty in the Civil War for a period little short of four years, his sole object is, in so far as may be in his power, to bear witness against what he considers and what many others consider one of the most individually demoralizing and politically debauching acts of which record exists, and altogether the most ill-concealed and unblushing piece of political jobbery, corruption, and bribery as yet to be found inscribed in American annals. Nor is any end to it yet in sight!

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS,
Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General, 1865.

WASHINGTON, January 1, 1912.

Now, it may be inquired, when these bills are brought up here to be ground out: Why should I undertake the insurmountable and get in the path of the inevitable, knowing that, with crushing votes and with crowning applause, when the vote is taken this species of favoritism will be rushed through? I have no apology for it; but I say to you that when you undertake further to raid the Treasury you not only do injustice to the American people, but if what Gen. Adams says is true, you do dishonor to the vast army of Federal pensioners and Federal soldiers.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman has given rather an elaborate answer to my question, or what he seems to think is an answer to my question. Now, that the gentleman is in a little cooler temper than he was a few moments ago, perhaps—

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Ask him to repeat his answer.

Mr. JACKSON. No; I will not ask him to do that. Will the gentleman tell the House if in reading this article which he says was written by Gen. Adams he applies the concluding paragraph, referring to bribery and political jobbery, to his colleagues on the Pension Committee on that side of the House?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Gen. Adams signs it, and his address was Washington, D. C., January 1, 1912. I say to my friend that this is official business, and the gentleman can write to him and find out what he desires. It will not cost him a cent.

Mr. JACKSON. Oh, I do not need to write to him; what I want of the gentleman is to answer my question, whether he thinks the charge made there by the so-called Gen. Adams applies to the gentleman's colleague in control of the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and whether these gentlemen are, in bringing the bill into the House, guilty of bribery and political chicanery and robbery.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I must take exception to the reference to Gen. Adams as the "so-called Gen. Adams." The records of the War Department recall his full history. The publications by the Government under Republican administration give him an exalted and high place, according to his record. Gen. Adams was not "the so-called Gen. Adams," but he was a sure enough general in the fight. [Applause.]

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman from Georgia please tell the House now where Gen. Adams commanded during the Civil War?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I can not undertake to teach the gentleman history and pension legislation at the same time. [Laughter.]

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman's history is as bad as the gentleman's position on pension legislation. Gen. Adams was a brevet general and never served a day as a general in the Army.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Judging from the pensions you give some of these officers and soldiers for distinguished services who never fought, some of them were valiant enough to have died several times, and yet they have been drawing pensions 35 years.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman not approve, and does he not indorse the work of those men, whom we are now called to pension, between 1861 and 1865? Does he not approve of the work of those soldiers who served their country between 1861 and 1865?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Well, it is hard to tell.

Mr. SLOAN. It is not hard to tell from this side of the House whether we approve it or not. [Applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERRY. But the gentleman interrupts me. From 1861 to 1865. Let us see who your first pensioner in this bill is.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman answer or not?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes; I am going to take the first pensioner in the bill. The first one is Alexander Babble, and according to the report he was in the war from February, 1865, to September, 1865, after the war was over. I do not know whether there was much fighting done up in this country in the fall of 1865. There was not down on the hills of Virginia or Tennessee or Georgia. Lee had capitulated months before. Sherman had passed through our State, through our Commonwealth, and had reached the sea, and the war was over.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask the gentleman if he approves of that.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Approves of what?

Mr. SLOAN. Just what the gentleman last describes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Sherman's march through Georgia? [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The war is over, sir! I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that we accepted the decrees of war; we accepted the judgment resulting from the conflict. Our matchless Gen. Lee met the great Gen. Grant in the final struggle and accepted Lincoln's terms in the end. We saw our State devastated; we saw her mountain cabins blasted away; we saw her valleys impoverished, her fields sterile, her farms deserted, her homes demolished, her churches razed, her farmers hungered, her tradesmen out of business, her banks in bankruptcy, her sons fatherless, her daughters orphans, their mothers widows, the smoke of war arising from every turret, and Sherman marching through the State to the sea, and then the struggle was over. We laid down our arms; we came to the Union and there we have abided; her fortunes are ours, her domicile is ours, her history is ours, and her future is ours. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will say further to the gentleman that the great State of Georgia and the southern country has arisen, and now from supine helplessness she stands a giant; a giant in literature, a giant in education, a giant in progress, a giant in the strength of her resources and in the industry of her people, a giant in her matchless development, and in all respects. Our wealth is restored, our homes have been rebuilt, our happiness has been recovered from the depths of sorrow, our prosperity by our sons is brought back. No stream of pensions to the South came to help us in our distress or relieve us in our misfortune. We have asked none and expected none. We have reasserted and reestablished our preeminence and preserved the purest civilization on the face of the earth by the heroic efforts of our own people—the Southern People. We love all sections and are loyal to every foot of the soil of this great country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman has declined to yield, and he is entitled to the floor without interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman has just yielded.

Mr. TRIBBLE. He has declined to yield three times.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Georgia that he understood the other gentleman from Georgia did yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I rise to a point of order because gentlemen break into his paragraphs and his speech in order to kill the force of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is able to take care of himself. [Applause.] Now, to whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question that I think is a pertinent one, and I think that his devotion to the South or the Democratic Party is no greater than mine.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to ask this question: Is the gentleman aware of the fact that under the policy of the Federal Government internal revenue is raised for the purpose of defraying the expenses of war and pensions? Is the gentleman further advised of the fact that all the States that participated in the Confederacy in the last fiscal year paid of internal revenue into the Government of the United States less than $28,000,000, and that the States that stood for the Union paid of internal revenue about $293,000,000? [Applause.] Let me continue my question. Is the gentleman further aware that the Southern States are getting back in pensions distributed in its borders in the aggregate more money than goes out from those States in payment of pensions?

Is the gentleman not further aware that the late Confederate States are drawing from the United States Treasury in benefits by way of river and harbor and other internal improvements, and by way of pensions and other sources nearly $2, if not more, where it pays into the Federal Treasury $1 from all ascertained sources of revenue? [Applause.] I want to say as a Democrat and as a southern man I am tired of this contemptible sectional rot. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, observe the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], and give audience to his applause. Rivers and harbors to the South. As merchandise, he in effect asserts, barter away your American citizenship and your oath under the Constitution by paying tribute to some other sections in pensions in return for "internal improvements!"

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to yield.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You had better not yield on that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERY. I decline to yield. The gentleman's astounding statement, in effect, is that because the South receives some of this pension money we must close our mouths and go on with this policy of plunder and pillage of the great masses of the taxpayers of the country. We have not reached the stage yet, I trust, where because one section of the country pays less of internal revenue than another section of the country that we are to maintain that that section of the country which does not contribute most revenue has any less of patriotism or any less of right under this Government or less of duty to it. [Applause.]

I challenge, within the limits of parliamentary language, the abhorrent statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, the logical deduction from which is that we should ascertain the sections of the country which pay the most revenue and let them run it. His argument is that our section, which gets a little wad of money, must seal its lips because it is getting something. The gentleman may better grow tired of this damnable thing of bartering away the rights of the people for a contemptible mess of pottage. I controvert and deny every statement and imputation of the gentleman from Tennessee. The late official report shows that the 11 Southern States paid to the Treasury in internal revenue $54,233,000, while the same States received a total of only $16,693,000 for pensions, inclusive of Indian and Mexican War pensions.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; I am tired of this contemptible thing of making a sectional issue of this question. The Democratic Party, in its platform, declared for liberal pensions, and nothing but liberal pensions have been given.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order again. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. My point is that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] declined to yield to the gentleman, and the Chair refused to stop him; that the gentleman rose and addressed the gentleman from Georgia without the Chair stopping him.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. What is the gentleman going to do about it?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am appealing to the Chair. I have a right to do it, and I propose to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] that I was trying to get my information from the other gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] as to whether he yielded. Does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I decline to yield. Mr. Chairman, the statement is made by the gentleman that he is tired of this sectionalism. How much will his idea of broad patriotism cost? How much will his idea of wide and liberal nationalism cost? To-day, as Gen. Adams says, they corrupt the franchise of the country by one candidate going to a crippled man on the way to the grave and saying, "I will double your pension," and another candidate goes to him and says, "Old boy, vote for me and I will treble your pension." That is what the general says. I do not know. That is broad nationalism! Who injected the question of sectionalism? I am not here to say that any gentleman has, but certainly the record of the debate in so far as I have participated wants in any semblance of sectionalism. The gentlemen may have propounded questions of their own making which present a phase of sectionalism. There is no offensive sectionalism in me or my utterances.

It is not sectionalism to stand openly against injustice to all the country in the matter of appropriations, reckless pensions, and all things affecting adversely the general welfare and the country's progress. Is it necessary for a gentleman to be sectional in order to arise and resist a measure that is sought to be rushed through without a chance for debate, without opportunity for discussion—these bills reported in here for the first time this morning and obtainable only this morning by Members? When the first bill is called up it is proposed not to read the report, not to read the bill in full, but in a few moments' time pass 354 special pension acts, charging the Treasury with $100,000 of annual expenditure in addition to the $200,000 increase you have already had. I ask you, gentlemen, where is the economy of which you have been talking? Why do you not go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] is chairman, and bring out of that committee a provision giving to the great masses a measure for the further extension of the service of the postal department and forever cut loose the oppressive and tyrannous grasp of the express corporations of this country?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will not.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. You have asked a question. Decency ought to require you to yield on that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. You can answer when you bring in this bill from your committee.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We will bring that bill—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RODDENBERY. I decline to yield. And, further, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the Committee on Agriculture might profit the country by bringing out a bill for the relief of thousands, yes, millions, of American people by reporting a bill striking down the inhuman and merciless plunder of the American farmer by the Wall Street gamblers, who fix the prices of his products and crucify his prosperity. This carries no appropriation, but will be freighted and laden with blessings and happiness to our people.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RODDENBERY. I decline to yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. I just wanted to ask, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman on my right believes it is fair to compel every municipality in the North to maintain a soldiers' relief department, that costs one city, the city which I have the honor to represent in part—the city of Boston—every 10 years in excess of $1,500,000 as an aid to old soldiers who receive pensions that are inadequate to care for their immediate wants? I want to ask him if he believes that that is fair? Does he not rather believe that the burden of the care of the soldiers and their dependents should be distributed among the 46 States? [Applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERY. I think every State in this Republic, from Maine to Florida, from California to Texas, from Wisconsin to Georgia, and every county within our domain, should pay their just tribute and just proportion to support and maintain the Government and to give just, adequate, unprivileged, and indiscriminating pensions to the old soldiers of this country who fought adverse to the position that my people took. The people of Georgia raise no voice and no protest against that. Go to the records of the past, as to pension legislation, and you will find that they have stood for it, and they have paid for it, and they ask no reward, no praise, and no applause. We take our place in this country and do our duty. But that fact and no other fact, not even that of sectionalism, is entitled to debar an humble Representative of any State from standing on this floor and maintaining that before you pass 355 special private pension bills through this Congress in one day's time that there should be opportunity for discussion, for debate, for reading, and for consideration of both the bills and the committee reports. In behalf of my constituency and in fidelity to public duty I protest against it and shall delay it as long as I possibly can.

And, gentlemen, I advise you now, in absolute frankness, that if you pass this bill without fair consideration you will do it only after availing yourselves of every legitimate parliamentary resort necessary to accomplish it, and it will only be after I shall have combated it in like manner, not for dilatory purposes, not for vexation, not for party or political embarrassment, but to let gentlemen understand that these measures shall not go through unconsidered and undigested, without a struggle, though weak, and without a resistance, though unsuccessful.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. RODDENBERY. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman? Maybe I can yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I yield to the gentleman for a question only.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I understood the gentleman to favor municipalities, counties, and so on paying pensions to soldiers.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Not at all.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The question I want to ask is, Are you in favor of the National Government paying pensions to Federal soldiers?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes. The gentleman entirely misunderstood me.

I mentioned State governments, counties, and municipalities, referring to my own State specifically, merely to show, with emphasis, to the gentlemen on that side and the gentlemen on this side that the motives which actuate me in opposing the mad rush of these two pension bills through Congress were not because I sought to enable my people to escape, or that they desired to escape, their just burdens of duty or taxation for any just measure that the Congress might require.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Then if the gentleman is in favor of the National Government pensioning the Federal soldiers, if I understand the gentleman in that way, what sort of a pension bill does the gentleman think the Federal soldiers are entitled to?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will state to the gentleman that the pension acts now on the statute books, though I do not approve them, are on their face more nearly wise and just than the bill now proposed or any bill that I have seen passed here. I am informed that on the pension rolls there are many pensioners against whom there rested a judgment of the War Department and the judgment of the Army court-martial that they were deserters. It is continually alleged that persons are on the pension pay roll whose record shows a judgment saying, "You have deserted the Army; you have betrayed the country."

Notwithstanding the military record of many of them show desertion, yet here 20 and 30 years after the war the soldier comes to Congress with a political friend who sets to work and technically straightens out the kink in his record of desertion. The court-martial and the judgment of the Army commander is set aside by legislative machinery, and, lo and behold, in 1912 he is drawing a pension as a faithful soldier of the Union Army while the records show that when the blood was flowing and the fight was in progress and when the roll was called he failed to answer to his name and was set down on the roster as a deserter. I am opposed to it. I am opposed to a pension proposition which takes a man, as is done in this bill, now drawing a pension of $15 a month, who now owns property worth $1,500, who has already been refused an increase of pension by the Pension Department because the evidence does not show that his disability entitles him to it, and doubles his pension in the face of these facts. I am against it. It is an outrage. [Applause.]

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. I understand the gentleman voted against the Sherwood bill?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I did.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman, without a long discussion, describe to this House in a very few words the kind of a pension bill he would favor?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes; I would favor a pension bill that has in it the names of wounded or needy American soldiers who enlisted in the Army and went into its service, and there answered the demands and the commands of their superior officers until they were either honorably discharged or until they met the fate that was met by so many men from both sections. Do not give to an officer, who sat back in a bomb-proof, $200 a month and then give the old fellow who stood in the front of the fight $10 a month. [Applause.] I say, do not give a pension of $100 a month to your tin-horn generals and your tin-horn colonels, who hung around the wagon that handed out the grub and gave out the rations to the real soldiers, and never ventured closer to battle than to hear distant echoes of the cannonade, and then give to the old soldier whose wife is crippled and unable to contribute to his comfort a pension of $10 a month.

If I could do so in a parliamentary way, I would say that it is the most monumental spectacle of favoritism, of hypocrisy, of political pull ever sought to be heralded as a patriotic care of the defenders of the Republic. No country maintains so shameless a roll of inequalities, injustices, and impostors, a dishonor to the thousands of heroes deservedly placed thereon.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I must decline to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The gentleman asked me a question which required so long to answer that I must decline further to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. THAYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. THAYER. Is this Gen. Adams, who has written this criticism of the pension law—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield in order to permit the gentleman to discuss the record of Gen. Adams. If the record of Gen. Adams is straight, it needs no statement from the gentleman.

Mr. THAYER. I am not asking to discuss his record in the war. I am simply asking if he is the same Gen. Adams that did something else.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to answer, and decline to yield to the gentleman to ask that question.

Mr. THAYER. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman withdraws his consent to yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to yield. I am going to confine myself to this pension bill, and I object to gentlemen asking questions about the record of any man not in the bill in order to dodge this pension bill. When I shall have concluded gentlemen may see fit to discuss it. If they do, that is all right so far as I am concerned. It is all right to attack my section, to attack the motives that move me, but I will ask you gentlemen to answer your country one thing, why you now propose to bring these bills in with long reports upon them at 12 o'clock noon to-day and force a vote on 350 items when no Member has had an hour outside of this House in which to consider them? Gentlemen, answer to the country and answer to your own sense of public duty if it is the part of judgment, if it is the part of wisdom, and if it inculcates a high regard for the honor roll of the American soldier that a bill providing for his necessities in old age shall come in here, unexplained and uninvestigated, and be written upon the statutes of the country in so short a time.

There is one other question, gentlemen. Can not we bring out some legislation that does not carry a pension to somebody—legislation to protect the toilers of this country against the gamblers who speculate in their products to the extent of vast millions? Can not we take up legislation to give the toilers of this country freedom from the tyranny and corporate oppression of the express companies and other carriers that literally float in the size of their dividends and give the people exorbitantly expensive service? Can we consider nothing but pensions and more taxes for Army, for Navy—for war in time of peace? And, more than that, we shall be glad to see that other committee who has had under consideration now for many, many months a measure relating to the restriction of immigration for the protection of American citizenship. Let us hope that that committee will bring in a bill for this House to consider that does not carry an appropriation; that will protect the American laborer against the influx of the Hottentot, the Ethiopian, and God only knows what other races of men from the scum of southern Europe and other criminal-breeding countries.

Gentlemen, if you want to legislate, bring in some measure like that in the interest of the American citizen, American manhood, American labor, that the enlightenment, intelligence, and virtue of our people may be maintained; that the high quality of the people of our great country and its resources may not be bartered away to the illiterate, the vicious, the Black Hand that now come literally in streams from the overcrowded, festering sections of foreign lands.

Gentlemen, I apprehend that when you bring in these bills, the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Kansas and other gentlemen will not be standing down there in the pit wanting these bills passed without consideration, without discussion, without reading, without investigation, or without argument.

I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that when these measures are brought forward to be passed on by the House of Representatives they will not come in overnight and be called up on the floor the next morning under special rule or privilege like pension day, or farmers' relief bill day, or extension of the mail-facility day; I dare say they will not come to vote by unanimous consent and be passed without debate. I suspect that some gentleman will arise in his place and say that these measures ought to be carefully considered, and the consensus of the opinion of the House will be with him. Where are you now?

Mr. Speaker, I hope in the discussion of this question I have not left my position on it indistinct or unintelligible. These bills are here. It is favoritism, it is private legislation for elect individuals. Where are the other 460,000 soldiers of the Union Army? They are not in this bill. Who sits up here now to pick out 350 veterans and say out of the vast mass of 460,000 old, scarred, and blood-stained soldiers of this country we have chosen 350 and pensioned them because, forsooth, they may perish? Where are the other 460,000? No just bill, no honest legislation, no wise enactment need fear fair discussion bill by bill, report by report, fact by fact before the House of American Representatives. You have not dared open these bills to investigation and scrutiny of the people's representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the rule forbidding applause or demonstrations in the gallery. Occupants of the gallery are not allowed to express approval or disapproval of speeches in the House.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, may I say in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois against approving applause in the gallery of my utterances that I have not a single officeholder in Washington holding a job now sitting in the gallery. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is called upon to admonish the occupants of the gallery that applause, either of approval or disapproval, is not allowed.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with some degree of interest and with some astonishment to the speech of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY]. I desire to attest here and now my admiration for the valor of the soldiers of the North and the soldiers of the South; they were American citizens and fought with the valor of American soldiers. I believe that those who went into the southern army were loyal to their section of the country and were honest though mistaken in their purpose. But I desire to take a few moments only to-day in the consideration of this bill. I realize that the war is over, and hope that the memory of those bloody deeds may be blotted out of our minds, except so far as history may record them, and that we can, I am sure, say that this is a united country and all join in thanks to God that such is the case. Let us not to-day indulge in any remarks that would wound the feelings of any.

And I am glad to-day that we can look around on the floor of this House and see good, true, and loyal men who served in the army of the South who are to-day serving here with these Union soldiers of the North. There is no bitterness, there is no strife between these soldiers on both sides who took part in that memorable struggle, and it only remains for a few of those who have come since that time who would attempt to stir up strife in this country on sectional lines. [Applause.] Reference has been made by the gentleman from Georgia to a recent article by Gen. Charles Francis Adams, and I believe he had that article placed in the RECORD. On May 24, 1910, Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, a Member of this House, a gallant Union soldier, and one who served four years as a soldier and participated in 42 battles in that war, to-day bears no ill will but only the kindest feeling for the people of the Southland, made a speech upon the floor of this House in reference to Gen. Charles Francis Adams, in which he used this language:

One would naturally expect Gen. Adams to have an especial feeling of comradeship toward former Volunteer officers of the subordinate grades—majors, captains, and lieutenants. From his entrance upon Army life as lieutenant of Cavalry in December, 1861, the Army records show that he served as lieutenant and captain largely on mounted headquarters duty.

In view of Gen. Adams's somewhat vivid version of his own Civil War experience and his indefensible reflection upon the honor of practically all the surviving officers, he can find no fault if I condense and reproduce his military record. I get the facts from the records of the War of the Rebellion, the annual report of the adjutant general of Massachusetts for 1865, and from the history of the First Regiment Massachusetts Cavalry, by Capt. Crownsfield, of that regiment.

Gen. Adams entered the service as first lieutenant of the First Massachusetts Cavalry on December 19, 1861. He served as lieutenant and captain until July, 1864. For a considerable time he was on detached service with two companies doing escort and provost duty at Gen. Meade's headquarters. In the spring of 1864, when bloody trouble was threatening the Army of the Potomac, Capt. Adams secured a leave of absence and went to Europe.

[Applause.]

When with his regiment Capt. Adams shared in its several skirmishes with the enemy's cavalry, and was, no doubt, a brave soldier. His severest fighting experience was at Aldie, Va., where he lost about half of his squadron captured, but with no fatalities.

[Applause.]

Is it not strange Gen. Adams should speak of his comrades in such language as he did in his pamphlet issued lately? One would naturally think he would express a kindlier feeling for those who served with him. They were just as brave as he in war and are to-day just as patriotic. He may need a pension less, but he needs the sympathy more of all true American citizens for his attack on these veterans.

Gen. SHERWOOD further says:

On July 15, 1864, Capt. Adams was commissioned lieutenant colonel of the newly recruited Fifth Massachusetts (Negro) Cavalry, of which regiment he became a colonel on February 15, 1865, some 60 days before Lee's surrender. The military history of this regiment records one skirmish, no battles, no fatalities, no wounded, no accidents.

[Applause.]

Gen. Adams says of his Army service: "Toward the close it became intolerably tedious." Gen. Adams's military service seems to have been of a nature to render him, now in his days of abundant wealth, unsympathetic with those of his former comrades who shared in the real fighting of the war, and many of whom now, in addition to the disability of wounds and age, carry the burden of pathetic penury.

This, my friends, is the statement of the gallant old soldier, Gen. SHERWOOD, whom you all know, as he gives the record of this man, Charles Francis Adams.

Mr. JACKSON. I simply want to inquire of the gentleman, or the gentleman from Georgia can reply if he cares to answer, whether the fact that Gen. Adams commanded a negro regiment for 60 days at the end of the war would help the gentleman in a campaign for reelection in the State of Georgia, the purpose for which the speech was evidently delivered on the floor of this House?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to state that I do not know whose word one who has been born since the war began had better take than the word of an old general who served throughout the length of that war, and I want to read just a few more words from the speech of Gen. SHERWOOD, when he said:

There are many surviving officers who are so favorably situated financially that they will not avail themselves of the pecuniary benefits of the pending bill if enacted, but practically with one accord these men earnestly approve the measure, because of their knowledge of the absolute need of their less fortunate comrades, including the many hundreds in soldiers' homes.

Duty calls us to alleviate the woes of our needy comrades staggering to a near-by grave. Let us do our best to light and lighten the road. As the old English poet, Wordsworth, wrote, 120 years ago:

Make old age serene and bright,
And lovely as a Lapland night,
To lead them to the end.

[Applause.]

I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois might be considered as somewhat depreciatory of the military record of this Gen. Adams. Would it not be well to add that Gen. Adams probably lent distinguished and effective service in the great battle which was held in the air on about the 23d day of February, 1912, of RODDENBERRY against the House of Representatives? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would not like to go into personalities in this matter, so far as Members of this House are concerned. I have great respect for the gentleman from Georgia, and I realize, Mr. Chairman, that sometimes humanity, sometimes human nature in all of us may be weak.

I realize that sometimes upon this floor Members are led to say things at which possibly others might take offense, and I would not wish to say anything personally against my friend from the State of Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY], although realizing that he is mistaken. But I believe that he is honest in his views, and at least, so far as he himself is concerned, deluded as he may be, he is honest enough to think what he has been saying has some effect upon this House and upon the country.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I take no exception to the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], and merely observe that the water from the fountain, under no circumstance, can be any purer than its source.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does the gentleman want to ask a question?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Go ahead.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] asked the gentleman if he thought that the fact that Gen. Adams commanded a negro regiment would help me at home. I think not; and I do not think that the fact that you propose, as shown on page 12 of the report, to pension Maj. Pike, who was major of United States colored troops, will help me.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] is not opposing this bill because he picked out that one individual case. I want to say—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I assure the gentleman I did not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois (continuing). That the gentleman from Georgia can not hope to defeat a bill upon the floor of this House with such argument as that. And I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I can pick out of this bill many cases that would appeal to him or any other fair-minded man of poor, old, and blind men who have had long and honorable service, and who now, when they are old—some of them 80 years of age or more—require the aid and constant attendance of another person. And I hope my friend from Georgia has not so far lost his feeling for humanity and for men who fought for their country as to want to deny them enough to live on while they yet remain on earth. Charity, what a blessed thing, and how much we all need it. Let us not forget the word and what it means, but let us, too, remember to be just to those who have deserved justice for noble acts performed. [Applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I want to interrupt the gentleman just long enough to assure him that he rightly defines my views and feelings on this subject. I have no such purpose, and in referring to the report as to the major of a colored regiment I was merely answering the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] in kind. His reference to the fact that Gen. Adams commanded a negro regiment had no more to do with the merits of the case than the fact that this major who wants an increase of pension was a negro commander.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not care to go into a contest with the gentleman from Georgia on those points. All I want to know as to these pension bills is that these men had honorable service and have been honorably discharged as soldiers of this Government, that their condition financially and physically is such that they require more pension than they are now receiving in order to take proper care of them, or, at least, give them the necessities of life. When this committee, headed by that grand old man, Gen. SHERWOOD, bring in a bill which both Democrats and Republicans unanimously agree upon, after a thorough investigation by a man detailed by the Pension Department and the committee, I am willing, my friends, to believe that they have not put in that bill the names of men, or women, or children who do not need this little help from the Government that we are able to give them.

And I want to say just this in conclusion: As an old soldier wrote me a short time ago from out in Illinois, when the war broke out they were paid $13 a month in depreciated currency, and after the war had closed the Government did not pay to the soldiers the difference between greenbacks and the gold, but did pay the bonds in gold. He said: "We gave our services to our country and were willing to lay down our lives if necessary to defend and help it. So we gave all we could. The man who loaned the money to the Government, the man who bought the bonds, gave what he had in worldly goods to sustain the Government. We certainly did as much as he, and he was not asked to take less than a hundred cents on the dollar of the money that he had advanced, and the claim was not made that the Government could not afford to pay it."

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. ADAIR rose.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MARTIN of Colorado). The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] is recognized.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] can not take the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman from Illinois was yielding time. Whom does the gentleman from Illinois recognize?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I wish to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I should not ordinarily take any part in this debate, because I assume that the bill as reported by the committee will pass, as has been the practice heretofore. But I want to say a word about Charles Francis Adams, whose name has been dragged in here as an argument against this bill, and who has been disparaged by those in favor of it, especially as to his military record.

Charles Francis Adams is the great-grandson of a President of the United States. He is the grandson of a President of the United States. His father was one of the most distinguished citizens of the United States in his day, and Charles Francis Adams is the worthy great-grandson and grandson and son of those in his family who have preceded him. He is one of the first citizens of this country to-day, not only intellectually and morally, but in every other way; and not only that, he was a gallant soldier of the Civil War.

In my judgment my friend from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, did not add anything to the cause of pensions or anything to this debate by disparaging the record of Gen. Adams as a soldier. Gen. Adams went into the service a young man, as a lieutenant, served in various capacities, and was brevetted a brigadier general for his services. Everyone who knows him and knows his service intimately believes that it entitled him to great credit rather than disparagement.

But whether Gen. Adams was a good soldier or not has nothing whatever to do with this bill. His name and standing as a distinguished man has been dragged into this debate without any license whatever, and disparaging his service does not in any way change the question which is before the House. The matter which is before the House is the consideration of a pension bill which has been prepared by the same methods and which has the same characteristics as similar bills have had for many years. I do not know anything about the character of the bills which were passed before I came to Congress, and I have no particularly intimate knowledge of their character since

I came here, but I have introduced special pension bills for worthy soldiers and the widows of worthy soldiers, and I want to say that, as far as my personal experience is concerned, there never has been one of these bills reported by the Committee on Pensions, or by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which has not been justified and which did not in every respect meet my approval.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUCKER of Colorado). Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. WEEKS. With pleasure.

Mr. KOPP. Does not the gentleman think that as a matter of fact these special pension bills are the most meritorious ones that are passed, for this reason, that every Member will introduce bills specially where those who ask for them are absolutely needy, so that every special bill that is passed helps some one in great need, while many of the general pensioners receiving pensions under general law do not financially need the help to so great an extent?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I was going on to say exactly what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said for me. So far as my experience is concerned, every one of the bills which have been passed, beneficial to the men and women in my district, have been bills relating to cases where there was great need, due to disease, wounds, or financial incapacity. Many of the beneficiaries under the general pension laws are not, in my judgment, needy to the same extent, and I am not entirely in accord with Gen. Adams in his criticism of these special pension bills. It may have been true in the past that bills were passed which gave a pension to persons who were not entitled to them, but I do not believe that that has been the case since I have been a Member of this House, and I have received assurance that the same methods are being followed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in this Congress with respect to them that have been followed during the last six or seven years, and I believe that those methods have the approval of those Members of this House who have made any investigation of them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to know who controls the time on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is entitled to an hour, and he has used about 25 minutes of his time.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I understand that. I meant to inquire who has control of the time against the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Anybody whom the Chair recognizes at the expiration of an hour is entitled to another hour.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to say that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER], who has been presiding, has my name marked down on a paper as one of those desiring time. If the Chair will consult the paper before him, he will see that that is true, and I call on the present Chair to grant me time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to overrule the point of order. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have always felt that it took merit in order to receive reward, and I have never been disposed to cast my vote for the purpose of taking money out of the Treasury of the Government, that belongs to the people, unless it was for a meritorious cause. I am aware of the fact that there are some people who believe that the soldiers of this country have been paid enough. I am also aware of the fact that there are some who think they have been paid too much; but if there be such here to-day, I want to call their attention to the fact that the men in whose interest this bill is now before this House are men who are in such a physical and financial condition that they are suffering to-day for the necessities of life.

It is said that at the close of the war a handful of southern soldiers stopped on the wayside to parch some corn for a frugal meal. One of them said, "John, what are you going to do?" John replied, "I can't go back home and tell my people that the cause of the South is lost." He said to his comrade, "What are you going to do?" who replied, "I am going back home, kiss Mary, and make a crop."

That very same principle is what is making the South prosperous to-day. The man who can suffer defeat and take heart anew and go to work for a new civilization and a new future is the man who will succeed in life. The section of country which can do that will be prosperous, and the South is doing that to-day. The new South is one of the most hopeful territories within the United States. It is rich in soil, it is rich in intelligence, it is rich in resources, and to-day we are looking to the South for some of the greatest results to be attained in our country.

My friend from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] takes the view of the gentleman who said he could not go back home and tell his people of defeat. The men who are supporting this bill represent the man who said, "I am going back home, kiss my wife, and raise a crop." I want to say that I belong to the class who take a hopeful view of the situation. Let us raise a crop for the future which will stand for America and the union of these States; a crop that will continue to honor the defenders of our national honor who left their homes, their wives, their babies, and their kindred, by paying them for their services a sufficient sum for their support during their declining years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. I would be glad to have a few minutes more.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAIR. Does not the gentleman know that the time consumed in debate carried on by the friends of this bill is contributing toward the defeat of the bill; that it must be read under the five-minute rule; and that every man who wants to see this bill pass ought to allow time for it to be read under the five-minute rule?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if I believed that the debate upon this bill would defeat it, I could come to but one conclusion, which would be that a discussion of the bill would reveal its lack of merit. I do not believe that. I do not believe a discussion of this bill will defeat it, because I think that a correct principle underlies this legislation. If that were not so, I would not want to stand on the floor of this House advocating the bill. I believe discussion of this bill will not only not defeat it, but that it will bring to it the support of men who are now doubtful as to whether they ought to vote for it. The old soldiers are not asking Congress to do wrong, neither are they begging for an allowance which is right, but they are demanding recognition and pay for their deeds of valor in the cause and the union of these States.

Mr. ADAIR. When will you get a vote on it?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have only a few minutes left, but I will say to the gentleman from Indiana he is no more anxious about the success of this bill than I am, but I can not sit still in my seat when men on the floor of this House call in question the motive which prompted the committee who reported this bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Does not the gentleman believe that this debate is delaying the passage of this bill?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the debate on any question delays a vote on it, but an honest, fair, and intelligent debate never did interfere with the passage of any good law. It is the reckless passage of a law that brings about contempt, but it is the free, open, and intelligent discussion of measures that gives the people satisfactory laws that are not likely to be repealed after their passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire permission to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. I am for this bill, Mr. Chairman, for it seeks to relieve those old soldiers who are now helpless, without means of support, and dependent upon others for the necessities of life. The Government owes to them a debt which can never be paid in money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is proper to say a word after the speech of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY]. In the first place, I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say that no Member of the House had had an opportunity until to-day to read this bill or the report upon it. If the gentleman thought that, the gentleman was in error. I had this bill and report upon it and examined them both on yesterday. There has been more time intervening between the report on this bill being printed and the consideration of the bill in the House than there was between the printing of the report on the chemical schedule bill and its consideration in the House.

The gentleman from Georgia, if I understood him correctly, was opposed to the passage of this bill because it made exceptions to the general rule, and I thought I understood him to say that he was satisfied with the merits of the existing laws relating to pensions.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the gentleman, but I did not intend to convey that idea.

Mr. MANN. A few days ago we had under consideration in the House the pension appropriation bill carrying appropriations for the payment of pensions authorized by existing law. That bill was in charge of the distinguished and able gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], a member of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the subcommittee dealing with the pension appropriation bill. When the bill was considered in the House, and the consideration in committee had ceased, and the matter came up for final disposal in the House, a gentleman on the Democratic side of the House demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill—an appropriation bill not extending in any particular the pensions authorized by law, but only appropriating the money to carry out the plighted faith of the Government as expressed by law for the payment of pensions already allowed.

I notice upon the roll call there were two gentlemen from Georgia who voted for the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. I have only 10 minutes, and I can not yield until I finish this statement. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BRANTLEY, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. LEE, voted for the bill. Out of a delegation of 11 Members from that State the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. RODDENBERRY, voted against the appropriation bill. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. EDWARDS, voted against the appropriation bill. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, voted against this appropriation bill. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HOWARD, voted against the appropriation bill. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. TRIBBLE, voted against this appropriation bill. It was a bill merely making appropriations to pay pensions already allowed under existing law. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. ADAMSON, is not recorded as voting. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARDWICK, is not recorded as voting. The gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HUGHES, is not recorded as voting.

In connection with the gentlemen from Georgia who voted against the bill there were included the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BEALL; the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. BYRNES; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CALLAWAY; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. CANDLER; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. COLLIER; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. DICKSON; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES; the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. ELLERBE; the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. FAISON; the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. FINLEY; the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. GODWIN; the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. GOODWIN; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY; the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. HELM; the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. JACOWAY; the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. LEGARE; the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. LEVER; the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. OLDFIELD; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SHEPPARD; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SMITH; the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. STEDMAN; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. STEPHENS; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. STEPHENS; the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WEBB; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WITHERSPOON; and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. YOUNG.

These gentlemen, on an appropriation bill to carry out the terms of the existing law to pay pensions already allowed under existing law, not under the Sherwood bill or these bills—these gentlemen, when the bill to pay these pensions had been reported by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], all voted against carrying out the confessed faith of the Government to pay pensions already allowed. [Applause.]

It is no wonder that the gentleman from Georgia now objects to this bill, and now objects to the Sherwood bill. He is opposed to the payment of the pensions which we agreed to pay by law, allowed under the law. The gentleman from Georgia and these other gentlemen who voted against paying these pensions are in marked contrast with the action of this House a few days ago, which passed, without a dissenting vote, without an opposing voice, the bill providing for the payment of war claims, nearly all of which goes into the Southern States. [Applause.]

We on our side are willing to forgive and forget. We are willing to pay the claims in the Southern States growing out of the War of the Rebellion, and you—I thank God a small minority of you—are unwilling even to vote the money to pay the pensions which we have already provided. I do thank God that the minority is small.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COLLIER. I simply want to ask the gentleman from Illinois, because he has a list there, if he read all the list and if every one of all the names recorded as voting against the bill were from those States mentioned?

Mr. MANN. I read all the list, with one exception.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I offered an amendment one day last week carrying $5,000 to pay a claim of a woman who lived in the South, but who during the war lived entirely every day of it in New York, in a State that was loyal. Did the gentleman who is now on the floor support that amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what amendment the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I have stated it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I can not tell from the gentleman's statement of it; I heard his statement. I voted for and helped to pass without a single vote against it, or a single voice against it, the omnibus war-claims bill, the beneficiaries of which are mainly in the States of the South, the representatives of which, or a portion of them, voted against paying pensions already allowed under existing law.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be granted five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, it has been charged that undue discrimination is used in the passage of these private pension bills. I do not desire that the record of our proceedings here shall go forth to-day with that statement unchallenged or unanswered. I do not believe that any man in the House or elsewhere can make that statement who has ever read the rules of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The committee have a regulation that they will not even consider, let alone pass, a case of any soldier for increase or original pension unless it shall first be proved by sufficient affidavit that the soldier is either helpless or partially helpless, and also that he is pecuniarily dependent on his present pension. Again, consider the advanced age of the dependents who are proposed to be helped by this present bill: Garland, of Pennsylvania, 81 years of age, drawing a pension of $20 a month; Tindall, of Ohio, 80 years of age, drawing a pension of $20 a month; Wright, of Illinois, 77 years of age, drawing a pension of $20 a month; and many of them 76, 79, 81, 84 years of age. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia, who consumed a whole hour to-day in making such a violent attack upon this pension bill, if he wishes to go upon record as desiring the soldiers of this Republic to spend their last days in the poorhouse?

The greatest discrimination has been used by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in deciding what claims shall be approved by them in reporting these special bills. Only a small fraction of the bills introduced ever find the light of day in this House because of the discrimination used by the committees and the special examiners in the two committees in the House and Senate, and I desire here to bear testimony to the faithfulness, to the industry, and the great painstaking of not only the chairman but the individual members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions throughout the years that have passed under Mr. SULLOWAY, of New Hampshire, and now under Mr. SHERWOOD, of Ohio. They have been fair and just in selecting the deserving cases from among the myriad of bills introduced and reporting them favorably to this House, and I believe that it is the consensus of judgment of the American people, East, West, North, and South as well, that the men who have borne the burden and heat of the day in battle shall be cared for by this country in their hour of need and in their declining years, and that they shall be given a competence to keep them out of public almshouses and enable them to feel that a grateful country still renders them homage for the great service they wrought and the sacrifices they endured. [Applause.] I yield back the portion of my time which may remain.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STONE].

[Mr. STONE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely regret that this question has come before the House for discussion at this time. I regret that any Member of this House found it necessary to break the long custom which I understand has existed here, allowing consideration of these bills without objection, and certainly without filibustering. But, Mr. Chairman, the fact that this has been done and the fact that it has gone broadcast in the press of the country that there is to be objection made both here and elsewhere in Congress to the enactment of these bills, makes it necessary, I think, that some one should say something upon this question.

Now, what is the situation? We have endeavored here to the best of our ability to pass a law which would do justice to all of the old soldiers of the North. So far we have not succeeded, and now when this committee, seeking merely to relieve destitution, comes into this House with a bill, we are met with this objection. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] and men who, like him, voted against the appropriation pension bill the other day, must face this situation when they charge that there is any political issue in this question. Mr. Chairman, it has long since ceased to be a political issue anywhere in the North. And I want to-day to resent the idea that anyone is favoring the pension of an old soldier for any political reason. The fact that gentlemen come here and make that charge, the fact that gentlemen come here and say that the pension roll is full of fraud and imposition upon the Government, I say, shows that they are impelled by some motive which no longer exists in the North upon this question.

I allow no man, Mr. Chairman, to exceed me in admiration for the people of the South, nor for the South as a section, nor for the private Confederate soldier. I believe that the men who followed the Stars and Bars as privates did so honestly, and I admire them as American soldiers. But, Mr. Chairman, I always have believed, and I still believe, that there never would have been any war if it had not been for the bad politics and bad politicians of the South. The only partisan feeling I have about this question whatever is that the same sort of bad politics will yet keep alive that feeling against soldiers of the North and against the people of the North unless the present statesmen of the South are wise enough to put a stop to it.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other thing I want to mention here in the short time allowed me, and that is that the people of the South are not alone in their unfairness to the old soldiers of the country. As I allow no one to exceed me in admiration for the people of the South, I do not allow anyone to exceed me in admiration for that great family of Adamses, of the State of Massachusetts. I have no doubt but that this Gen. Adams who has been mentioned here is a worthy successor of that great family. His is one of the great names of letters of the country. I have quoted his words on industrial questions as authority on this floor; but the trouble is that he, like others of the East, has become convinced that a continuance of the pension system of the country may eventually lead to the adoption of an income tax as a means of meeting the expenses of the Government. This tax would fall heaviest upon the people of Massachusetts and the East, where the great fortunes of the country exist. These fortunes were, for the most part, built up by the votes of old soldiers of the North and West, and it comes in ill grace for these beneficiaries of a political policy sustained by old soldier votes to join those of the South, the former foes of the soldiers, in opposing the liberal pensions which the Government has promised to its defenders.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I sought, by interrupting my friend from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY], to have him state his true reason for his bitter opposition to pension legislation, manifested whenever a special or a general pension bill was under consideration here. He refused to answer my question; in fact, he refused to permit me to ask him the question.

I assume, then, that the only opposition which he has to pension legislation is based upon the reason that he gave to this House, and that is on the ground of economy. And yet within the past two weeks I heard the gentleman's voice—and I could not mistake that voice—raised on the floor of this Hall in favor of what he was pleased to term a "pork" bill; in other words, a bill for public buildings, some of them being for his district, I assume, in the State of Georgia.

I lay down the proposition here and now, as I have announced it several times before, in all earnestness, that the United States of America owes to the soldiers of the Civil War a larger debt, measured in dollars and cents, or by any other standard, than it can ever pay. [Applause.] I say that the United States of America owes it to itself to first discharge the obligation it owes to these old veterans before entering into new obligations to erect public buildings in your district, my friend, in order to return you to a seat in this House. [Applause.] It is my judgment that your constituents, who contended so valiantly against the northern army in the dark days of 1861-1865 do not oppose liberal pension legislation. I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Judge RUCKER], who is now presiding over the deliberations of the Committee of the Whole to-day, is an ex-Confederate veteran, a gentleman of Southern extraction, who served nearly four years in the Confederate Army, a part of which time, I am advised, he languished in a Federal prison, deprived of his liberty and of the right to fight for the cause which he deemed just, and whenever a pension bill is on this floor for consideration I am glad to say that that ex-Confederate veteran has always cast his vote in favor of that bill. He is not alone in this, for his position has been supported in the same way by another distinguished gentleman of this House from the State of Maryland, who likewise fought under the Southern flag and who gave his time and the best that was in him in the interest of the so-called "lost cause."

This old soldier—and I say that in reverence—is my friend, the Hon. J. FRED TALBOTT. It is a source of pleasure to me to refer to these gentlemen who endured all the hardships of war and who now, when the opportunity affords, are hastening with their vote to lend comfort to the declining days of those men who were their ancient enemies, but who are now their fellow countrymen and friends. The example of these old soldiers can well be followed by all of us, and their exhibition of a broader patriotism should guide the course of those who upon this floor seek to embarrass by technical opposition the course of pension legislation aimed to relieve the veterans of the Civil War. Does anyone believe that these two distinguished soldiers of the Confederacy to whom I have referred come under the category of those whom my friend from Georgia asserts are supporting pension legislation from selfish motives? No. Everyone knows that their assistance is given because they are actuated by honest impulses and the highest patriotic motives. [Applause.]

Further, I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] that his own native State has the self-same pension system in vogue, looking to the furnishing of assistance to those men who wore the gray. The State of Georgia—and I am glad it does—gives to the soldier who lost an eye in following the flag of the lost cause to defeat $100 a month—

A MEMBER. A year—

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; $100 a year, and pays a proportionate sum to the other soldiers who served in that cause. If the gentleman goes upon the hustings in his district and tells those ex-Confederate veterans that he is in favor of more liberal pension legislation for them on the statute books of the State of Georgia, he is chargeable with the self-same motives that he lays at my door and to the door of every man whom he opposes on the question of pension legislation on the floor of this House.

It is true that the pension bill has grown, but it has not kept pace with the needs of the many veterans of the Civil War, whose pension has constantly, as prices have advanced, decreased in purchasing power, and it should be the proud boast of every man, whether from the South or the North, that any man who risked his all to keep this Union intact and in support of that flag—and I do not say it for rhetorical purposes—should be given by the Government sufficient means to live with dignity, if not in comfort. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I also would like permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it the purpose to rise without reporting the bill to the House?

Mr. ADAIR. The bill has not been read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to cut off debate?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY)—ayes 93, noes 3.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. I ask the Chair to count.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members, a quorum of the Committee of the Whole, is present. On this vote the ayes are 93, the noes 3, so the committee determines to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and, pending that motion, I move that all general debate close in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of House bill 20585, and, pending that, he moves that general debate be closed in five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion to limit general debate to five minutes.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of House bill 20585.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were—ayes 142, noes 0.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present, and I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count and see if he can count a quorum. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-one Members, not a quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not need to do that. A call of the House comes automatically. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. Those in favor of going into the Committee of the Whole House will, when their names are called, answer "aye," those opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 233, noes 5, answered "present" 4, not voting 151, as follows:

 The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
 The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors and, without objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. AUSTIN, for two days, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. JACOWAY was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of S. E. Weaver, Sixty-second Congress, second session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PENSIONS.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20585, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20585, and by order of the House debate is limited to five minutes.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask for a reading of the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. ADAIR. If no one cares to use the five minutes in general debate, I ask for a reading of the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I have been asking for five minutes or longer all day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but I do desire to join in the complaint of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] that these bills are brought before the House and that Members are not given an opportunity to examine them and file their protest on the floor of this House, if necessary. I am not going to make a speech dealing with generalities, but I am going to take the record that is before us here, and I call upon Members of this House to read it for themselves. I take the first name found in the report. Then I will take the first name that is in the second report, showing I want to be fair about it. The first name is Mr. Bable. He draws a pension of $10 a month. He asked the Pension Bureau for an increase to $15 a month. His claim was rejected on grounds that the claimant could not furnish competent proof connecting his disability with military service. It was again rejected, and rejected on account of the fact that his rheumatism was not sufficiently shown. Now, Mr. Chairman, this man, according to the statement in here—the report of the committee—is worth $600. But what is the fact? He owns a small farm, a small tract of land, and three houses on it in the State of Ohio. I would like for some man to point out to me in Ohio a piece of ground on which there are three houses that is not worth more than $600. I would like to have information on the floor of this House, but we are shut off.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. ANSBERRY. This is my bill and I will give the gentleman information about it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I can not yield, because it will take up my time—

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman does not want the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to call attention to another thing. Take this bill and read it and you will find this man has tried time and time again the names of various diseases; his category of names was not exhausted, however, before he found one that served for pension purposes. He tried 13, and on the thirteenth he landed on nervousness, and with his record before the committee it comes in and recommends that he get an increase of pension to $24 per month. He is 13 times down with complaints of different kinds. His name is Bable.

I am reminded of the Tower of Babel, and it is said that the men there could only speak one tongue. This man is improperly named; he speaks with 13 tongues, and every time he mentions his disability he calls it a different disease with a new tongue. Now, I think it is fair to this House that the members of this committee bring these reports in here in order that we may see and know what they are bringing here. Now, I want to take up the next bill and I want to take the first case in the bill, and I call the attention of the committee to it. The first man they bring in here in the next bill is William Hill. Now, I have not had time to go through these bills and pick out the bad cases, but I have taken the first two that have come up. What do we find? I find here is a man who has been drawing two pensions, contrary to the statutes of the United States, who stated in his petition that he was not drawing a pension at the time when he got his second pension. I can not say whether he swore to it or not, and yet gentlemen in their hurry to get these bills through this House say that these bills have passed in years gone by and that no man has ever raised his voice in protest. I want to say to you here to-day that I resent the intimation that it is a tribute to my diligence as a Representative on the floor of this House that bills are passed through here carrying millions of dollars and I not raise a protest. When I see bills being rushed through the House unjustly, as I conceive them, my constituents expect me to fight them, regardless of precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate is now closed. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Alexander Bable, late of Company E, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. As far as I can ascertain from the report of the committee on this particular claim, the applicant for a pension is at present the recipient of one. That fact does not necessarily argue or demonstrate that he should not have an increase of pension, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it does not show, either, that by his side in the war there were not other soldiers braving the dangers that he braved, undergoing the sacrifices that he underwent, who are not just as deserving and worthy of recognition as this applicant is. It appears that this soldier went into the war and stayed a little while. It also appears that he drew a pension; that thereafter he went to the Pension Department under the existing law and sought to obtain an increase in his pension. It can not be said that the Pension Department of this Government has been prejudicial, unjust, or niggardly, or disposed not to extend the statutes to soldiers who came within the law and sought an increase of pension. Notwithstanding the fair and just disposition of the Pension Office to him, time and time again his claim for an increase of pension was turned down.

Now, after that happened, what transpired? From the meager report we have before us he comes to Congress, and a private bill is introduced in his behalf? Where is Private Jones? Where is Private Smith? Where is Private Williams? Where are all of those who side by side with him, so far as we know, are not receiving as much pension as he did and yet rendered more service, sustained greater injury, and made equally as valiant soldiers? Where are they? Perhaps the author of the bill can tell. And yet, after shifting from ground to ground, he was not allowed a pension for this disability. He was turned down for this ailment; he was not eligible and did not satisfactorily establish this infirmity; and when he had failed to do so he came here. The Congress, without debate, without investigation, without consideration, is asked to pass a privileged private bill for him. I have no desire to even suggest that the members of the Pension Committee report this bill with any view whatever to precipitate it on the House in order to accomplish an injustice. The committee is merely pursuing a precedent of the last four or six years, and possibly a little longer. And in pursuing that precedent they are no more justified than the actual facts will warrant. They get no immunity from the precedent. And I am merely rising to ask that the gentleman who introduced the bill and who is sponsor for it and who said that he would explain to "the gentleman from Georgia," to explain to the House whether or not the Commissioner of Pensions found unjustly against him in one case, in two cases, in three cases—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will be glad to have the author of the bill now explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John Ford, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Where is the gentleman who, when the question was asked, volunteered the statement that he was the author of the bill and wanted to explain the justice of it?

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman in good faith if it is his intention to make a speech on every paragraph of this bill for the purpose of filibustering and delaying the passage of it?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will answer that question frankly. I intend, Mr. Chairman, as a Member, under the rules of the House, to ask recognition from the Chair under the five-minute rule on every paragraph on which, in my judgment, as a Member, it is both my privilege and duty to be heard.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will.

Mr. JACKSON. I find here the bill H. R. 18430, in which the gentleman has asked this Congress to appropriate $68,000,000 to pay certain claims to the people of Georgia and other people of the South. Does not the gentleman think if he would be a little more lenient in paying these claims that his bill would have a better chance to be enacted?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I ask for nothing in that bill except what the records of the War Department say was taken by the Government from the people of the South and nothing except what the Supreme Court of the United States says was unrighteously taken. [Applause.] I challenge the gentleman to present to this House an argument against it based upon the law.

Ah, gentlemen, I well know that somewhere between the point of the hill that I now go down and the one I seek to climb I may fall under the contumely of some of my colleagues and may fall into their disfavor. I recognize that I shall be no exception, and that others have been as unfortunate; but as a Member of the Congress I purpose to meet my duty fearlessly. Likewise I take your criticism, I take your innuendo, I take your disposition to be inconsiderate of open discussion. I make no complaint. I am answerable alone to my country in general and to my constituents in particular.

Mr. JACKSON and Mr. LANGLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To which gentleman does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman is sincere in his opposition to this bill, and if he was sincere in offering his amendment to the first paragraph, I ask him why he did not vote in favor of his own amendment? Because there were no votes cast in favor of it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will answer the gentleman that when the steam roller comes along it sometimes hits a fellow before he can say anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I think that is what will soon happen to the gentleman from Georgia. [Laughter.]

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I have no doubt of it. But though you may find in the Record my honest objections to this bill, you will not find anywhere in the records of the departments an instance where I have indorsed a negro applicant for a job in a department in preference to an old veteran soldier.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the report of the committee on the second paragraph, and I ask that it be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the report indicated will be read.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that as a matter of right I have the privilege of sending it to the Clerk's desk and having it read out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the Clerk read the rule on that subject for the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, House resolution 108 relates to John Ford, who was a private in a company and served from December 31, 1863, to July 20, 1865.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Flora O. McGinnis, widow of John J. McGinnis, late of Company B, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last line. I would like, if I may, to inquire of the chairman of the committee or the chairman of the subcommittee, if he will permit it, apropos the name of Flora O. McGinnis, the widow of John J. McGinnis, whether or not he has before him the data on that case from the office of the Commissioner of Pensions? The report reads in this way:

The widow applied both under the act of June 27, 1890, and the act of April 18, 1908, but both claims were rejected after a special examination, on the ground that claimant's legal widowhood has not been established, it appearing that prior to her marriage with the soldier she had a former husband, named Henry Cooper, who left her in 1863, and the best obtainable evidence failing to show said Cooper's death or that he was divorced from her.

I should like to know of the gentleman what evidence was presented before the Committee on Invalid Pensions that would lead them to conclude that the finding of the Commissioner of Pensions was not warranted, or, if at the time warranted, what subsequent facts have been developed to show that the widow is entitled to a pension as the widow of such soldier. I have neither heard from the author of the bill, nor from the chairman of the committee, nor from the subcommittee. In other words, we have pending before the House—

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman—

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no; sit down.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. We have pending before the House a bill taking money out of the Treasury, and such is the disposition of the distinguished gentleman who occupies the head of the subcommittee as chairman and of the author of the bill, if he be present, that not a word is said in explanation of the items. On the contrary, when some Member, presumably the author of the bill, rises in his place to make explanation before his colleagues and let the truth go in the Record, gentlemen cry aloud to him, "sit down, sit down."

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Oh, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Certainly I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. The gentleman has made some reference presumably to me as being the author of this bill. I fail to find in this omnibus bill and report any names covering bills which I have introduced. I think I am the chairman of the subcommittee which considered this bill, although I am not sure. This pensioner might have been mustered in in New York and have moved into the district of the gentleman from Georgia, for aught I know, and he might be the author of the bill. I do not know about that; but I do say here that I think it is foolish to expect us to bring into this House all the evidence supporting each of these claims. I suppose there are 4 or 5 bushels of documents that would be required if that was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Reuben H. Dillon, late of Companies B and K, Fifth Regiment, and Company K, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "thirty dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the words "thirty dollars," in line 10.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, there may be some good reason, and if there is I am certain the author of the bill or the chairman or some member of the subcommittee can explain what it is, and why the preceding paragraph of the bill gives to a widow by special act $12 a month. The report sets forth the condition of this widow as to her infirmities, her poverty, and her dire circumstances. Now, when they come to this soldier, it appears that he is at the present receiving $12 a month, the same amount that this special bill gives to the widow. Where is the patriotism, where is the justice, and where is the evidence to demonstrate that by a private bill this soldier should be paid $30 a month when a widow on the same page of the bill is given $12? Let us read the report:

Claim for additional pension, based on disease of liver and kidneys, was rejected June 5, 1909, on the ground of no record and the failure of the best obtainable evidence to establish incurable or existence in service or existence at discharge.

Medical testimony shows that applicant is suffering from rheumatism, a uric-acid condition of his whole system, catarrh, and liver trouble.

The Member introducing the bill—

I do not know who he is. It does not appear—states that the applicant has no property and no income except his pension, and urges a measure of relief.

I wonder if the gentleman has some other constituents who want special pensions and who are suffering from disease. I wonder if they would not like to know how he is getting on with the bills providing for their relief.

An increase to $30 a month is recommended.

Why $30? Some gentleman remarked that in passing these bills we must take into consideration the fact that we have vast revenues raised from the country. I am quite sure there must be some good reason why the widow is entitled to $12 while the soldier is entitled to $30. I should like to know what that reason is.

It does not appear in the report; there is no evidence of it here. Yet gentlemen say I am doing violence to the patriotic spirit of the country. What sort of violence? Purely that of asking the author of the bill, the chairman of the subcommittee, to rise and state why it is that the soldier gets $30 and the widow gets only $12. Has he any good reason? Hand it down. Are the people of the country entitled to know? But no information is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman his expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John O. Bryan, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "thirty." [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this paragraph had been concluded and the next one had been begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is entitled to offer his amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I thoroughly appreciate the gentleman's solicitude for a full discussion. I know the call for the regular order was designed particularly to expedite the thorough investigation of the matter, and I hope the Members on this side of the House and of the other who are so heartily supporting me will take no exception to the gentleman's remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for a pension of $30 per month, and the report says that John O'Brien served as a private in the Pennsylvania Cavalry for the period of the war, but that he is now a pensioner at $15 a month. Now, if this soldier is drawing a pension of $15 a month the report ought to give some good reason, unless it wants to impeach the Pension Bureau, why this increase is allowed. Let us read the report:

He was formerly pensioned under the general law at $6 per month on account of a gunshot wound of the right foot, having been wounded by guerrillas near Frederick Hall, Va., in June, 1864.

Now, I have not the World Almanac nor the dictionary at hand to define exactly what guerrillas are, but I take it that it is not material to the pension.

He is a resident of Hot Springs, S. Dak., and was last examined in December, 1902, by the Milbank board of surgeons and was then found to be suffering from the wound, chronic rheumatism, and general debility.

I suspect hundreds and thousands of his old comrades are suffering with general debility without drawing over $8, $10, or $12 a month, and yet this pensioner, according to the report, is to-day the recipient of $15 a month. The report further says:

It is shown by the testimony of Dr. Jennings, of the claimant's home, that he is now totally disabled for labor by reason of chronic gastritis, constipation, a weak heart, and disease of the left kidney, due to renal calculus and uric-acid accumulation, and articular and muscular rheumatism affecting the muscles of the shoulders, arms, back, hips, and legs, and that he can only dress himself with great difficulty.

It is further shown that he owns no property, either real or personal, and has no means of support aside from his pension.

The case is a proper one for congressional legislation on account of the claimant's advanced age, his four years of faithful service, his total disability and destitution. Following precedents in like cases, an increase of his pension to $30 per month is recommended.

If that is true, why is it that precedents in like cases should not be extended to other soldiers who in this very bill are not being given $30 a month? Why does not the author of this bill establish by satisfactory evidence why this private privilege gives to these constituents a preference over his other constituents? I apprehend that gentlemen, who now sit in complacent silence as their bills are called, when they see their constituents who have read the facts in the RECORD, will answer them the questions that I propound. Why do you discriminate against your constituents? You may not answer me, but when you go home I give you notice again that you will have to answer them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Leicester B. Goodell, late of Company B, Thirty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "thirty-six."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CULLOP. This paragraph had been concluded, and the Clerk had proceeded to read the next paragraph, and the gentleman's motion is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is misinformed. The Clerk had not begun to read the next paragraph.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that the amendment is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the Chair is not justified in holding that an amendment offered is dilatory even when that amendment is to strike out the last word.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] for a question.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for any time; I was just proceeding to ask a question; but, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And that is that a Member proposing an amendment and entitled to time can not under the five-minute rule yield his time to another Member.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Indiana the Chair did not understand that to be the position, but understood the gentleman from Georgia yielded to the gentleman from Ohio for a question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I misunderstood the gentleman; I thought he yielded time.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. I did not ask for time, but if the gentleman wants to give a little time I will ask him at this time—

Mr. RODDENBERY. I only yield for a question.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Why it is—

Mr. RODDENBERY. I yield to the gentleman for a question only.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he has in his mind, or carries in his mind, which he expects us to do, all the evidence in support of a claim which he introduced on behalf of Harry Hirschensohn, to pension a Spanish War soldier at $30 a month? Can he tell what this soldier's disabilities were without looking the matter up?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes, sir; I will take great pleasure, but that is not before the Committee on Invalid Pensions; it is before the Spanish War committee—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that gentlemen must confine themselves to the paragraph under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I regret that under the rules of the House I can not present an answer to the question of the gentleman. If he will peruse the RECORD, he may find possibly some bill introduced by me before some other committee that would be germane, and I will be glad to answer him fully; and I desire to say that when a question is propounded to me as to what the facts are affecting the merits of a claim for a pension for any constituent in my district, whether he is a Spanish War soldier or a Union soldier, I shall not sit mute nor stand speechless and not rise and give to the country and my colleagues the justice of his claim. I will answer you. Now, in regard to this pending question, I would be very glad if the author of the bill would give some information. Here is where they get the disease down so as to affect him 40 per cent. He had a fracture and disabilities of various sorts, and he moved from one place to another, which a soldier has a right to do. He is a resident of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., and I judge that some gentleman from South Dakota introduced the bill; and perhaps he may not have to explain to the House why he got this particular pension, but he may have to explain to some of the other old soldiers why he did not get one for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"] Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Agnes W. Culley, widow of Frank C. Culley, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if I could to ascertain—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order; there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 10 words. Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to get information from the chairman of the subcommittee, as well as the author of the bill, in regard to this claim. It must have been shown that this claim was considered, as the Pension Department has already turned a pension down. It appears that this item is for the relief of his widow. This widow was married to the soldier in April, 1895. Well, that is some 25 years after the war, and the Pension Bureau hints, so the report says, that she has no right to pension under the act of 1908. She can not get a pension under the law as it stands, and I have no doubt the Pension Commissioner is correct. She is a resident of Wisconsin, a most magnificent State, producing many great men, although some of them are ruthlessly treated in the time of their misfortune. She is a resident, as I say, of Wisconsin, and owns a home worth $2,200, and now the committee presents this as an extraordinary case where she must be allowed a pension by special act of Congress. Under existing law she is not entitled to it and the report of the committee shows that she is worth property valued at $2,200.

I would like to have the author of the bill explain why it appears that the widow of a soldier who went through the war and 30 years afterwards married her should have a pension. She was not his wife during the war and she has $2,200 worth of property. He proposes now to tax the industrious, laboring, working constituents of his district who have not a thousand dollars, or $500, or $200, or $100 to pay a pension to a widow of a soldier who was not the soldier's wife during the war, but who married him 30 years after the war. I do not perceive the emergency of the case.

But I remember the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] made a statement on the floor of the House in which he undertook to quote President Taft, and he said that the President warned the Congress against too injudicious consideration of the claims of widows who sought family relationship with an old Federal soldier when he was tottering on the edge of the grave, from a mercenary motive. I would like to ask the author of the bill. But the author does not respond. The report does not say what extremity this woman is in who has a good home, worth $2,200, and was strong enough to marry in 1895. I think it is a thrifty community, a prosperous country, and they have their charitable institutions and aid societies. I do not know that it could be said—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Henry W. Wise, late of Company C, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. CURLEY. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I feel that it is most unfortunate and eminently unfair to the Committee on Pensions for a Member to rise in his place in this body and charge that the committee is discriminating in favor of certain individuals when he has no basis for his contention as based on a vote on a proposition that would establish some degree of equality.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, if the Member from Georgia had voted in favor of the Sherwood pension act he, perhaps, would be justified in his contention that discrimination is shown in these various measures. But the very purpose of the Sherwood pension act was to destroy discrimination and to destroy personal favoritism and establish some plane of justice. As one Member of this body, Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly the position that is taken by my good friend from Georgia. Personally, I believed that the Spanish American War had furnished the cement necessary for the making of this Union whole. During that brief struggle the men who had fought under Lee vied with the men who had fought under Grant in proclaiming their love of country and regard for its flag. The spectacle furnished by these men, either on the field of battle or in camp, whenever the inspiring strains of the national anthem struck up, in attesting their loyalty, their fealty, and their devotion to a united Republic, was as pleasing to Americans as it proved displeasing to the rest of the world.

And, Mr. Chairman, I say it without any feeling in the matter whatsoever, that it is about time that some degree of justice should be extended toward those States of this Union who contributed most generously to the keeping of the Union whole. The commissioner of State aid in Massachusetts in a recent report disclosed the fact that $36,000,000 had been expended by the State of Massachusetts since the close of the Civil War in State aid and soldiers' relief. I say, Mr. Chairman, that in God's name it is about time that we established a proper distinction and drew the line between charity and a spirit of justice, fairness, and equality. [Applause.] If men sacrificed their all, or stood ready to do so, that the Union might remain whole, we should give them sufficient pension to make it unnecessary for them to appear as supplicants seeking aid from a State commissioner or a soldiers' relief commissioner. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is about time to stop raising this issue. I had one pension case that the committee were to report to-day—the case of a man who suffered a stroke of paralysis in 1910 and for the last two years has been a confirmed paralytic. The committee voted an increase in that man's pension, reported it in the bill submitted to-day, but the man went to his great reward two weeks ago. If justice had been accorded in his case he would not have been compelled to wait for two years to receive tardy recognition for faithful service at the hands of this Government. [Applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is pending.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I desire to address myself to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that as the consideration of this bill has proceeded, when the rectitude, the justice, the fairness, and the merits of a bill proposed comes to the attention of a Member of the great State of Massachusetts, he does not hesitate to rise and state the merits of it. I am glad to know that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] did not present a bill here of such a character that when it came up, either in the lifetime or after the departure from this life of his constituent, one of the old soldiers, he would not make free—and make brave, if need be—to stand and say why his constituent was entitled to the relief asked for. Such a spirit of tolerance and such a spirit of open-mindedness and fair consideration makes me feel justified in taking fresh hope to proceed in the discussion of this measure in the desire, perhaps vain, that ultimately Members may relent and speak for the merits of the bills they have introduced and had favorably reported.

Mr. Chairman, another thing. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] observes that time after time these questions are being raised, and that the gentleman from Georgia was presenting no facts in support of his statements. I maintain that the committee or author of the bill should support his bill with the facts.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUSSELL. The item now under consideration, Mr. Chairman, is in behalf of Henry W. Wise. Is not that the bill?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. That is the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. The proof in that case shows, and the report shows, that this soldier is 72 years of age, and is so afflicted that he can not feed himself, and requires an attendant all the time. Now, does the gentleman believe that the $30 a month recommended in this item is unjust and ought not to be paid?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will not so state.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then, why fight this item?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will ask the gentleman a few questions concerning it, and then I may not fight it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let me say this, my friend: There is not a single item in this entire omnibus bill that has not had the consideration of the entire Committee on Invalid Pensions. There is not an item in this bill that is not here by the unanimous consent of every man on that committee, on both sides of this House. We do not believe that there is a single item in this bill that is not justified under the rules of the committee, which provide that the testimony must show in each case, first, that the claimant is destitute, and, second, that he is not able to work for himself.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. And not an item but what has been gone over and reported by a special examiner—

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; not a single item that has not been gone over and reported by a special examiner who has been detailed for that service by the Pension Department.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not the floor.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague from Georgia.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman explain how he managed to get Mr. Hill into this list, the record showing that he had actually falsified the record in order to draw two pensions, and that he had been cut off, and that this committee took him up and got him an increase? How did you get him on after he had falsified the record?

Mr. RUSSELL. As I recollect that case, he was first pensioned as a Mexican soldier.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He was pensioned as a Union soldier.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand he drew pension both as a Mexican War soldier and as a Civil War soldier. That was observed two years ago by the Pension Department, and his pension was withdrawn.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And you put him back. Will you explain why you took upon yourselves that authority, when the laws of the United States say that no man shall draw two pensions at the same time?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is some testimony before us—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to strike out the last two words. I want to make a little statement for the benefit of my friend from Georgia—and when I use the word "friend" I use it in its real meaning.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a little statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has not been recognized, and the debate has been exhausted upon that amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment to this item.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I wish to state to my friend from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] what occurred here many years ago. There was then a distinguished Member of the House from South Carolina—Mr. Talbert. At that time private pension bills were considered on Friday nights only. The gentleman from South Carolina, a distinguished, honorable, and patriotic man, began to make a fight on these private pension bills, which he kept up on every Friday night. After a while the majority of the House, which was then Republican, decided that he was making the fight simply to kill time, and so they brought in a very drastic rule abolishing Friday night sessions and giving two days each month to the consideration of private pension bills. In the rule as reported there was a provision that only five minutes should be used in favor of and against any such bill in Committee of the Whole, or in the House as in Committee of the Whole, so that a vote could be forced. Hon. James D. Richardson, then the Democratic leader, pleaded with the majority to amend the rule so as to strike out the limitation as to time, the rule having been reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], stating that that was not time enough to consider properly a bill to which there was any real objection; and he pledged the Democrats upon his honor that if that part of the rule was left out there would be no speeches or amendments on this side against bills merely for the purpose of delay. From that day to this that course has been pursued by the Democrats in the House, because they, not objecting to the pledge their own leader had made, have lived up to it ever since. Now, I have no objection to any gentleman making a fight against any bill if he really objects to the merits of it; but if it is the purpose of the gentleman to fight every bill, good or bad—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. It is not my purpose to do so at all. No coerced oral agreement that may have been made 15 years ago under Republican rule is binding here. This is a Democratic House, under Democratic rules. I dare not permit unconsidered legislation to go through without discussion for fear my party will resort to gag rule. If it come, let it come.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman's intention is simply to delay the consideration of these bills, the gentleman will force upon this House—over his protest and over mine—the adoption of some such rule, because there are Democrats enough as well as Republicans who are in favor of liberal pensions to put any kind of a rule through this House. [Applause.] They will bring in a rule limiting debate so that there will be no real debate. I hope the gentleman will take this into consideration in the course he is pursuing. I do not question his motives at all.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The minority leader at that time was simply begging Republicans to remove a rule that was imposed on the Democrats cutting off any discussion.

Mr. SIMS. Not to adopt the rule in that form.

Mr. CALLAWAY. That was at a time when we had to beg the Republicans for the right to discuss anything.

Mr. SIMS. They were in the majority.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman apprehend that the Democrats now will pass a rule that will cut off a man from discussing things that he believes are iniquitous in legislation?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; not iniquitous.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Simply because there is a majority here who want pensions.

Mr. SIMS. I do not put it on the ground of iniquity. I said where there is any real objection to the bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. A bill that a Member believes to be iniquitous.

Mr. SIMS. I credit by friend [Mr. RODDENBERRY] with being perfectly sincere, but I am only warning him against the possibility of some such rule, and I am reminding the gentleman that in the past there have been gag rules that prevented the discussion even of a bad bill. Now, I have opposed extravagant pensions in this House perhaps as much as any man in it, but I know whereof I speak, and before the gentleman has been here five years he will know it also.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Henry Smith, late of Company F, One hundred and sixty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I move to strike out the last word. My colleague from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] referred to the case of William Hill, and stated that William Hill, a man who had attained the age of 85 years—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not discuss the pension of William Hill when that item is not before the House.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I think it comes with mighty poor grace from the gentleman to prevent me from answering a question when he has impugned the committee and challenged the right of an old veteran of two wars to his pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Ohio has lost his opportunity.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be given three minutes to justify this committee and to justify the right of this old man to his pension.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell me what page it is on?

Mr. ANSBERRY. On page 3. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, which is equivalent to an objection, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Annie H. Schuler, widow of David A. Schuler, late of General Service, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JACKSON. I desire to make the point of order that the motion is dilatory, and I wish to read from the rules of the House:

The rules of procedure in the House shall be observed in Committee of the Whole as far as they may be applicable.

Now I read from paragraph 10, Rule XVI:

No dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker.

I also desire to read from the precedents under that paragraph:

This rule was adopted in 1890 to make permanent the principle already enunciated in the ruling of the Speaker, who had declared that the object of a parliamentary body is action, not stoppage of action.

The Speaker has declined to entertain debate or appeal on a question as to the dilatoriness of a motion, as to do so would be to nullify the rule; but has recognized that the authority conferred by the rule should not be exercised until the object of the dilatory motion "becomes apparent to the House."

Now, the gentleman from Georgia admitted in the first question asked him, and it is in the record here, that he intended to interpose this motion for the purpose of delaying the passage of the bill. His motion is merely to strike out the last word, which is of itself essentially a dilatory motion and could not be anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. If the gentleman from Kansas has referred to the precedents and the rules, the Chair does not think he could have been happier in his selection. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, in the recommendation of the committee for Henry Smith it appears that in 1907, now five years ago, this pensioner began to receive $15 a month. This is not the case, Mr. Chairman, to which the gentleman from Ohio referred. The bill I objected to is not the Henry Smith bill, but a bill that has not been reached on the calendar, and I shall not object to the gentleman being heard when it is reached in its order.

I desire in this connection to say there is a well-recognized principle of law which I want to call to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who does not criticize, but merely brings to my attention the fact that I am attacking all these pensions and submitting no evidence. I do not concur with the gentleman that I am making an attack on them. I am inquiring of the author of the bill, as under the rules I have the right to inquire; I am inquiring of the chairman of the subcommittee, as I have the right to inquire, for the facts. And the well-known principle of law is that a statement or assertion of a claim made by a party, which claim is questioned or which claim is denied or the contrary fact is asserted, the burden is upon the party who asserts it to establish it, and, having asserted it, his failure then to establish it in a court of law or in a court of equity in any of the 48 States makes the controverted allegation, taken and considered by a court as admitted. This rule applies here as strongly, and more strongly in principle and equity, than it does in a court of law, because the pleadings there on both sides are required to be before the court, and this House at this instant is the court.

And yet they say it is dilatory. Is it dilatory for a Member to ask for information where information does not exist? Why, my friend from Missouri, Judge RUSSELL, whom I more than admire, whose candor and integrity and ability receive no greater regard from any Member than from myself, says that this bill has been carefully considered by the committee, detailing the manner of its consideration, and that it was unanimously reported. I inquire, in the name of all public orderly procedure in the Congress of a great and thoroughly tried Republic, has the time come when a unanimous report of a committee to the House can not get the explanation and defense on the floor from its author? Has the time come when a unanimous report disposing of $100,000 of the people's money in the name of patriotic recognition of the American soldiers can not be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Henry H. Brunsteter, late of Company F, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph proposes to pay one Brunsteter $30 a month, and I now move that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not, upon the reading of the paragraph, have such a motion entertained.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but I have debated the motion. I made the motion to strike out the last word and debated it. Under the rules it provides that—

The committee may, by a vote of a majority of the Members present, at any time after the five-minute debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon the section or paragraph, etc.

It is Rule XXIII, paragraph 6.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Unless the Chair is prepared to sustain the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not prepared to announce his decision.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I so understand, but, Mr. Chairman, the rule says:

The committee may, by a vote of a majority of the Members present, at any time after the five-minute debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only, which motion shall be decided without debate; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the motion of the gentleman, if adopted, is to absolutely preclude not only consideration but the offering of amendments, and the gentleman's construction of the rule is unsupported by the decisions and directly in the face of the rule itself.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a question of amendment, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Georgia, but the gentleman from Illinois had offered some words in debate, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. If the gentleman from Illinois obtains the floor and addresses his remarks to an amendment to a section, then, while recognized for that purpose, can he, on concluding his remarks, at the same instant, without other Members on the floor being recognized, make a motion to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Georgia has put a hypothetical question. The Chair has decided the point of order and overruled it. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to close all debate on the section and amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY), there were—ayes 35, noes 2.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A quorum is present, and debate is closed. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY), the committee again divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 8.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Israel S. Fletcher, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the report upon this bill shows that it is just and ought to be allowed by this committee. I now move that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Will the gentleman yield for a question? [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order because there is no motion before the committee made by the gentleman to justify the discussion. [Cries of "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. May I ascertain if, under the rules of the House, it is possible for a Member to be recognized to discuss a paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is apparent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] has been recognized every time he has asked the Chair to recognize him.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Then I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is a motion pending now.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I desire to speak to that amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close upon the amendment and paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] that all debate close upon the paragraph.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry. Am I recognized by the Chair?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move we adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order in the Committee of the Whole. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] is that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to close debate is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that discussion on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Missouri can not withdraw his amendment after the motion is carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] objects?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. It may be, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 0, noes 10.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia is dilatory. A quorum has been ascertained to be present.

The CHAIRMAN. The point made by the gentleman from Illinois is sustained. The Chair has just counted and ascertained that there is a quorum present. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Israel S. Fletcher, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "thirty," in line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-nine" for the reason that it seems to me large enough for a case of that sort; and I move that all debate upon that paragraph and amendment thereto be now closed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman's motion.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. The gentleman has not discussed the question, and I now desire to read the rules of the House on the subject.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Does the Chair desire to hear the gentleman on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I would like to know from the Chair if a section is read and an amendment is proposed and a vote is taken on that amendment, but prior to the vote a question of order is raised, and the Chair overrules or sustains the question of order—

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. A point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RODDENBERRY (continuing). And they go to reading the next paragraph—a separate and different paragraph—

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. My point of order is that he is not presenting any parliamentary inquiry concerning anything now before the committee. It is purely hypothetical.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that I think he is entirely under a misapprehension, because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] made a very elaborate argument upon his motion, and consequently brought himself within the rules.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. It is this: The gentleman having made that motion to close debate, and then it being a different paragraph and a different amendment, if the point of order be made by a Member on a different paragraph and a different amendment, will the previous ruling of the Chair on a different paragraph and different amendment preclude a Member addressing the Chair from submitting a point of order on a different paragraph and different amendment or different motion made by a different Member?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry is without form and void. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I submit my motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I feel grateful to the gentleman from New Jersey. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state in answer to the statement and question submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] that his statement is purely hypothetical.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not catch the Chair's ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the committee and to the gentleman from Georgia that his position is entirely hypothetical. It is upon the present paragraph that the Chair held the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] to be in order.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. If it is in order to make a motion to adjourn, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I had the floor, and I had the right to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman took the floor on a point of order, and he had no right to take the floor for that purpose. Now the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] to close debate on this paragraph. The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Cicero C. Wait, late of Company G, Ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I will not. The committee has investigated this case, and—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RUSSELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield, as the Chair understands.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee has investigated this case, and the committee believes that it is just, and believes that the claim ought to be paid. I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. What motion did the gentleman make in the first instance?

Mr. RUSSELL. To strike out the last word.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I move to amend by striking out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first rises on the motion to close debate. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] is that debate be closed on that paragraph. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion prevails, and now the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Missouri by moving to strike out the last three words. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, debate has closed on that paragraph.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I submit that—

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] merely closes debate on his amendment and not on the paragraph or the amendment to the bill. I appeal to the record to verify the correctness of that assertion.

Mr. RUSSELL. My motion was to close debate on that paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is incorrect in his premises.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be now closed on that paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that I have the floor, and that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] not having made that motion in the first place, there is nothing for the Chair to do except to ascertain what the original motion was, and on that I appeal to the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that, as the Chair understands, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] contends that that was the motion he did make.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I accept the word of the gentleman, if he says so.

Mr. MANN. It is so. Everybody heard it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it possible for me, by unanimous consent, to obtain an opportunity to debate this?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No, no.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Greenberry V. Miles, late of Company B, Eightieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I move to strike out the last word. I have carefully examined the report upon this bill. I believe that it is just and ought to be allowed by the committee. I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to discuss the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] to strike out the last word.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I rise for the purpose of moving an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I move to amend by striking out the section.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is not an amendment to my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is first in order to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. RUSSELL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not withdraw his amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then, I will not withdraw it, if the gentleman objects.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not object. I make the point of order that he can not withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. He does not withdraw it. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not interrupt the taking of a vote.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not my amendment have priority over the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. No. An amendment intended to perfect the text of a paragraph is in order before a motion to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RUSSELL, it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia renew his motion to strike out the paragraph?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do.

The question being taken, the motion to strike out the paragraph was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Joseph M. Ranney, late of Company B, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have examined the report of the committee upon this bill. It is unanimous. We believe that this pension is just and ought to be paid. I move now that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Is it in order to move an amendment at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion before the committee is to close debate and that is not amendable.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. RUSSELL to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last six words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. RODDENBERY was rejected.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I make a point of order. I want to perfect the amendment. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] is first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has voted on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I can not take issue with the Chair on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Edwin Sharp, late of Company E, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words. I am a member of the committee which investigated this claim, and the report shows that it is a just claim and ought to be paid. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last seven words of the section; and on that motion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory and no Member voted the last time in favor of the gentleman's motion.

Mr. RODDENBERY. We are wasting a lot of money while it is going on.

A MEMBER. And you are doing the wasting. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were 15 ayes and 61 noes.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. MANN made the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Georgia was dilatory.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not be heard on that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does agree with the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair will count.

Mr. RODDENBERY. On what does the Chair agree with the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. That the gentleman can not discuss whether the Chair has the right to count a quorum.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were 85 ayes and 4 noes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not necessary for the committee to rise.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20585, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 423 (H. Rept. 352).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration in the House of House bills 20585, 20586, 20628, in the order named; that all debate upon each of said bills shall close at the expiration of 10 minutes, at the end of which time the previous question shall be ordered upon each bill without appeal or intervening motion.

[Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution speaks for itself. It is evident that the majority desires to pass these bills and that the time of the House, which is valuable, seems to be wasted by some of the discussion here this afternoon, and that no real progress is being made. Therefore, in the interest of orderly procedure, it has become necessary to report the resolution which has been read from the Clerk's desk. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I could not digest this voracious rule all at one reading, and I would like to know if there is to be any debate under it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Ten minutes of general debate on each bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. But on the adoption of the rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We are debating the adoption of the rule now.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Then I will ask the gentleman, on account of his great constitutional knowledge and his knowledge of parliamentary law, if I may ascertain from him what opportunity I will be given to discuss this very unusual rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think the gentleman will have all the opportunity necessary to discuss it. The resolution provides abundant time, I think, to consider the merits of the three pending bills.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Ten minutes debate on the rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. No; the gentleman will have all the time necessary to discuss each bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. How long will that be?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think, if the gentleman desires it, he could have five minutes on each bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman propose to follow the same course with reference to the diplomatic and consular bill, and the fortifications bill, and the agricultural bill?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I can not say until those bills come up,

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman think that this gag rule is in accordance with the protestations of the Democratic Party to the people? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not really think that the gentleman should call it a gag rule, inasmuch as it seems to be necessary.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Well, it is just simply a case of catching and stringhalting—

Mr. HENRY of Texas (continuing). The entire membership of the House seems to be in favor of the rule.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I have often seen five or six fellows catch one shote and stringhalt him, and yet I do not think the shote was in favor of it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would not call the gentleman a shote. I think he is a pretty good sized product of Georgia Democracy.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have five minutes in which to discuss this proposed rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were—ayes 149, noes 13.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. I move a call of the House—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not need to move a call of the House.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will take his seat, the Chair will count. [Applause.] [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-nine gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, absentees will be notified, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 197, nays 26, answered "present" 15, not voting 156, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. PAGE with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. MOORE of Texas with Mr. LOUD.

Mr. STANLEY with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. LEVY with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. KINDRED with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. HOWLAND.

Mr. GUDGER with Mr. HELGESEN.

Mr. FRANCIS with Mr. HEALD.

Mr. FINLEY with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. DONOHUE with Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts.

Mr. DENT with Mr. CURRY.

Mr. COVINGTON with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. AMES.

For the session:

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. ADAMSON with Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

For the balance of day:

Mr. CLAYTON with Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota.

Until February 26, noon:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERY. For the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I would like to inquire if under the rule which has been adopted 10 minutes of debate is not in order; and if so, is it not in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. Not on the previous question. The rule as to the previous question is that if there is any debate on the matter before it is submitted there is no debate afterwards, and there was 5 or 10 minutes of debate. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill named in the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it has been read once.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand the bill has been read once.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill was read in committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill has been read, and therefore it is not necessary to read it again.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the bill would have to be read in the House, as the rule provides for considering it in the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will have to be read in the House. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] has asked for some time, and I yield five minutes to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House we have now reached a point at which it appears that a vote will be taken on a bill making provision for the expenditure of something like $100,000. Much of the day has been devoted by me to an effort to obtain from the chairman of the subcommittee and to obtain from the authors of the respective private bills some word explanatory of the measures they have introduced for the purpose of drawing upon the Treasury of their constituents and the people of the country. No gentleman, except one Member who gave utterance to an explanation of a measure which he had introduced for a soldier, since deceased, has spoken—

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I can not yield. I have but three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. And possibly one other bill that I do not recall, which gentlemen can expatiate upon out of their own time. Yet, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding this, on submitting to the House a simple request this morning on the presentation of these bills that fair debate be permitted, it was declined. Indeed, it was ignored. After standing here in no clandestine manner, but openly and, I trust, with courtesy to Members, and in my right under the rules of the House seeking information, paragraph by paragraph, none was accorded; and, finally, in order to circumvent further legitimate questions, the chairman of the subcommittee, or the Member in charge of the bill, rises, obtains the floor by reason of his right of prior recognition as a member of the committee, and cuts off absolutely not only all debate, but all investigation, and denies to a Member the right of making a single inquiry.

Not content with that, my colleagues of the Committee on Rules, forgetting their charges against Cannonism, lapsing in memory as to their recent protestations against the iniquity of the Dalzell conspiracy denying the right of debate in this forum of the people, retired to the cloakroom, and from there summarily brought forth a rule providing means for cutting off all fair debate and for passing this measure and another measure of equal importance, and, in addition to that, still another bill appropriating the public money. In effect, they say, "Gagged be public debate! Gagged be public discussion—"

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERRY (continuing). "And gagged be public consideration!"

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to yield until the next bill comes up. When I was up before and had time I nodded frequently to the gentleman that I desired to yield to him, and he declined.

Then, Mr. Speaker, comes the rule that puts these measures upon their passage. Why is it that on a pension measure, important as it may be—why is it that the Committee on Rules retires and brings in this Cannon rule? No effort is made to thwart the discussion, but the most vigorous and yet unavailing protests are made by appealing to the Members to give the House and the country light upon legislation providing for large expenditures in order that we might cast a vote based upon intelligence, based upon consideration, and based upon knowledge of the circumstances and the facts. Thus only can the truth be determined by the individual Member.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to say anything in reply to my friend from Georgia, and I only do it now because I think he inadvertently made a serious mistake in stating what this bill carries. He stated that it carried about $100,000. There are in the two bills, this and the next bill on the calendar, 353 different items, and the average is about $28, including the pensions that are now paid to the soldiers. The increases in these bills are about $12 for each one, and that means 12 times 353, which is $4,236.

Now, I submit that my friend in stating what he did referred to the entire amount to be paid to soldiers in both bills, including what they are now getting. I am satisfied that that was a mistake.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I would like to correct it if I may be permitted.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to use the balance of my time, and I will call for a vote.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. Just for a question.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I desire to ask the gentleman if, from reading the bill, or from the reading of the report, there is any statement in them anywhere showing in the report or in the bill how much this increase is in dollars?

Mr. ADAIR. Not in the report or in the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. And no Member having yielded to me or furnished the information, I did not know.

Mr. ADAIR. It is a matter of calculation which anybody could make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late; it has already been read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were—ayes 161, noes 47.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that some Members of the House rose and voted "yea" and then rose and voted to the contrary. I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. As far as the first point is concerned, the Chair has nothing to do with it. The Chair can not assume that Members have voted both ways. As to the point of order that no quorum is present, the Chair has counted, and there are 161 ayes and 47 noes, which is a quorum.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. If, upon putting the question, Members vote aye and are counted, and then, upon the Speaker putting the question for the other side, some Members who voted aye arise and vote again, is it in order for such Members to be counted in making and declaring a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Of course the House would not recognize the fact that any Member could do what the gentleman alleges some Members did do. They would be subject to be brought before the bar of the House and punished for it. The Chair can not assume that any Member did that.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state on my own responsibility as a Member that Members did do it. [Cries of "The regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The vote discloses 161 ayes and 41 noes. The ayes have it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Four gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. I wish to report the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I make the point of order that, under the rule brought in by the Committee on Rules and adopted by the House, these bills are of higher privilege than the matter submitted by the gentleman from Texas and that his matter is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Without ruling upon that question, the gentleman from Texas will please reserve his report until we get through with these bills.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the rule, will these bills be in order as unfinished business in the morning, the previous question having been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 351), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 24, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of South Bristol Harbor, Me. (H. Doc. No. 564); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Savannah River and Harbor, Ga. (H. Doc. No. 563); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 24, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the sublime faith which holds us close to Thee amid the sorrows and disappointments of life and which in times of peril and distress lifts us out of ourselves and makes us heroes. Increase, we beseech Thee, our faith in Thee, and especially in our fellow men, that we may discern beneath the rough exterior something noble, something divine; that we may throw our whole soul into the daily tasks of life, loving mercy, doing justly, and walking humbly with Thee our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

During the reading,

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. We are not able to tell where the Clerk is reading.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I ask the Chair to advise the House on what page the Clerk is reading.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will state the page and line.

The CLERK. Page 26, line 23.

The reading of the bill was resumed and completed.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that as this rule provides for 10 minutes' debate, it seems to be fair that 5 minutes of the time should go to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] and the other five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] or anybody else who wants to oppose the bill.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say that the gentleman from Georgia and I have an understanding.

The SPEAKER. All right. The Chair wanted to state his understanding of how the time ought to be divided. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I regret that the reformed edition of the Cannon-Henry gag rule precludes me from discussing this bill more than three minutes, although it carries 170 private pension increases. In that short length of time I can but briefly call attention to three of the cases, giving one minute to each case. The first is that of William Hill, who drew a pension at $8 at month. It was increased to $12 a month. He also drew a Mexican War pension under false pretenses, according to the committee report, and at this very moment the department is deducting from his present pension in order to force him to refund the pension that he has already unlawfully and wrongfully drawn. Yet this special bill proposes to increase his pension, so as to nullify the fraud he had perpetrated upon the Government, upon the people, and at the expense of the Public Treasury.

The next case is that of James A. Ripley, who served but a few months in the Army, who, according to the report, has never been examined by the department surgeons, yet the committee recommends and proposes increasing his pension to $30 per month. The report discloses that he is 67 years old and has a house and real estate worth $2,200.

Gentlemen, why do not you give this pension increase to some poor old soldier who has no property at all? The next one to which I desire to call the attention of the House is that of a hornblower, a bugler in the Army, a part of the drum corps, who for four months, way back on the hillside beyond the range of the bullets, urged the old soldiers on to duty and to death, never himself in danger. You propose to give him $24 a month. Why? What reason do you offer on this floor? In the name of God and justice why do you not take an old soldier who went to the front and substitute him for the hornblower, whose chief duty was camping near the commissary wagon and bringing up the rear guard after the distant echoes of the conflict had been stilled. Ah, gentlemen, this is your method of carrying 170 pension bills of privilege, of priority, of preference under the reform rule. Not a question answered, scarcely an explanation offered. I am tempted to apologize to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for any assault upon his tyranny, his despotism, when I find that the Democratic side, in the face of our pledges and in the face of the charges made against his rule and his often alleged tyranny, comes now and adopts it themselves.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the one minute I desire to say this is a government through majorities so far as legislation is concerned, and that side being in the majority has the right to have legislation considered and brought to a conclusion. And I want to say I voted for this rule yesterday, although I am in the minority. I want to say further that if I were an evangelist I would be glad to see the conversion upon that side, but looking at the gentleman from Georgia, who is in a small minority of the majority, I will say the doors are still open; "while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY].

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, I would not desire to take up a moment of your time for the discussion of this bill were it not for the fact that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] has adverted to the case of William Hill, from my district. An attack has been made upon the particular feature of the bill carrying a special pension of $20 per month in his favor. Yesterday there was a challenge sent forth by the gentleman asking that the Member who introduced the Hill bill stand up and defend it. Were the gentleman to speak until he grew hoarse with vociferation, or were he to rend himself as did the prophets of Babel, he could get no answer, for the gentleman who introduced the bill, my distinguished predecessor, who sat upon the other side of this House, is not here to answer. This House will assemble to-morrow in honor of his memory.

Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances I am pleased to accept the challenge and offer a word in defense of the action of my distinguished and now deceased predecessor in introducing this bill; of the wisdom and careful attention of the committee who favorably reported it; of the good name and fair fame of the gallant old soldier for whom the relief was intended; and, if needs be, of myself in assuming, after careful investigation, responsibility for the bill and in urging its consideration by the committee.

I have some familiarity with this case, for William Hill was an honored citizen of my district, who had rounded out 86 well-filled years, a veteran sailor and soldier of two wars, and one of that gallant band who raised the American flag at Monterey in 1846.

He represented a high type of American citizenship; he looked upon this great country of ours as a personality to whom he owed a most unselfish allegiance and in the ultimate justice of whose acts he had unbounded confidence. From the judge on the bench to the boy in the street he received the respect due to his patriotic conceptions.

For disability incurred in the Mexican War he was pensioned at a modest rate, and for other disabilities in his service in the Civil War he was granted another pension. He looked at these two pensions as badges of distinction, well won by him and generously granted by a grateful Government, and he proudly spoke of them as he recounted the occurrences of his service days. In the same envelope he mailed both pension vouchers to the pension agent, without the slightest effort at concealment and in full confidence of his rights thereto.

His pensions were his only income and together barely sufficient, with the strictest economy, for himself and aged wife. When the Government decided that these two pensions could not both be retained and charged against him the amount he had theretofore received, it left him without means, but he gave utterance to no word of complaint against his Government and bravely attempted to face the future.

Those facts were before the Committee on Invalid Pensions; an examination of the case was made by Special Examiner Goss, acting for the Bureau of Pensions, whose well-known efficiency will be vouched for by many Members of this House.

The files of the committee in this case were available to any Member of the House desiring more detailed information than could properly be introduced into a committee report and fully disclosed the merits of the case and acquitted the soldier of even the slightest imputation of fraud in the procurement of the second pension.

So the attack which has to no purpose occupied the attention of this House for two days, whether it was waged against the Member, the committee, or the soldier, fails; for with less time, less effort, and less inconvenience to Congress itself information could readily have been obtained by any Member desiring from the records and files of the committee in this and every other case in the bill.

There is, Mr. Speaker, another chapter to this case not known to the committee or to this House. The financial loss of the pension, serious as it was, weighed less heavily upon William Hill than the imputation that he had been unfair to his country. Carefully concealing the penalty of his position, until its accidental discovery by neighbors brought relief, he and his wife awaited the vindication he confidently expected at the hands of his country in Congress assembled.

Mr. Speaker, the handicap of years, the weight of suffering, the pressure of poverty, the keen anguish of a sensitive mind, were too much for him to bear, and a few weeks ago he passed to the great beyond. Our efforts in his behalf are too late, but I wish it were within the parliamentary power of this House to substitute the name of his feeble wife for the small amount which it was proposed to give that loyal soldier and patriotic citizen—William Hill, of Honesdale, Wayne County, Pa.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I interrupt the gentleman for a question? The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes left me I simply desire to make the statement that practically every claim in this bill was written up by Mr. Gauss, who was detailed by the Bureau of Pensions a number of years ago to do this work for the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Every Member of this House who knew Mr. Gauss knows of his honesty, his integrity, his faithfulness, and his carefulness in all of these matters. These bills or claims were recommended by him. They were examined carefully by all of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the report upon these bills coming to this House is a unanimous report upon the part of the committee. We believe that every claim in the bill is just and proper and ought to be paid. Practically all of the claims in this bill are for soldiers of the Civil War who are now incapable of performing any manual labor, have no income to speak of, except the pension they now draw, and need this increase for their support.

Now, just one word as to the rule adopted for the passage of this bill. I want my position not only to be known by the membership of the House, but I want it to be known by every constituent I represent. As far as I am concerned, I am ready now or at any time in the future to vote for any kind of a rule that will enable this House to legislate. I would be ashamed of the party to which I belong—

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ADAIR. I decline to yield. I would be ashamed of the party to which I belong, I would be ashamed of the majority in this House, if it permitted one man or two men in this body to prevent us from legislating. [Applause.] I am unalterably opposed to any rule or any set of rules that would allow any one or two men to conduct a filibuster in this body for the purpose of depriving of their pension needy and deserving soldiers, who in the dark days of 1861 to 1865 went out and rendered the service that held this country together and made it the greatest Nation the world has ever known. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] has expired. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Is it in order now to ask for the reading of the engrossed bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have the privilege. As soon as the House orders the bill read, I will recognize the gentleman to demand the reading of the engrossed bill. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. Mr. RODDENBERRY. It being evident that the bill is on the Clerk's desk, under the rule I ask that the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill be made in full.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill. The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

During the reading, Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the engrossed bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman, if the 25 minutes required for further reading of the engrossed bill be dispensed with, will he move for unanimous consent that the 25 minutes that would be saved by suspending a further reading of the engrossed bill be devoted to allowing Members, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] and other Members, to explain the facts concerning these bills that have not been explained? I do not want to waste the time.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I object. The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

During the reading, Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. RODDENBERRY. To make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-nine gentleman are present—not a quorum.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Aiken, S. C.	Francis	Lawrence	Roberts, Mass.
Bates	Gardner, Mass.	Lee, Ga.	Roberts, Nev.
Bingham	George	Lindsay	Robinson
Borland	Goldfogle	Linthicum	Rouse

Fordney	Lafferty	Prince	Wilder
Fowler	Langham	Riordan	Wilson, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-five gentlemen have responded to their names—a quorum.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERRY) there were—ayes 141, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The motion is dilatory, because it has not been three minutes since a quorum was developed.

Mr. MANN. It does not require a quorum to dispense with the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that fact; but the roll call just taken shows the presence of a quorum. The proceedings under the call are dispensed with. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAGGART). The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 191, noes 15.

So the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20628) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Fred F. Travis, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of John J. Proffit, late of Battery G, Second Regiment United States Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James Henderson, late of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George E. Boyer, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The name of William D. Daniels, late of Company C, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Ida M. Crossley, widow of Charles A. Crossley, late hospital steward of the Thirty-eighth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of two minor children of the soldier until they respectively reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Oliver P. Allen, late of Company G, First Regiment Ohio Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anne Flannigan, widow of Patrick Flannigan, late of the United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ida M. Hoffman, widow of Edward Hoffman, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, with $2 per month additional on account of each of two minor children of the soldier until they respectively reach the age of 16 years.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 116 Fred F. Travis.	H. R. 14261. Ida M. Crossley.
H. R. 6967. John J. Proffitt.	H. R. 16228. Oliver P. Allen.
H. R. 7020. James Henderson.	H. R. 17723. Anne Flannigan.
H. R. 7584. George E. Boyer.	H. R. 18773. Ida M. Hoffman.
H. R. 10451. William D. Daniels.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, in reference to this bill I desire to say—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Being opposed to the bill, I would like to know if, under the rule allowing 10 minutes debate on this measure, I am not entitled to recognition for half of that time, to wit, five minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to use his five minutes first or last?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to use a part of it, at least.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Is it in order to request unanimous consent for the reading of the report of the committee on this bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman gets the floor in his own right, he can then ask unanimous consent. He can not take the gentleman from Alabama off the floor.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to say for the information of the House in connection with this bill that there are nine cases reported from the Pension Committee. Three of them come from the Regular Army, five from the War with Spain, and one a Mexican War soldier. There are two increases in this bill. It carries with it the aggregate sum of $1,380. Each one of these cases has been carefully examined by the Pension Committee, and a unanimous report comes from that committee. Now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] the five minutes to which he is entitled.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman insists that this bill, like the preceding bills, should be voted for because it has the unanimous report of the committee. The gentleman's explanation of his bill is satisfactory to me, and I have no doubt it is meritorious. I am glad to have such an explanation of one of these bills. But I am compelled to oppose present consideration of the bill because it is brought in here under a rule the stringency and unreasonableness of which equals anything that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] ever perpetrated.

Mr. Speaker, when the Sherwood pension bill was up for consideration it had the unanimous report of the committee, but gentlemen on this side who were hungry for pensions left the committee and left the leadership of Gen. SHERWOOD and voted against the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I decline to yield. They opposed the Sherwood bill provisions, which denied pensions to rich people at the expense of the taxpayer. Members on this side who were hungry for more pensions left the unanimous report of the committee, deserted Gen. SHERWOOD, its chairman, and voted to give $30 a month pensions to inmates of soldiers' homes. Yet it was a unanimously reported bill. Why did not you stand by the committee then?

I wish to state further, in the brief moments I have, that when the pension appropriation bill was up, it came to the House with a unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations, made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. As so unanimously reported it contained a provision denying pensions to pensioners living in foreign countries who had not actually been wounded in the service. Gentlemen who now cry out against interrogating the committee report left the unanimous report of that committee and further burdened the Treasury of our constituents with payment of pension money to alien soldiers who never fired a gun. Gentlemen on the Democratic side left the unanimous committee report and by their votes struck that provision from the bill. But you did not then bring in a rule in order to cut off debate, you did not formulate a rule that would prevent a Member from considering a single paragraph separately, because then you did not want to stand by the committee. You gentlemen on this side who are so fearful now that we will "hurt the party" were not fearful then. The Sherwood bill was forced through to save the country for Democracy, so it is alleged. Gentlemen now want a special bill every two weeks to save seats in Congress for gentlemen who represent pension-hungry districts. In the face of inevitable temporary defeat I have resisted the passage of the first two bills. Where I go down, the people will rise up. The hour of your scourging will come.

Furthermore, gentlemen say that I shall fall into ill odor with my colleagues by this fight. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am frank to say, face to face to you, that my public and official conduct, my judgment, and my motive are open to all men. I have sought to obtain and hold the regard of my fellow Members, which I highly prize; but if I am to buy that regard by being false to the pledges that we have made to the people to guard well the Treasury of the United States against loot and ill-advised expenditure, it is too high a price for me to pay for your good opinion. I disdain to lower the standard of my manhood in order to obtain any man's regard. Moreover, it is not necessary. I decline to betray the people of my district or my duty to them or the country by placing indefensible burdens upon their backs. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am gratified to hear the gentleman from Georgia say that he indorses every case in this bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I do most heartily indorse the cases in your bill, pensioning soldiers of the Indian and Mexican Wars.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if his committee has yet considered the question of bringing in a bill to pension the widows of Spanish War soldiers, whether their husbands died of disabilities contracted in the service or not? I understand there are several bills of that kind before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The committee has not yet considered any such bill because, as I understand it, all widows are entitled to a pension of $12 a month, the widows of soldiers in any war.

Mr. DYER. That is only on condition that their husbands died of disabilities contracted in the service.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but we have not considered any such bill.

Mr. DYER. As the gentleman knows, there are some bills of that kind before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; a great many; but the committee has not yet disposed of them. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I have not more time to discuss the question, but, as I am a member of the Invalid Pension Committee, I want to say that these bills have been given earnest and careful attention. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a reply to the statement by George Francis Adams that was inserted in the Record on February 9 by my colleague from Georgia. This is a publication by the Tribune giving the war record of Gen. George Francis Adams.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to publish in the Record the article referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that he regards—

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman, who says he wishes he had more time in which to discuss this question, if the gentleman did not vote yesterday for the rule?

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. I would be glad to have more time, but I do not want it at the sacrifice of the passage of these bills.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to print the editorial in the Record?

Mr. MANN. If it reflects upon the reputation of anybody, I object.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. It simply gives the gentleman's war record. Much has been said about the National Tribune regarding its stand on pension legislation. I know they have done everything in their power for a score of years to advance the interests of the old soldier. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the full reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the time which would be consumed in reading the engrossed bill be given to the gentleman from Ohio to make any remarks he wants to make where he has been cut off.

Mr. MANN and others objected.

The engrossed bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. NEELEY, for 10 days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GALLAGHER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Katie O'Brien, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. JACOWAY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of E. Ross Smith and S. E. Weaver, second session Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF BANKING AND CURRENCY CONDITIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the privileged resolution which is sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 429 (H. Rept. 356).

Resolved, That in order to obtain full and complete information of the banking and currency conditions of the United States for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed, the Committee on Banking and Currency is authorized and directed to make a full investigation thereof, including all matters touched upon in House resolution No. 405 within the jurisdiction of said committee; and the said committee is authorized, as a whole or by subcommittee, to sit during the sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ experts, counsel, accountants, clerical and other assistants. The Speaker shall have authority to sign, and the Clerk to attest, subpoenas during the sessions or recess of Congress.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] if an agreement as to limit of debate can be made?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Texas we would like to have on this side of the House at least an hour.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I suggest to the gentleman that perhaps we might agree to have 45 minutes on a side if he will agree that the previous question may be considered as ordered at the end of that time.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not agree to that.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will agree to an hour a side if the gentleman will agree that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of two hours.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not agree to that. There are gentlemen on this side of the House who will insist on having a vote on ordering the previous question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I will have to take the floor in my own right, which would give me one hour, but am perfectly willing to accord one-half of that time to gentlemen on the other side, to be controlled by whomsoever they desire, and at the end of the hour shall move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman agree that there may be two hours' debate, with the right of the gentleman to be recognized at the end of that time to move the previous question? The gentleman would not lose any rights. There is not much of other business to do now and we have time enough.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think if the gentleman will agree to 45 minutes on a side that would be better.

Mr. MANN. Well, I talked with the gentleman the other day, and I understood he would be willing to agree to that proposition, and gentlemen have figured on that time on this side of the House. It is only a few minutes more and it will be an accommodation, of course, with the unanimous-consent agreement, that the gentleman should have the right to move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if a gentleman is recognized he has the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But it is to be understood that they shall not have the right to offer amendments.

Mr. MANN. With the understanding that during the two hours' debate there shall be no amendments offered, and that at the end of that time the gentleman from Texas shall have the right to move the previous question. Of course, if the previous question is carried, no amendment then will be offered, and if the previous question be refused the resolution will be subject to amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am willing to make an agreement with the gentleman for an hour and a half, 45 minutes to a side, and that I am to be recognized at the end of that time to move the previous question, and that during that time no amendment shall be offered.

Mr. MANN. We can have that by unanimous consent—that no amendment shall be offered during that time—and the extra 15 minutes will accommodate us very much.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that I am very anxious to get up the fortifications appropriation bill, and I see no reason why 30 or 40 minutes should be wasted in a roll call.

Now, if the gentleman is so anxious for time, let the agreement be coupled with an agreement that the previous question shall be considered as ordered. There is not any reason why, when time is being requested, that 40 minutes or more of it should be wasted in a roll call. I see no reason for consuming that length of time. I think it is important that this House should consider the supply bills that are now before it, and I am anxious to get up one of those bills to-day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get recognition to consider it now.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is half way—45 minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has stated to me that there would be an agreement as to two hours—one hour on a side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman so understood it, I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. SHERLEY. I had something of an understanding that there would not be more than 40 minutes a side taken. But to ask for 2 hours' time, with a roll call, means the rest of the day.

Mr. MANN. I think we can satisfy the gentleman from Kentucky as to the fortifications bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent that two hours be the time allowed for debate, and that at the end of that time I be recognized to move the previous question and that in the meantime it shall not be in order to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the debate on this resolution shall continue for two hours—

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And that it shall not be in order to offer any amendment.

The SPEAKER (continuing). One-half of it to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and the other hour by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and that during that time nobody shall offer an amendment, and at the end of the time the gentleman from Texas shall have the floor to move the previous question. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if Monday is District day?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SHERLEY. The effect of this, then, is to put off until Tuesday the consideration of any appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. There is very little District business on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can recognize the gentleman from Kentucky to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHERLEY. The House can displace the motion of the gentleman now. While I want to be reasonable, it seems to me totally unreasonable to ask two hours for a discussion of a provision of this kind. I do not think it requires any particular discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been reported from the Clerk's desk provides for one of the most important investigations during the last 40 years of our history. It is appropriate that I should say that, in my judgment, it is an opportune time for this issue to culminate. I can not permit this occasion to pass without saying that the issue was inaugurated and precipitated by the introduction of a resolution by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH], and in doing so he has rendered his country a great service and is entitled to great credit for it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing partisan in the resolution, and it should not be so regarded. Each Representative should approach the solution of the problem, conscious of the responsibility resting upon him. I am glad the time has come when a dignified committee of this body is to investigate what is denominated, and truly so, the "Money Trust."

Mr. Speaker, it is also proper that I should say we do not propose to make war upon the business interests of the country, whether it be big business or small business; but we do complain of that colossal "combination" in the city of New York which has within its grasp the credits of the entire Republic. And it is the illegal combination which we condemn and into which this committee must inquire. And I make the statement here that, while it has been asserted by some that there will be found no combination which is in violation of the antitrust laws of this country, in the progress of the inquiry it will be revealed that this Money Trust is in combination with industrial corporations, with the great trunk railways, traversing the continent from one ocean to the other, and it will be found that this combination is daily violating the antitrust statutes of the United States, and are amenable to them and should be punished in accordance with their provisions.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been read from the Clerk's desk proposes to investigate this combination and to take up matters set out in House resolution 405; and it was agreed and understood by those drawing the resolution this day offered by me that the matters segregated from House resolution 405 and set out in the appendix hereto annexed are strictly within the jurisdiction of the Banking and Currency Committee, and that said committee is now by this resolution ordered and instructed to investigate with thoroughness all the charges, specifications, and allegations as taken from House resolution 405 and appearing in the appendix hereto. In other words, it was understood and agreed that by express reference in to-day's resolution to House resolution 405 the pertinent parts thereof are as completely sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency as if they were entirely copied and set out in the resolution now under consideration, and such is the parliamentary effect. It instructs the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate every one of the charges as stated in the preamble and as specified in the resolving clause of that resolution.

Therefore, the Committee on Banking and Currency, if it does its duty, which I assume will be done, will inquire into every single allegation and charge made in House resolution 405.

I shall not set out what those charges are, for they are written plainly in House resolution 405. They are substantially the same as the charges made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH], and the two resolutions tend practically to the same effect. If this committee probes deeply, as it should, it will unearth the things that he is seeking to uncover, as well as those upon which my resolution asks inquiry.

It is regrettable that time does not permit me to make a detailed statement as to what really constitutes this combination. But it is sufficient to say that during the last five years the financial resources of the country have been concentrated in the city of New York, until they now dominate more than 75 per cent of the moneyed interests of America, more than 75 per cent of the industrial corporations which are combined in the trusts, and practically all of the great trunk railways running from ocean to ocean, until these three great forces are in such combination and agreement that it is well-nigh impossible for honest competition to be set up against them. These great railways and industrial trusts are under the protecting wing of a small financial group in the city of New York, composed of not more than 10 or 12 individuals.

Independent railway building is at an end unless this group is willing for some independent line to compete with them. They have taken these industrial trusts under their wing and require them to take out their deposits from the local institutions where they are domiciled and transfer them to the banks and trust companies which they themselves control in the city of New York.

So, Mr. Speaker, charging those things, and feeling sure that they can be established, it seems to me it is the manifest duty of the American Congress to uncover the conditions and vicious system, in order that the people may understand the real situation. We can have no idea of the nature of currency legislation necessary until this investigation is made. We should not swallow the Aldrich currency plan without understanding the facts. And until this committee makes its inquiry we shall be groping in the dark and will most assuredly go into the pitfalls set by this group of financiers.

Let me give you one instance of their powerful effect and influence in recent years. It will be recalled that a few years ago a patriotic citizen, Mr. A. E. Stilwell, undertook to build a railway from Kansas City across the States of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and through Mexico to Topolobampo on the Pacific coast in competition with the Missouri Pacific, running from St. Louis to Texarkana, and the Texas Pacific and International & Great Northern Railways and Southern Pacific, running to California and the City of Mexico, thus competing with the great trunk railways lying north of the railroad which he proposed to construct. He undertook to organize the enterprise in this country and to build the railway with money raised here, but not one dollar could he raise in this country or its financial centers for that great enterprise. He was forced to go to Europe—to France, Germany, and Holland—where he raised $26,000,000 to finance this great enterprise. He organized the enterprise and raised the money, and to-day, out of the 1,800 miles of proposed line, he has built 900 miles and equipped a splendid railway for our people.

But this coterie of financiers in the city of New York not only stood in his way at the beginning and during all of the years of his struggles and forced him to go to Europe for money, but in their effort to thwart him they have indulged in methods that are but little better than those who use the dynamite and bomb. They have engaged in conspiracies; they have published slanders and libels of his enterprise; and they have indulged in all sorts of rascality to defeat him.

So I declare the time has come when publicity should be given to these things, and the American people should know by what right a small group of men hold the finances of America in the hollow of their hands and control the destinies of 90,000,000 of people. [Applause.] That time has arrived, and this investigation will be made. At first these men said there should be no investigation by any committee. Now they say they are willing to have an investigation if it is not sensational.

Having said this much, permit me to state the case:

It is not possible for Congress to intelligently determine the vital economic questions of currency legislation, the trusts, and interstate-commerce corporations until it understands the methods of the insidious and almost supreme money power. No effective investigation can be made into the ramifications of the one without an examination of the other, so intimately interrelated and linked together are the three great problems.

It is not my purpose here to recount how during the last five years the money power has become concentrated in New York City, but I will state it as a fact that more than 75 per cent of our financial resources—industrial and railroad corporations—is now dominated and controlled by not more than four small groups of financiers. This financial oligarchy now has within its grasp the resources, deposits, and funds, with the power to paralyze competition and destroy competitors. They now have at their feet in merciless subjection more than 75 per cent of the vast army of banks and bankers throughout the country. They are combined and acting in strict accord with the railroads and industrial trusts by throwing their protecting arms around them with the avowed purpose of assassinating in business all their competitors. There is no great railway system of the country that is not in combination with them and under their protecting wing, and in identically the same way the rapacious trusts are sheltered by them.

To illustrate how successfully they have concentrated the money and resources of the country in their hands, I quote from the recent statement of Mr. Samuel Untermyer, a public-spirited attorney of New York City. He said:

The protecting wing of these banking houses is a thing that has got to be considered by Congress in legislating in respect to the trusts. * * * It is because of what seems to me to be the gravity of the situation that as a decent citizen I feel that we ought to know where we are drifting, so that when we come to meet these questions of currency legislation and the question of the trusts Congress will have the data on which to act. You see how these things interlock with one another. These two or three great issuing houses in New York, having taken under their wings the great railroad and industrial corporations of the country and acting as their bankers and sponsors and protectors, naturally are entitled to conduct the finances of those companies and to direct them, and that means that this vast sum of money of all these corporations is under their control; whether they are on the boards of these corporations makes no difference. * * * They have all this money—the railroad money, the money of these trusts, the money of the steel corporation. The steel corporation has an average daily balance of $75,000,000. The number of other trusts runs the average daily balance up to hundreds of millions of dollars. * * * But now this money has drifted to New York, and you see institutions there now with balances of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000—daily balances—when 15 years ago, I believe, the biggest bank or trust company in New York did not have $15,000,000. I think perhaps $20,000,000 was the largest at the outside. I think the Chemical National Bank had the largest bank balance. It is a mere pigmy now, these things have mounted up with such rapidity.

We should have light as to how these things have been accomplished, and individual cases uncovered that would illustrate the system and point the way to sane and wholesome remedial legislation.

It is also certain that these same financial interests of New York have a close community of interest with the bankers of the money centers of Europe and act together in protecting one another and destroying competition. In view of these alarming financial conditions, I charge and state that it can be established by indisputable evidence:

First. That the aforesaid groups of individuals, firms, national banks, and moneyed corporations are in agreement and combined together with fixed purpose and are now managing the financial affairs of practically all the interstate railroads and 75 per cent or more of the industrial corporations, joined together as trusts, and are using as they see proper the bankable funds of such interstate and industrial corporations. They require these funds to be deposited in New York and to be placed at their disposal.

Second. I charge, and it can be established upon proper inquiry by a committee with ample power, that the management of the finances of many of the great industrial and railroad corporations of the country engaged in interstate commerce is concentrated in the hands of a few groups of financiers in the city of New York and their associates, and that these groups, by reason of their control over the funds of such corporations and the power to dictate the depositories of such funds, and by other means, have secured domination over many of the leading national banks and other moneyed institutions in the city of New York and in other cities to which they direct such patronage, and over the vast deposits of money and of other assets of such institutions, and enabled them and their associates to direct the operations of the latter in the use of the money belonging to their depositors and stockholders and in the purchase and sale of securities and loans of money by such banks and other moneyed institutions; and that these institutions and their funds are being used to further the enterprises and increase the profits of these groups of individuals from such transactions and to augment their power over the finances of the country and to control the money, exchange, security, and commodity markets and prevent competition with the enterprises in which they are interested, to the detriment of interstate commerce and the welfare of the general public.

Third. These same groups of financiers have so entrenched themselves in their control of the aforesaid financial institutions and otherwise in the direction of the finances of the country that they are enabled thereby to use the funds and property of the great national banks and other moneyed corporations in the leading money centers to control the security and commodity markets; to regulate the interest rates for money; to create, avert, and compose panics at will; to dominate the New York Stock Exchange and the various clearing-house associations throughout the country, and through such associations and by reason of their aforesaid control over the railroads, industrial corporations, and moneyed institutions, and in other ways resulting therefrom, have wielded and are wielding a power over the business, commerce, credits, and finances of the country that is despotic and perilous and deadly to the welfare of the entire country. And that their directorates and agencies are so interlocked and inseparably linked with one another that it would be impossible to adequately and fairly investigate the affairs of one without exhaustively probing the affairs of the others. Hence, we can not possibly know what paths to travel in regard to currency, trust, and interstate-commerce legislation till a genuine investigation is had.

Fourth. I charge, and it can be proved, that these national banks and other moneyed corporations, controlled, as above set out, by the moneyed oligarchy of four groups, have been and are now engaged in the promotion, underwriting, and exploitation of speculative enterprises, many of them dangerous and questionable, wild and visionary, and many in other countries, and in the purchase and sale of securities of such enterprises, and in acquiring stocks of other banking institutions, and in absorbing and crushing competitors by the use of their concentrated corporate funds for such purposes, either alone or in conjunction, agreement, and conspiracy with one another: These financiers in New York have in their hands hundreds of millions of dollars that should be distributed throughout the country where the railroads run and the corporations have their domiciles. These men have in their coffers in New York all this railroad money, the money of the trusts, the money of the steel corporation. The average daily balance of the steel corporation amounts to $75,000,000, and added to that the money of the other trusts and the railroads runs the amount up into the hundreds of millions of dollars. The country is poorly advised as to the real situation and as to how these things can be and have been done. And we sorely need the blazing light of publicity in order to wisely legislate on the three great problems in hand.

Fifth. These individuals, firms, national banks, and moneyed corporations are interested in and connected with interstate corporations, and are constantly conspiring and agreeing with them and are enabled by reason of such connection to prevent and suppress competition in the interest of such interstate corporations and protect the latter from competition, and frequently to crush out competitors by means of questionable and vicious financial warfare. In fact, they are in combination with them in such a fashion that they are daily violating the provisions of the antitrust law, if the real facts were known. And only a most rigid probing of a compact congressional committee endowed with plenary power can ever get to the root of those evils.

Sixth. These national banks and other moneyed corporations and institutions are owned, dominated, and controlled through their directors, stock ownership, official management, patronage, and in other ways by the same persons, interests, groups of individuals, and corporations that are also interested in other national banks and moneyed corporations located in the same city, and in interstate corporations that are customers and really coconspirators of said national banks and other moneyed corporations. And the same individuals are officers and directors and are interested in, dominate, and control and have heretofore dominated and controlled more than one national bank or other moneyed corporation.

Seventh. I charge, and it can be established by abundant proof, that the funds and credit of national banks and other moneyed corporations are and have been used and employed in other ways than in making current loans to merchants and on commercial paper, and such funds have been and are employed (1) in the purchase of securities from bankers or others interested in or connected with such corporation; (2) in the guaranty and underwriting of securities and syndicate transactions, alone and in conjunction with others; (3) in loans on notes secured by bonds, stocks, or other collateral; (4) and in loans on and purchases of stocks of other banks and of trust and investment companies and financial and moneyed corporations, and have profited by joint action, understanding, and conspiracies to shut out competition.

Eighth. In agreeing and confederating together such national banks and other moneyed corporations, directly and indirectly, and by means of other corporations having substantially the same officers, management, control, or stockholders, or with stock paid for by the dividends of a parent or affiliated company, and, alone and with others, have acted as issuing houses in offering securities to the public and to investors by prospectus, advertisement, and solicitation, and have and are speculating in stocks and are diverting the funds of the banks from legitimate banking and commercial channels in order to get the railroad and industrial corporations within their protection and to destroy competition as far as possible.

Ninth. The management and operations of the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Clearing House Association are dominated and controlled by the aforesaid financial groups and national banks in New York City, and the officers of the Clearing House Association are mere dummies under their absolute dominion, and can wreck banks and destroy competitors upon their orders.

Tenth. These groups of men have it within their absolute power, in controlling the money in the banks and trust companies, their dominion over corporations, and their connection with the Clearing House Association, to make and unmake panics, make "bull" and "bear" markets, "easy" money and "tight" money, whenever it suits their pleasure. In a financial way it is not overstating the danger to say that they are almost omnipotent and hold the destiny of the business world within the hollow of their hands.

Five years have brought about the control secured by a few banking houses and their allies over the funds of the great corporations, and that this power has been cemented through the interlocking directorates in financial institutions that were naturally competitive; that this control is constantly widening and becoming more direct and pronounced, and the groups are constantly getting closer together and working in harmony. These men are thus enabled to assist their friends and punish their enemies in the financial world, and have used this power to subdue opposition and subject the smaller financiers and financial institutions to their will.

Eleventh. I charge that this group of financiers and national banks in New York have participated in and frequently participate in stock-gambling to a scandalous extent, and at times with the Government funds on deposit with them, and withhold money from legitimate commercial channels to engage in such gambling and in financing dangerous, doubtful, and sometimes disreputable, speculative schemes in this country and other countries. And at times, seemingly with the knowledge of the Treasury officials of the United States, these banks and bankers have loaned money for vicious and perilous stock gambling on the stock exchange, and apparently such money was hurried from the National Treasury to the vaults of those banks for such purposes. A proper investigation will disclose such cases, and record evidence will be found to indisputably support this allegation. Along these lines an exhaustive investigation should be made in the interest of decency and good government as to the methods of these groups of financiers in tapping the National Treasury to secure the people's tax money to further their stock gambling.

Twelfth. It is undeniable that independent railroad building is at an end in this country if these financial groups remain the master. They will protect and finance the great railroads under their wing and wreck and ruin every competitor who undertakes railroad building on an independent basis. Permit me to illustrate by the fate of a great enterprise now in a death struggle with this group. I refer to the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway, of which Mr. A. E. Stilwell is president:

Twenty-six million dollars have already been invested in the project, which is now threatened with disaster through what he believes to be the action of the interests that are representing transcontinental lines to which this would be a competitor. It looks as though Mr. Stilwell is going to make some sort of a fight by general appeal to the people to rescue his enterprise. If a fraction of what he says is true, this is as fair an illustration as you could hope to obtain of the workings of the system.

This statement comes to me from the New York lawyer, Mr. Samuel Untermyer. The next day Mr. Stilwell sent me the following signed statement:

Nevertheless, we built 130 miles of track in Texas last year, 25 per cent more than any other railroad and 15 per cent of all track built that year in the United States. Recently this opposition has seriously delayed the closing of a sale of $5,000,000 bonds, legalized by the French Government and all underwritten in Paris. Detectives have followed our agents, prominent bankers have not hesitated to make false statements in speaking of our road; other bankers taken over the road and enthusiastic over its possibilities have been told that their business would be ruined if they attempted to help us in any way. Effort after effort was made by letter and personal interview to prevail on the Mexican Government to cancel our concessions, and effort was made also to prevent us from securing the harbor at Topolobampo. When in London making our steamship arrangements, prominent American interests cabled over endeavoring to prevent the closing of this important contract. Prominent brokers have called our investors by phone, advising them to sell our securities at once—people with whom they had never done business; and in one case the statement was made that we had but 6 miles of road in Texas and 4 miles in Mexico, whereas at that time we had over 200 miles in Mexico and 300 in the United States. * * * But now, with nearly 900 miles in operation, we think we are justified in calling attention to the obstacles we are daily encountering in a persistent endeavor to prevent the completion of this great international transcontinental road. * * * It is a singular coincidence that Mr. Samuel Untermyer should have made his argument before the committee of Congress during the very time I was preparing this prospectus and an advertisement for publication—a man who is in no wise interested with me in any enterprise. The facts which he so truthfully and eloquently affirmed are, perhaps, unbelievable except to those who, however innocently, have incurred the displeasure of the mysterious, sinister, but palpable influence called by him the Money Power. As for those injured by this power, what possible redress is there except to appeal direct to the people whose own money is thus exploited by those with whom they have temporarily intrusted it? No single victim could combat this oligarchy even if it were amenable to law. But Mr. Untermyer says it acts within the law. Its freemasonry is that of freebooters grown arrogant through immunity. Its whisper is that of the Mafia without its risk. Its "white hand" does the dirty work of the "Black Hand" without the excuse of poverty. It is wicked and cruel, but, thank God, it is not omnipotent.

Is it not time to inquire into these Black Hand methods? Should not we know something of the depths of villainy to which this "financial Mafia" will descend before we rewrite our currency laws? Would not it be better to probe deeply into that hidden and mysterious side before we swallow the Aldrich plan? Let me warn the American people we will be groping in the dark and will go down in their pitfalls unless we have a thorough congressional investigation and unearth their system, their villainy, and the secret methods of their combined moneyed monopoly. While we are grappling with this momentous problem, this money power is moving heaven and earth to circumvent us.

Stilwell, an honorable man, is in New York now fighting for his great enterprise meaning so much to the Southwest and Mexico. The financial freebooters are trying to destroy him. Every patriotic American ought to read his appeal from their midst in the very shadow of Wall Street.

To state it bluntly, these groups of financiers in New York, through their cementing together the great national banks of New York City and joining themselves together in conspiracy and action, have taken under their wings the great railways, corporations, trusts, and moneyed interests and made themselves the supreme dictators of the financial situation in the United States, with their power reaching into the money centers of Europe. And no man but themselves knows the depths of their conspiracies and combinations, and no other person will know till they are searched to the bottom with the strong arm of a congressional probe.

In further proof of the concentrated money power in New York permit me to read the admission of the Wall Street Journal as contained in an editorial of February 12, 1912. Here it is:

BANKING RESOURCES OF NEW YORK CONCENTRATED IN HANDS OF A FEW—TWO GROUPS DOMINATE, WITH LEADERSHIP VESTED WITH J. P. MORGAN, OWING TO HIS EXCEPTIONAL CAPACITY—EVERY COUNTRY HAS WITNESSED SIMILAR CONCENTRATION OF BANKING CAPITAL—NECESSARY FOR THE SAFETY OF ALL BANKS THAT THEY SHOULD WORK TOGETHER—TOTAL ASSETS OF THE MORGAN AND STANDARD OIL BANKS AMOUNT TO NEARLY $2,000,000,000—THE INDEPENDENT GROUP.

To deny that the banking resources of this city are concentrated in the hands of a small group would be useless. The central figure of this group is J. P. Morgan. Practically every bank and banking house in the city is subject to his influence.

To state that all these bankers are dependent upon what one man or group of men order or desire would be a dangerous half truth. Concentration of banking power has been a natural development, and the leadership vested in Mr. Morgan has been a result of his exceptional capacity. The actual control of the great majority of banks in the city is scattered among thousands of individuals.

Every country of any commercial or financial importance has witnessed concentration of banking capital like that in New York, but in the great European nations the various governments have recognized that a concentrated banking power should be regulated by the government but be independent of it in its banking operations.

There are only two dominated and one independent banking groups in Wall Street, the latter made up of small institutions and commercial banks not controlled by interests in the other two groups. Before the panic of 1907 there were two or three small independent groups, but these are now merged. Before the panic there was considerable rivalry for control, but to-day competition in most cases is limited to credit, and banking commissioners, superintendents, and comptrollers are beginning to realize that even credit should be regulated or controlled. This stride in banking regulation is ranked as similar in economic development with the recent tendency of clearing-house associations to hold regular examinations of member institutions.

In the past three years the lesson learned from the panic of 1907, that it is necessary for the safety of individual banks that all banks should work together, has been put to practical account. It is not uncommon to have the president of a bank in one group on the executive board of an institution in another. It has been found both natural and expedient, owing largely to the position that New York City banks hold in relation to the banks in the interior, that this community of interest should be cemented as much as possible without fettering credit.

In the tables that follow is given a list of the banks connected with the two important groups mentioned above—the Morgan and the Standard Oil. Some of these banks are directly controlled by these interests, but others are only connected with them in some indirect manner. In the case of the latter, the ties could be severed at will. Capital and surplus, deposits, and assets of the Morgan and Standard Oil groups.

Further establishing the vicious methods of Wall Street, in assassinating business competitors, allow me to read a letter from Mr. A. E. Stilwell, president of a great trunk railway. Because he is endeavoring to build a competing railway across the continent, Wall Street and its allies, the transcontinental railways running to the Pacific Ocean and Gulf of Mexico, are trying to destroy Stilwell and crush his railway. His letter is illuminating and reads:

(An open letter.)

THE KANSAS CITY, MEXICO & ORIENT RAILWAY CO.,
Singer Building, New York, February 5, 1912.

To the United States Senators and Representatives, Members of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: For years I have been convinced that there was a money trust. I have felt its powers in my work. It has halted my endeavors and delayed my work.

It is a force for destruction of any man or any enterprise that does not consent to its decrees. It has a system as powerful as the Beef Trust, which every cattleman for years was positive, existed, but he could not prove it. This oppression of great interests is un-American. It breeds socialists and anarchists. While it destroys now for its own benefit, if not rebuked and removed it will destroy the Nation. The word is sent out that if the investigation of the money trust is made it will destroy business. If business is founded on evil it ought to be destroyed, so that sound, healthy business may rise out of the ruins. No surgeon would refuse to perform an operation for the reason that it would soil the linen. This is no valid reason for allowing the patient to die. It is no argument to abolish our courts because it may hurt business if crooks and swindlers are sent to jail. Threats of death do not deter the Government in its endeavors to destroy the Black Hand. The white hand of the Money Trust uses a force and power which comes from great wealth, which is the most potent of all commercial and political forces. If our business must pay tribute to this power, if men can not develop business enterprises for the benefit of our land without the approval of this power, this is no longer the land of the free.

George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental Commercial Bank of Chicago, affirms that there is a Money Trust. He said this at a meeting of financial interests in support of the Aldrich monetary plan, in which Mr. Reynolds admitted being one of a dozen bankers who control the money power of the country. In this address Mr. Reynolds said:

"I believe the money power now lies in the hands of a dozen men. I plead guilty to being one, in the last analysis of these men. There has been a great deal said about centralization of power. I contend this institution (referring to the reserve association) would cause a decentralization of power.

"I believe that two or three banks in New York, two or three in Chicago, and two or three in St. Louis could control the question of whether or not loans should be made to correspondents throughout the country."

There can be no damage done to business if there is no Money Trust. No nation may be afraid of evil consequences from doing right—right has no judgment day. The separating of business from evil abuses removes the curse and leaves the blessing. The Standard Oil and Tobacco companies have not suffered from the Government marking out the path for them to walk in. Their stockholders have not suffered. But the people they oppressed are relieved of the oppression. This is the duty of a nation, to protect the weak.

The money issued by our Government does not carry with it power of oppression. No corporation that does right, that conforms to the laws, has anything to fear from investigation. It is only the evildoers who fear investigation. There can be no damage done to any political party that is in favor of destroying evil abuses. The Republican Party can not suffer from its forcing the Standard Oil and Tobacco companies to stop their illegal acts. The period during the separation of the good from the bad did halt business, because of the uncertainty of what would happen. But now this much of the American business is on a rock foundation. The "hall-marking" of the securities of the Standard Oil and Tobacco companies by our courts will produce lasting good to these lines of trade and to the securities of these companies and will leave these fields free from suppression and open to all who desire to embark in these lines of trade.

Years ago I incurred the enmity of some of the members of the Money Trust. I refused to follow their dictates, which were illegal. They told me that the making of money was the only aim of man. I refused to believe it. I believed, and now believe, that success through dishonest methods in the long run means defeat, and that the person who achieves riches in this way has really lost—his gain is only a seeming gain. Notwithstanding the years of suffering that have been forced upon me, notwithstanding the fact that this Money Trust has made my work as hard as any man has ever had, I still am of the opinion that it is far better to give up all chance of gain—even life itself—than it is to surrender principle for profit.

I have a perfect right to thus address you in this letter. I am an American. I have worked for years to develop the West. By my work at least a billion dollars has been added to the wealth of our country. I, no doubt, have built as much main line of railroad as any man in the United States of my age. I have brought millions of gold to our land from Europe, and much of it during the panic years. I built one-fourth of all the railroad built during 1896. My orders for equipment were almost the only orders given during that dark year. I built one of the largest inland waterways of our country—the Port Arthur ship canal—which has now been taken over by the Government and is maintained by it. I built the splendid landlocked harbor at Port Arthur, that no storm has ever reached. I have financed corporations that furnish employment to thousands.

To exist, must I put on the Money Trust's yoke of gold, so that in the future I may be unmolested in my work? I refuse.

Ask the people of the West, whom I helped by giving them just rates on grain for export, which they did not have until I built the Kansas City Southern; ask the people of Kansas City, who, by the rates I gave them on lumber, were enabled to build up the greatest long-leaf pine market in the United States; ask the people in the 100 towns that I have built; ask the people of Port Arthur, which I built from a cow pasture; ask the farmers in the great rice fields of Texas that I laid out; ask the people on the 100,000 acres of western land that I have colonized; ask the owners of the pine forests, which by my work have increased in value from $2 per acre and no market to $40 and $60 per acre and an active market; ask the people of western Texas, who, through my efforts, have seen an empire spring up from the cattle ranges within six years; ask the people of Colorado, where one-eighteenth of all the gold produced is from a mine I financed; ask the miners of northern Mexico, who are served by the Orient Railway!

Must I longer stand unfair conditions; must the railway we are building be brought under the dictation of the money power; and must our plans for giving to the people of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and Mexico a great international railway, that will forever be a blessing and furnish a sure and safe investment, be blocked and thwarted both in this country and in Europe?

I claim it right, if this is a free country, for enterprises to rise and fall on their own merits, and not to be assassinated. If the tricks and deceptions that have been played on me, the inquisition of the Money Trust, the numerous efforts to rob me and trip me, are now exposed, so that it is not possible in the future for some other American to suffer as I have, I will not have suffered in vain.

The American people, and a great many bankers, I am sure, deplore these existing conditions. There are many bankers and bankers who have never resorted to the oppressive methods of the Money Trust, and who are ready and willing to aid in correcting this deplorable condition.

The belief that our country is under the domination of a Money Trust is now affirmed by Mr. Reynolds, who says there is and that he is one of the 12.

Why not ask him and the other 11?

Yours, very truly,

A. E. STILWELL, President.

In a recent public address Gov. Woodrow Wilson said:

The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly. So long as that exists our old variety and freedom and individual energy of development are out of the question. The industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the Nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men, who, even if their action be honest and intended for the public interest, are necessarily concentrated upon the great undertaking in which their own money is involved, and who necessarily, by every reason of their limitations, chill and check and destroy genuine economic freedom. This is the greatest question of all, and to this statesmen must address themselves with an earnest determination to serve the long future and the true liberties of men.

And Gov. Wilson continues to make his brave charge.

At first they said, "If you make this investigation, you will create a panic in this country." We replied, like old Andrew Jackson, when the bankers threatened to defeat his reelection, "If you have it in your power to create a panic, you have too much power for a few bankers, and should be put out of business." [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, they know full well that when this investigation is instituted the first thing established will be the fact that they have the power to make a panic, and there will be no panic. Because if they can make a panic they can prevent or stop one. They have the power to make "easy money" and "tight money," to make "bull" and "bear" markets, and to do as they please on the stock exchange and in the clearing house of the city of New York and the other clearing houses of the country.

It seems, too, that these men have some sort of a communication with the Treasury vaults of this capital, and whenever they see proper they are able to tap the Treasury of the United States and have money poured out of those vaults into the banks of the city of New York for the purpose of loaning it to stock gamblers, engaged in the wildest speculation in this country and in other parts of the world. They have been able to take the people's tax money out of the Treasury of the United States and loan it to those gamblers in cotton and agricultural products for the purpose of putting up and down the prices of the farm. The time has come when the people ought to know by what right they are enabled to secure this money, in order to depress the prices of agricultural products and manipulate the finances of the world. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

House resolution 405.

Whereas legislation is now pending involving important changes in our national currency and monetary system and vitally affecting our national banks; and

Whereas it has been charged, and there is reason to believe, that the management of the finances of many of the great industrial and railroad corporations of the country engaged in interstate commerce is rapidly concentrating in the hands of a few groups of financiers in the city of New York and their associates, and that these groups, by reason of their control over the funds of such corporations and the power to dictate the depositories of such funds, and by other means, have secured domination over many of the leading national banks and other moneyed institutions in the city of New York and in other cities to which they direct such patronage and over the vast deposits of money and of the other assets of such institutions, thus enabling them and their associates to direct the operations of the latter in the use of the money belonging to their depositors and stockholders and in the purchase and sale of securities and loans of money by such banks and other moneyed institutions, and that these institutions and their funds are being used to further the enterprises and increase the profits of these groups of individuals from such transactions and to augment their power over the finances of the country and to control the money, exchange security, and commodity markets, and prevent competition with the enterprises in which they are interested, to the detriment of interstate commerce and of the general public; and

Whereas it has been further charged and is generally believed that these same groups of financiers have so entrenched themselves in their control of the aforesaid financial institutions and otherwise in the direction of the finances of the country that they are thereby enabled to use the funds and property of the great national banks and other moneyed corporations in the leading money centers to control the security and commodity markets, to regulate the interest rates for money, to create, avert, and compose panics, to dominate the New York Stock Exchange and the various clearing-house associations throughout the country, and through such associations and by reason of their aforesaid control over the aforesaid railroads, industrial corporations, and moneyed institutions, and in other ways resulting therefrom, have wielded a power over the business, commerce, credits, and finances of the country that is despotic and perilous and is daily becoming more perilous to the public welfare; and

Whereas the national banks and other moneyed institutions controlled as aforesaid are charged to have been, and to be, engaged in the promotion, underwriting, and exploitation of speculative enterprises and in the purchase and sale of securities of such enterprises, and in acquiring, directly or indirectly, stocks of other banking institutions and absorbing competitors and in using their corporate funds and credit for such purposes, either alone or in conjunction with those by whom they are controlled; and

Whereas it is deemed advisable to gather the facts bearing on the aforesaid conditions and charges or in any way relating thereto or to any of the subjects above mentioned as a basis for remedial legislation, and for other proper and lawful purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency is authorized and directed—

First. To fully investigate and inquire into each and all of the above-recited matters and into all matters and subjects connected with or appurtenant to or bearing upon the same.

Second. To fully inquire into and investigate whether and to what extent—

(a) Individuals, firms, national banks, and other moneyed corporations are engaged in or connected with the management or financial affairs of interstate railroad or industrial corporations and what potential or other power they have or exercise over such corporations, and how and to what uses the bankable funds of such interstate railroad or industrial corporations are applied.

(b) The marketing of the securities that have been from time to time issued by interstate railroad and industrial corporations has been by competitive bidding or otherwise.

(c) Individuals, firms, national banks, and other moneyed corporations interested in or in anywise connected with such interstate corporations are enabled by reason of their relations or connection with other interstate corporations or with other individuals, firms, national banks, moneyed corporations or otherwise to prevent or suppress competition in the interest of such interstate corporations, or to protect or assist the latter in preventing or suppressing competition.

(d) Such interstate corporations and the individuals, firms, national banks, and moneyed corporations are mutually benefited and protected against competition and otherwise by the relations existing between them.

(e) National banks and other moneyed institutions are directly or indirectly owned, dominated, or controlled through their directors or through stock ownership, official management, patronage, or otherwise by the same persons, interests, groups of individuals, or corporations that are also directly or indirectly interested in other national banks or moneyed corporations located in the same city and in interstate corporations that are customers of said national banks and other moneyed corporations.

(g) The funds or credit of national banks and other moneyed corporations are or have been used or employed other than in making current loans to merchants or on commercial paper by whose influence or direction such funds or credits were so used or employed, and particularly whether and to what extent such funds are or have been employed (1) in the purchase of securities from bankers or others in any way interested in or connected with such corporation; (2) in the guaranty or underwriting of securities or syndicate transactions, either alone or in conjunction with others; (3) in loans on notes secured by bonds, stocks, or other collateral; (4) in loans on or purchases of stocks of other banks or of any trust or investment company or financial or moneyed corporation; and (5) in any form or investment alone or in joint account with others.

(h) Any national bank or other moneyed corporation, whether directly or indirectly or whether through or by means of another corporation having substantially the same officers, management, control, or stockholders, or with stock paid for by the dividends of a parent or affiliated company, and, whether alone or with others, has acted as an issuing house or in offering securities to the public or to investors by prospectus, advertisement, solicitation, or otherwise, or has speculated or is speculating in stocks, and, if so, the nature of all such transactions and the profits and all other details thereof.

(i) The management and operations of the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Clearing House Association are, or may be, directly or indirectly, dominated, controlled, or otherwise affected by any individuals or groups of individuals who control or are influential in directing the use or deposit of the funds of national banks in the city of New York, or of interstate railway or industrial corporations, and the relations that the New York Stock Exchange and the New York Clearing House bear to such individuals and groups of individuals and to their financial transactions and to our commercial and financial systems and to interstate and foreign commerce.

(j) Any individual, firm, or corporation, or any one or more groups of such individuals, firms, or corporations may or can affect the security markets of the country through the New York Stock Exchange, or can create, avert, or compose panics by the control of the use and disposition of moneys in the banks and other moneyed corporations that are controlled by such individual, firm, or corporation, or by other means.

(k) There is any connection between the relations of bankers, banking firms, and their associates to the railroad and industrial corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and the relations of such bankers, banking firms, and their associates to the national banks and other moneyed corporations, and the relations of any of these interests to any of the others that operate to protect such interstate corporations against competition or are or may be used for that purpose.

Third. To investigate the methods of financing the cash requirements of interstate corporations and of marketing their securities, and the relations of national banks and others to such transactions.

Fourth. Said committee as a whole or by subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recess of Congress. Its hearings shall be open to the public. The committee as a whole or by subcommittee is authorized to employ counsel, experts, accountants, bookkeepers, clerical and other assistants, may summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, may send for persons and papers, and administer oaths to witnesses. The Comptroller of the Currency is hereby directed to comply with all directions of the committee for assistance in its labors, to place at the service of the committee all the data and records of his department, to procure for the committee from time to time such information as is subject to his inspection, and to allow the use of his assistants for the making of such investigations with respect to corporations under his jurisdiction as the committee or any subcommittee may from time to time require.

No person shall be excused from giving testimony or from answering any question or from otherwise disclosing any fact within his knowledge, or from producing any book, paper, or document on the ground that the giving of such testimony or the production of such book, paper, or document would tend to incriminate him, or for any other reason. The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpoenas during the recess of Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, with most of what has just been said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] I am in hearty accord; but when the gentleman from Texas asserts that the passage of this resolution will mean such an investigation as he has described the gentleman from Texas is mistaken.

Mr. Speaker, this is a harmless resolution. I have no objection to its passage; but for gentlemen upon the other side of this aisle to assert that the passage of this resolution means an investigation of the Money Trust of this country, so called, is to attempt to perpetrate a fraud upon the membership of this House and upon the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This resolution will not give the Committee on Banking and Currency jurisdiction to investigate the real question before this country in any degree. Upon its face it limits this committee in its investigations to questions of banking and currency, and I submit that questions of banking and currency are only incidental to the real questions involved. The question is whether a small group of financiers, largely located in the city of New York, so control the credit of this country, so control the deposits of other people in this country, that they can destroy competition, if it exists, by withholding credit, or prevent it from coming into being.

Under this resolution this committee can not investigate that question. The gentleman from Texas referred to the case of Mr. Stilwell, who was promoting a railway in the Southwest. This committee, with this resolution passed, could not investigate that condition of affairs in any degree.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. For a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. Inasmuch as Mr. Untermeyer, before your committee, testified that the United States Steel Corporation, which has an average daily balance of $75,000,000, can so manipulate that balance by deposits that it can withhold credit to its competitors and get preferential credit for itself, does the gentleman mean to say that this resolution will not permit this Banking and Currency Committee to investigate such a charge as that?

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly do; I say the resolution will not permit the Committee on Banking and Currency to go into the question of what the depositor may do with his money.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt right there? Mr. Untermeyer especially refused before the Committee on Rules to be considered as a witness, and gave us nothing at all but rhetoric.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, but the gentleman must know—

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, I wish the gentleman from Wisconsin would say that Mr. Untermeyer did testify as I have reported.

Mr. LENROOT. He did not testify; it was a statement he made before the committee. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the very point; the questions of banking and currency do not involve what the depositor shall do with his money deposited in the bank. That is the very point I am making now.

To get at this question we have got to get at the men behind—the men that control the finances of this country—and it will not be done under this resolution. Mr. Speaker, we have abundance of information, so far as banking and currency methods are concerned, from the report of the Monetary Commission, but the question goes beyond that, and this resolution is designedly—and I use the word deliberately—designedly limited to questions of banking and currency, because the Democratic majority do not propose to permit the investigation of the methods of the great financiers of this country unless they are directly connected with the banks.

For what has been accomplished by the Democratic majority great credit must be given to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY], whom the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] referred to the other day as having the honor of having as a constituent of his district J. Pierpont Morgan.

On February 9, when the question was before the House of increasing the appropriation for the Stanley committee investigating the Steel Trust, Mr. LEVY said:

Mr. Speaker, I have always been under the impression that this investigation was a mistake, and therefore am opposed to the resolution to increase the expenditures of this committee. I think the investigation ought to be brought to an end.

Upon the same occasion Mr. LEVY said:

It seems to me the entire tendencies to these investigations are destructive.

He also said:

I trust that the better and saner sense of Congress will soon prevail, and instead of the reckless, confidence-destroying, credit-disturbing, and panic-bringing investigation we will have during this session of Congress an era of constructive, sane, and statesmanlike investigation.

Six days later the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] appeared before the Committee on Rules, when these resolutions were under consideration, and said:

Mr. Chairman, I move you that the questions embraced in these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Showing conclusively that the gentleman from New York believed that that would be an effectual means of stopping these—reckless, confidence-destroying, credit-disturbing, and panic-bringing investigations.

On January 26 the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] again appeared before the Committee on Rules, and among other things said:

It has been spread all over the East, although not officially announced, that the Rules Committee has already recommended an investigation of the banking situation by a special committee. I can not explain how this rumor originated, but it has been spread all over the East. It has interfered with the business interests of the country.

Again, the gentleman asked that the question be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. After again requesting that the question be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, he says:

We have had enough of these investigations.

He further said:

Do you not suppose that it costs millions of dollars for these investigations on both sides, on the United States side and on the corporation side? You are tying up the whole business of the United States. This does not do any good.

Now, mark you, Mr. LEVY's remedy for stopping these investigations that he says are tying up the whole business of the United States is to refer this question to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as is proposed by the majority in the pending resolution.

On page 21 of the hearings Mr. LEVY further said:

Since the death of President McKinley the continued agitation over the Sherman law and, I might say, to some extent the socialistic proclivities of the Interstate Commerce Commission, have put us back 50 years.

This distinguished Democrat, who now seems to lead the Democratic Party upon that side of the aisle, refers to the splendid services of the Interstate Commerce Commission as "socialistic proclivities." Mr. Speaker, the gentleman upon the other side [Mr. LEVY] is to be congratulated upon what he has accomplished in trying to defeat an investigation of this so-called Money Trust. At every meeting of the Committee on Rules he has appeared opposing the investigation and asking that the Committee on Banking and Currency investigate. Why? Evidently because the gentleman believes that if the Committee on Banking and Currency should make this investigation there will be no investigation. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, we all remember that a short time ago a Democratic caucus was held on the question of the Money Trust. The newspapers the next morning stated that there were 66 Members upon that side of the House who believed there should be an investigation of this question; but when they got into that caucus their belief was not so well founded nor so deeply embedded that they could not surrender those convictions to the behest of the Democratic Party caucus, to which they are slaves to-day. I want to say to you gentlemen upon the other side of the House that it is hard sometimes to stand in this House for what you believe to be right against a majority of your party; but I want to say to you, too, that there is some satisfaction, there is some reward, in being an independent Member in this House, free to vote for a measure according to whether you believe it is right or wrong, and I hope that the time is coming when you on that side of the House will not be willing to surrender your principles and your convictions and your consciences to the behest of a secret party caucus, as you are doing day after day during this session of Congress. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO].

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, the matter of the investigation of monetary and financial conditions in this country is presented as reflecting the judgment, the wishes, and the instructions of the responsible majority of this membership to the House and to the people of this country. The gentleman who last addressed the House assumes that the investigation ordered under the resolution now presented for consideration will not develop into any good or be a real investigation. Mr. Speaker, that is a matter purely of assumption. No Member of this House has a right to assume that another Member or a committee of this House, representing its legislative agency and power in so far as suggesting methods of legislation to it, will not do its duty. On the 7th day of February the responsible majority of this House determined that there should be an investigation along orderly lines and in due course of procedure. It was a jurisdictional question.

The Democratic Party, in its caucus, arrived at the conclusion that the investigation should be made by a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter. Carrying out, as I interpret it, as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that conclusion, I introduced House resolution 411. In my humble judgment, Mr. Speaker, that resolution is broader and gives more power than the substitute reported by the Committee on Rules. The resolution introduced by me on the 8th of February represented, according to my interpretation and the interpretation of some of the best lawyers in this House, the suggestions of the caucus and gave broader powers than the limitations appearing in resolution 405 introduced by Mr. HENRY of Texas. The majority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, at a public hearing before the Committee on Rules, stated that they had no pride of opinion about the verbiage of this resolution. If it did not give all the power that it ought to have and exercise, they said, incorporate in it any amendment you may see fit or any substitute that you may offer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. PUJO. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the gentleman's suggestion of incorporating any additional power in an amendment, it would be necessary to vote down the previous question in order to do that, would it not?

Mr. PUJO. The gentleman misunderstood me. I was giving a chronological statement of the history of this resolution and the way it is before the House. We accept it here upon our side as reflecting the views of the majority authorized by party action, and if that investigation should be authorized by the House I feel that that committee will put forth their honest endeavor to bring before the House information which it has been ordered and instructed to obtain.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. PUJO. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman heard a few moments ago the colloquy between the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] as to the scope of the authority of this resolution. I wish the gentleman would explain that matter for us.

Mr. PUJO. In my judgment, under the rules of this House, under the power to be conferred upon the Committee on Banking and Currency, which simply gives us the additional power to summon witnesses and to employ counsel, retaining to us only our jurisdictional power, I think the resolution gives us power to investigate the monetary system of the United States and the financial system of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], then, was undoubtedly mistaken?

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes that under this resolution as it is worded, limiting the jurisdiction of his committee, if he will investigate the charge made before the Committee on Rules that on the Stock Exchange of New York City stocks on occasions are taken off of the list in order to rob said stocks of their function as collateral? Does the gentleman think his committee can go into that matter?

Mr. PUJO. I certainly believe we will have that power.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not think so, under your resolution.

Mr. PUJO. I think we can take up the financial system of this country primarily through the national-banking system and follow it out to the utmost ramifications.

Mr. CONNELL and Mr. RODDENBERRY rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUJO. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONNELL].

Mr. CONNELL. In other words, your committee will have just as much power and can go just as far to serve the country as any special committee that can be appointed? Is not that true?

Mr. PUJO. Absolutely; and it carries out and maintains the administration of this House.

Mr. FERRIS, Mr. LENROOT, and Mr. RODDENBERY rose. The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUJO. I will yield first to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. I wanted the gentleman to state emphatically, as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, whether or not the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], when he was interrogated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], was or was not true—that you can not investigate deposits and the shifting of deposits which would make this Money Trust possible.

Mr. PUJO. With all due respect to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I think the very statement demonstrates the fact that he is not familiar at all with the subject, because certainly the committee, under the rules of this House, having jurisdiction of banking and of currency, can go into the matter of deposits and the manner in which they are handled—

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUJO (continuing). Because they can not have banks without deposits.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman contend that his committee can go into the question of control of deposits by the individual owner of the deposits?

Mr. PUJO. Absolutely. We are vested with power—

Mr. LENROOT. What has that to do with the national banking law or currency law?

Mr. PUJO. It has everything to do with it. We can take up the question of deposits with any national bank in the United States, the manner in which they are controlled, the manner in which they are transferred, and the purpose to which they are applied, and see whether or not there is any violation of the law [applause] or as to whether the House shall be informed as to some of its—

Mr. LENROOT. As to control of the bank I agree, but not as to the control by the owner of the deposits.

Mr. PUJO. They are all inseparably linked. If we look at the deposit ledger we are bound to see what application is made of the funds.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. PUJO. Certainly.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If the chairman of the committee, speaking so far as he can, should ascertain that under the power of the Banking and Currency Committee it did not possess the power referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], would not the gentleman be ready—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Would not the gentleman then be ready to come back to the House and obtain such power as was necessary?

Mr. PUJO. Most assuredly. And I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that I consider under the resolution now pending that our powers are very specifically determined, and that our instructions, at least, have been put in detail. We are told to investigate the banking and currency conditions here, and to do it in line with the instructions of resolution 405 upon every subject upon which we have jurisdiction.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PUJO. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that his committee has already segregated all the matters contained in resolution 405 that go before the gentleman's committee for this inquiry, and have determined to make the inquiry in accordance with that resolution?

Mr. PUJO. I will anticipate the probable action of the House in replying to the gentleman from Texas and will say that we have had a subcommittee at work for a week on the task of segregating all the matters contained in resolution 405 of which we have jurisdiction.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And in accordance with the caucus resolution?

Mr. PUJO. Absolutely.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman permit me just a moment? The gentleman contends that his committee will investigate all the questions touched by resolution 405?

Mr. PUJO. In so far as we have jurisdiction.

Mr. LENROOT. Why is it limited to matters over which you have jurisdiction?

Mr. PUJO. We are bound by the rules of the House, and we can not take up matters that go to other committees; for instance, the Judiciary Committee—

Mr. LENROOT. You could have had the same jurisdiction as is contained in the resolution 405. Why did you not assume it?

Mr. PUJO. We have it in so far as those subjects properly come before us. We have nothing to do with judiciary questions, and nothing to do with matters pertaining to interstate and foreign commerce, because the caucus action instructed the committees having jurisdiction of those subjects to take action along those lines, and they will do it. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. CONNELL. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] as to the ownership of private stock or bonds, there is no desire on the part of the committee to investigate the ownership of any property unless it be used in violation of the law.

Mr. PUJO. The gentleman has stated the situation absolutely.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker—because there are others who desire to address the House on this question—that this investigation, so far as I am able to speak for the majority and in so far as I know the work of the entire membership of that committee, will be a complete one, will be a fair one, and will be an effectual one, I hope. [Applause.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. PUJO. Just after I have completed this statement I will yield.

It will not be one for the yellow journals of this country. It will not be one in the interest of one class of financiers as against another class. But it will be carrying out the instructions of the Democratic Party, reflected by the action of its caucus and the majority action of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. NORRIS. I would ask the gentleman if he agrees with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, in his published statement, as follows:

The truth is, that only one-third of the matters provided for under my resolution pertain to the duties and jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PUJO. Will the gentleman please restate the question? I could not hear it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] in his published statement, which is—

The truth is, that only one-third of the matters provided for in my resolution pertain to the duties and jurisdiction of that committee—

Meaning the Committee on Banking and Currency. Is that correct?

Mr. PUJO. I can not figure out right now the proportion, but that which is in Resolution 405, of which we have jurisdiction, will be given complete and full and entire consideration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the substitution of the resolution now before the House for the Henry resolution shows the absolute insincerity of the Democratic Party upon this question. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The language of the resolution before the House limits the work of this committee to those subjects of which the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency is confined to banking and currency questions. Since the creation of that committee up to this time it has only considered and reported on subjects relating to the strengthening of public credit; issues of notes, and the taxation and redemption thereof; propositions to maintain the parity of the money of the United States; the issue of silver certificates as currency; national-bank current deposits of public moneys; the incorporation of national banks; and the subjects relating to the Freedmen's Bank.

Mr. Speaker, the real question at issue before the country is one that you have been discussing for a century and 10 years. Ever since the organization of the Democratic Party, money power, big money, the octopus, the red dragon, the money devil, and the Money Trust have been the principal assets of the Democratic Party. All these years while you have been out of office you have inveighed against these in every campaign in which you have been engaged. Your newspapers and your campaigners always write and talk about big money, big interests, trusts, and combines. You led up to it to-day in the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]. I thought as he spoke, is it possible he has changed the resolution adopted this morning by the Committee on Rules, and is he going to offer a resolution that will really open up the question and permit a real investigation?

The resolution read is absolutely useless for that purpose.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will make it very brief.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Are you in favor of this investigation?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am, sir.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then, why have you not introduced a resolution to investigate it before, during these 110 years?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have not been here 110 years. I will tell the gentleman this: I have acted and offered some real bills and resolutions on these questions and have had real results.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] that under this resolution there are 35 national banks in the city of New York in the Wall Street district that he can go into and investigate. There his jurisdiction ends. There are 29 trust companies that he can not go into; there are 9 safe-deposit companies that he can not go into; there are 52 general offices of railroads that he can not go into; there are 46 fire insurance companies' offices that he can not go into; there are 18 life insurance companies' offices that he can not go into [applause on the Republican side]; there are 11 express companies whose offices he can not go into; there are 21 telegraph companies' offices that he can not go into; there are 18 steamship companies' offices that he can not go into; there are 42 coal companies' offices that he can not go into. There are over 200 other industrial and transportation companies' offices that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] and his committee can not enter the portals of under the jurisdiction given them by this resolution. The Henry resolution gave jurisdiction to go into all these offices and find the relation of all these companies to the large financial interests of the country and all their operations.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. GOOD. The report made by the chairman of the Democratic congressional committee in the last campaign shows that one man gave twice the amount that was contributed to the Democratic campaign by any other man. That man formerly came from Iowa and was then a poor man. At the time he made this contribution he was the confidential manager of J. Pierpont Morgan. I want to ask the gentleman if this resolution as it is now drawn would prevent an investigation of contributions of this kind, which brought that party into power?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why, certainly it prevents it by not permitting it; the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction of questions only relating to banking and currency.

But, Mr. Speaker, the country has been led to believe that you would to-day really tear from its body every limb of the octopus and that in the presence of applauding galleries you would beat it to death with the bloody ends. Instead, you have offered a meaningless resolution that does absolutely nothing. As compared with the performance that was expected, it is a gentle pat with a dry puffball. You create a little dust, but do not be deceived. You deceive no one. The country knows that you have resolved not to investigate the Money Trust. The country knows that when the Democratic caucus decided that there should not be a special committee given full jurisdiction of the whole subject and that the investigation should be confined to the jurisdiction had by the Committee on Banking and Currency that there would be no investigation at all. The Committee on Banking and Currency could make an investigation if given power. You do not give it.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman add to his illuminating address that there are millions of private homes in the United States in which this committee can not go and does not want to go? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is true; and if the gentleman wants to compare the offices of the companies I have enumerated with the private homes of the country and can get any consolation out of the comparison, he is welcome to it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I want to say a word now to some gentlemen on that side of the House who are holding seats pro tempore. You are to be called upon in a few moments to vote upon the previous question. If you vote for the previous question, you vote against an opportunity to amend this resolution, putting teeth in it, giving jurisdiction to the committee so that it may investigate all the questions relating to big money and to big business. If you want that kind of an investigation, you will vote against the previous question. If you do not want that kind of investigation, you will vote for the previous question.

But do not go home and again assault the octopus if you vote for the previous question here to-day.

If you are in favor of investigating this whole question and not in favor of a special committee, authorize the Committee on Banking and Currency to make the investigation and give it jurisdiction, give it the language of the Stanley resolution, of the Hardwick resolution, of the Lindbergh resolution, or of the Henry resolution, if you want to equip the committee for warfare with the octopus. If you do not want to equip this committee for warfare with the money power, of which you have talked so much, just vote for the previous question, so that there can be no amendment of this resolution.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I wish to get the gentleman's argument clearly in my mind. Is it the gentleman's contention that, by the insertion of the words "within the jurisdiction of the committee" in the body of this resolution, the resolution, if adopted, will not at all enlarge the authority that the Committee on Banking and Currency now has?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. It leaves it exactly as if that part of the resolution had not been passed?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and the insertion of the words was to enlist a few insurgent Democrats who are holding their seats temporarily in this House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it would be almost disgusting if there was not an amusing side to it to hear gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who hold to the political principles that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] does stand before this body and argue for greater power to investigate what he terms "big business, monopolies, combines, and the Money Trust."

The party to which those gentlemen belong was in complete control of this Government for 16 years, and yet there is not a man living who has ever heard them raise their voices in protest against those things or asking for any investigation whatever. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I can not, as I have but little time. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] asserted that this resolution shows the insincerity of the Democrats and that we do not really desire an investigation. I deny this most positively. I want to say to him that the Democrats, as is well known, recently had a caucus on this question, and not a solitary Member protested against an investigation of the so-called Money Trust. The only difference of opinion was in regard to the method of investigation, whether there should be an investigation by—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That makes quite a difference.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say, so that I may reply to it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I said that makes quite a difference.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes; the difference is that the Democrats have said, by the resolution passed in caucus, that they favor an investigation of these matters, while your party has never spoken on the subject, and, I dare say, never would if it had continued in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And this is the reason for your silence: These monopolies, combines, and trusts are the children of your own party—the outgrowth, the result of laws enacted by the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Why, a Republican introduced that measure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying a moment ago, our party has determined to have an investigation; and, as I was attempting to state when interrupted, the only difference of opinion was as to whether the matter should be in the hands of a special committee or should be handled by the regular standing committees of the House.

I know that some persons and some newspapers have charged that a majority of Democrats voted down a resolution to investigate the Money Trust. I shall not charge that anyone has willfully, wickedly, or maliciously told a falsehood about this matter, but I will say that the ones making the statement displayed a wonderful amount of ignorance of the facts. It is evident that they had never even read the resolution voted for by the Democrats, because the resolution on its face shows the charge to be untrue. Its meaning is too clear to be misunderstood.

Facts talk, so I shall quote the resolution as it was adopted: Be it resolved, etc. That it is the sense of the caucus that investigations of the various matters touched upon in said House resolution 405 shall be made by the standing committees having jurisdiction of these matters.

This resolution refers directly to the Henry resolution, which is House resolution 405, and includes every subject matter that could possibly be investigated under the Henry resolution. The truth is, the only change that was made was that the matter of making the investigation should be in the hands of the regular committees instead of a special committee.

The argument that the majority of Democrats, or that any Democrat, attempted to sidestep any investigation or voted against an inquiry, no matter how rigid or how searching, is completely refuted by the caucus resolution itself. Language can not be broader in its meaning, in an effort to cover everything in the Henry resolution, than that which reads "that investigations of the various matters touched upon in House resolution 405 shall be made." Everyone admits that House resolution 405 is broad enough in its language to authorize a thorough inquiry in regard to the Money Trust. If so, then the resolution voted for by a majority of the Democrats also gives that authority.

That the Committee on Banking and Currency gave the resolution the construction that I have just stated is the only one that could be given it; and that the committee desired and expected to carry out the will of the majority, as expressed in the resolution which was adopted, is evidenced by the fact that the very next day a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency was appointed by the chairman, Mr. PUJO, to go over House resolution 405, the Henry resolution, and segregate all matters therein that the committee had jurisdiction of.

The matters contained in the Henry resolution, of which the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction, are as follows:

(1) Whether the management of the finances of any of the industrial and railroad corporations engaged in interstate commerce is, or has been, under the control of any group or groups of financiers and their associates, and whether said persons, by reason of control over the funds of said corporation and the power to dictate the depositories of such funds, dominate and control any of the national banks and other moneyed institutions of the country, and by such control and power direct operations in the use of money belonging to depositors and stockholders in making loans, purchasing and selling securities, controlling money, exchange securities and commodity markets, preventing competition, and furthering the enterprises and increasing the profits the persons exercising such control; and

(3) Whether the national banks and other institutions, controlled as aforesaid, are engaged, or have been engaged, in promoting, underwriting, or exploiting speculative enterprises, and in the sale and purchase of securities of such enterprises, and in acquiring, directly or indirectly, stocks of other banking institutions and absorbing competitors, and in using their corporate funds and credits for such purposes; and

(4) Whether national banks and other corporations are engaged in or connected with the management or financial affairs of interstate railroads or industrial corporations, and what power, if any, they have or exercise over such corporations, and how and to what uses the bankable fund of such corporations are applied; and

(5) Whether the marketing of the securities that have been issued by interstate railroad and industrial corporations has been by competitive bidding or otherwise, and what connection national banks have had with such matters; and

(6) Whether individuals, firms, national banks, and other corporations interested in or in anywise connected with such interstate corporations, are enabled by reason of such interest, or connection with such corporations, or with other individuals, firms, national banks, other corporations, or otherwise, to prevent or suppress competition in the interest of such corporation, or to protect or assist the latter in preventing or suppressing such competition.

(8) Whether the funds of national banks and other corporations are now, or have been, employed in the purchase of securities from bankers or others in any way interested in or connected with such corporation in the guaranty, or underwriting of securities, or syndicate transaction, either alone or in conjunction with others in loans on notes, secured by bonds, stocks, or other collateral in loans on or purchases of stocks of other banks, or of any other trust or investment company, or financial corporation, and in any form of investment alone or in joint account.

(9) Whether any national bank or other corporation, either alone or in conjunction with others, has acted as an issuing house, or has offered securities to the public, or to investors, by prospectus, advertisement, solicitation, or otherwise, or has speculated in stocks, and if so, the nature of all such transactions in all their details.

(10) What are the methods of the management, operation, and control of stock exchanges and clearing-house associations, and the relation that they bear to the national banks and other corporations, and to the financial and commercial systems of the country, and how they affect the security markets?

(11) Whether any individual, firm, or corporation, or any one or more groups of such individuals, firms, or corporations, may or can affect the security markets of the country through the stock exchanges, or can avert, create, or compose panics by the control of the use and disposition of moneys in the national banks or other corporations that are controlled by such individuals, firms, or corporations, or by any other means.

12. What are the methods of financing the cash requirements of interstate corporations and of marketing their securities and the relation of national banks and others to these transactions?

I am heartily in favor of a probe of the so-called Money Trust. There can be no doubt in the mind of any man who is at all familiar with conditions that there is something radically wrong with the financial affairs of the country; that there are great combinations of capital that are despotic and dangerous in tendencies and purposes; that the markets of the country are being manipulated in the interests of a few; that the money and credits of the country are being controlled and manipulated for selfish interests; and that other conditions exist that demand regulation and control, and in some cases suppression, at the hands of the law.

An investigation of these matters will be made by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and it will be, in my judgment, as thorough, complete, and far-reaching as it is possible to make, for the purpose of determining what legislation may be needed to relieve the great masses of our people from the great burden of wrong and injustice that they have had to bear so long.

It is suggested that the resolution now before the House does not give our committee authority to inquire into all these matters. Some of the best lawyers here say that it does give the authority.

Mr. Speaker, let me say this: The Committee on Banking and Currency is not trying to shirk any duty, is not attempting to evade a full and complete investigation; and if we shall find that we do not have full power to act, we can easily come back to the House for greater power. And I assure you that if we find it necessary to do so we shall not hesitate to make the request for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There can be no doubt that this Democratic House will vote to give all the authority necessary for that kind of an inquiry, but I do not believe that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr.

CAMPELL] and many others on that side would be very willing to grant it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to remind gentlemen that whenever any Member has the floor the right way to interrupt him is to first address the Chair, and it is against good order and is unparliamentary for a gentleman sitting in his seat to interrupt a gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit me to explain [cries of "Regular order!"] that I was sitting in my seat and casually made an observation to a colleague, and the gentleman who was then addressing the House turned and inquired what I said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, but the gentleman from Michigan evidently made the remark loud enough for the gentleman from Mississippi, who had the floor, to hear a part of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. No, Mr. Speaker; it was because the gentleman had supernaturally acute ears. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought it well to suggest that to Members, because they do it without thinking, and it disturbs the Member who has the floor.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, for many years I have been consistently contending that our banking and corporation laws were in dire need of correction. As far back as the Fifty-sixth Congress, in explanation of my vote against the then proposed constitutional amendment vesting in Congress the power to define and curtail trusts, monopolies, and combinations, I said:

Publicity and the prevention by legislation of overcapitalization are the two remedies which would cure all that is bad in combinations of business and capital, and I am in favor of both of these remedies.

Since making this statement many prominent men have said precisely the same thing, amongst them a former distinguished President of the United States. It has been conceded by all thinking men that our financial system is wrong, that we want it corrected, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the surest way and the quickest way to correct the many evils of this system is for the Banking and Currency Committee of the House to report a bill embodying sound principles and remedial legislation.

It is, I think, especially unfortunate that in the discussion of a question which requires cool and deliberate judgment there should be so much rash and intemperate language, so many reckless statements without the smallest iota of foundation in fact, and above all the inclination to show a sectional prejudice is as unjust as it is regrettable. It is hardly possible to conduct an argument on the financial question without drawing from some public man a vicious and an uncalled-for attack upon New York City, and yet, Mr. Speaker, the fact is as I stated in the hearings before the Committee on Rules recently, that—the prosperity of New York is the prosperity of the country; the prosperity of the country is the prosperity of New York. You can not hurt New York without hurting the country, and vice versa.

And all of the abuse that has been heaped upon the greatest city in the country can not change the fact that not only the entire country, but the whole world, is dependent upon this great city.

The golden harvests of the western prairies that yield their bounteous supply of breadstuffs, the snowy cotton fields of the South whose staples clothe the world, the glowing furnaces and the busy factories of the East, and the teeming industries of this country whose products of farm, factory, and mine are gaining the first place in the markets of the world, all of these, Mr. Speaker, have used, are to-day using, and will continue to use the Empire City as the clearing house between them and these markets.

New York is now the money market of the civilized world and is to-day supplying funds to finance the industries of every nation. She furnishes funds to move the crops, to build the factories, to develop the railroads, and dig the mines of the United States. It has been complained that some railroads of the country have been unable to borrow money in New York and have been unjustly discriminated against. Many, if not all, Members of Congress have received a letter from a Mr. A. E. Stilwell, president of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway Co., complaining bitterly of the treatment he has received from the financiers of New York, but in common with many others making like complaints he does not state the case fully.

Mr. Stilwell has endeavored to obtain money to aid him in building the Kansas City, Missouri & Orient Railway. This railroad runs into Mexico, a country whose numerous upheavals and revolutions in the past few years have made it a notoriously unsafe field for investment.

It must, however, be borne in mind that other causes contributed to the disinclination of money men to invest in railroads. It is generally conceded that at the present time the United States needs fully 25,000 additional miles of railroad, but ever since the unreasonable treatment of railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission failing to keep their agreement with the President of the United States and the railroads to allow the latter proportionate increases in rates based upon their increased wages to their employees, capital has not been especially anxious to invest in railway enterprises, and until there is a disposition to show a certain amount of fair treatment toward the great carrying roads of our country there will undoubtedly be but little future building of railroads.

One of the most serious mistakes in connection with the whole system of financial and corporation law is the continual agitation and passage of experimental and theoretical laws, like the Sherman law, whose effect upon industrial conditions in this country have been almost uniformly bad. The public has been complaining of high prices ever since this species of extreme legislation has been in vogue. The methods of correcting the evils of trusts under the Sherman Act are wrong, and instead of lessening the power of capital and reducing the cost of living it has had the effect, almost always, of increasing the prices of commodities, making the rich richer and the poor poorer. For instance, the recent dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. has increased the price of oil to the consumer over 2 cents a gallon, has ruined thousands of small investors, and has made the large stockholders richer beyond comprehension. I think I am not far out of the way when I state, what can easily be demonstrated, that the dissolution of the Standard Oil Trust has increased the wealth of one single interest over $10,000,000.

Now, it has been proposed, and many gentlemen are still in favor of further investigation. I can not too often or too strongly insist that it is not investigation that we need, but legislation. The whole financial question has been investigated very thoroughly, Mr. Speaker. We have all the information that is necessary, and I believe we have a Committee on Banking and Currency fully familiar with every phase of the question and entirely competent to proceed at once to draft a bill or bills that will relieve an intolerable situation. We all realize that the banking and currency system of the United States is a vague, mixed system that certainly needs correction. The report of the National Monetary Commission, speaking of our credit operations, says as follows:

The methods by which our domestic and international credit operations are now conducted are crude, expensive, and unworthy of intelligent people. The annual value of the products of our industries is estimated at thirty-five thousand million dollars. If to this vast sum is added the cost of transportation and distribution, we can realize that the movement of these products, through the various stages from the producer to the consumer, requires the use of an enormous amount of credit and cash. To form an accurate estimate of the magnitude of our credit structure, we should add to this our accumulation of wealth and capital and the sums used in connection with our foreign trade. It is the function of a sound monetary system to take care of these vast operations without friction and in such a manner as will promote the prosperity of our people.

While I have not thoroughly gone into the report of the Monetary Commission, I believe some of their recommendations are a step forward in the right direction.

Our credit system at the present time is based upon stocks and bonds. What we need is a system based upon the principle of commercial paper. That is what the people of the United States need—facilities to borrow money. It is a great mistake to continually be agitating these great business questions.

Over and over again in the past the moment a reckless agitation began, even though business was in a normal condition and crops were good and factories running full time, a stagnation would immediately take place because a state of uncertainty would ensue, confidence would be destroyed, and people would withdraw their money from the banks and place it in safe-deposit vaults or some other place which would take it entirely out of circulation, and make money, which is the very lifeblood of business, stringent and difficult to obtain, and, Mr. Speaker, there is no possible way of compelling the people by legislation to invest their money or to keep it in circulation. The only way this can be done is by restoring confidence in the credit and integrity of our banks and industrial enterprises.

If we wish to see our country prosper, if we wish to see business conditions resume normal conditions, we must cease entirely this utterly useless method of agitating, investigating, and experimenting and confine ourselves to the work we are sent here to do, and that is to enact constructive remedial legislation, bearing one definite fact always in mind and applying Jefferson's doctrine against the centralization of power to the financial situation, and insisting against the centralization of capital and the overcapitalization of any corporation, either financial or industrial. When this is done, and not before, we can expect with certainty that the natural prosperous condition of the country will be restored, confidence will prevail, and not only will be beneficial to the great financial centers but every little town and hamlet in our wide domain will once more be a center of American activity, energy, and enterprise, and a new era of industrial development will be ushered in that will make a grander, a greater, and a more prosperous United States than has ever before existed. [Loud applause.]

[During the delivery of the above, Mr. LEVY was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to use some of his time.

Mr. DALZELL. How does the time stand now, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has 23 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 36 minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for the adoption of this resolution when the time comes that I can do so. I believe the effect of it will be educational, and I think there is no question that the country at least, and possibly the House, need all the education that they can get along this line.

The purpose of this investigation is to determine whether there is a Money Trust or not. It seems to me the committee ought to have no difficulty in discovering a Money Trust, because, so far as my knowledge goes, there are at least 15,000 or 20,000 money trusts in the United States. Every city, every town, every village that has a bank has a money trust, and when a village is too small to have a bank some good old Deacon Jones, who has laid up his money and is willing to lend it to his neighbors on good security, is the money trust there. The Money Trust, I suspect, is our old friend, the money power, that has been with us so many years. I think we will all admit that money is power wherever it is.

If some man worth a hundred millions of dollars should go out into the deserts of the West, in 30 days they would have paved roads leading out to where he lived, if there were no other way to reach him by those who desired to interest him in their projects. But this particular Money Trust that we are to investigate is supposed to exist in the city of New York. Of course, the Money Trust of New York is greater, probably, than that of any other city, because New York is greater than any other city in the country, and is a great financial center. Every country has a financial center. New York is much less the financial center of this country than London is of Great Britain or Paris is of France, because of our independent banking system. But New York is a great financial center, just as New Orleans is a great cotton center and Minneapolis is a great flour and wheat center.

New York was not made a financial center by law, Mr. Speaker. That is where we are going to fail to meet the anticipations of some of the radical gentlemen who are urging this investigation. New York was not made and is not a financial center by reason of law. It grew from natural causes.

Let me show you a few of the things that make New York a great financial center. New York State has savings banks in which are deposited the savings of workingmen of that State to the amount of more than $1,500,000,000. If I remember right, $1,750,000,000 are in the savings banks of New York State. Gentlemen here talk about the power of the Morgan group of banks. Assuming, Mr. Speaker, that every bank in which Mr. Morgan holds a dollar of stock, or of which any of his partners hold a dollar of stock, and suppose they are under his complete domination, the money on deposit in the savings banks of the State of New York amounts to about twice the deposits of all the Morgan banks put together. And yet they say with that power he dominates the affairs of 90,000,000 people. There are more than $2,500,000,000 on deposit in the hundred or more banks of New York City, a very respectable money power in itself. There is something like a billion and a half or more of assets in the hands of the great life insurance companies of New York City. We did not create any of these by law. They are owned there. They came to New York naturally, because it is a great center.

Altogether, then, there are more than $6,000,000,000 which I have enumerated, which help to make New York City a great financial center. In addition to that, thousands of wealthy men live there, with a great deal of money for investment. Every man in Chicago, St. Louis, or New Orleans who gets to be worth twenty millions or thirty millions of dollars moves to New York City, or has an office there, and helps to increase the financial power of that great community.

But some gentlemen here argue that it is the reserves of banks which we permit by law to go to the city of New York which give the banks of New York their financial power. The very slightest examination of the official statistics on the part of gentlemen will show that if we took every dollar of reserve in national banks out of the city of New York it would very little affect its standing as a great financial center. The last time I looked there were about $350,000,000 of outside bank reserves in the national banks of the city of New York. The banks of the country would be obliged to keep that amount of money with the banks in New York City whether we permitted them to count it as reserve or not.

Every gentleman here knows that for the convenience of the merchants and business men in every city and village of the United States who buy great quantities of merchandise in the city of New York, the banks are obliged to keep more or less of deposits in that city. Hence it is not the law. We have done nothing to create that great center. It has grown naturally, as some financial center grows in every great country of the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I can not anticipate the finding of any Money Trust which will come under any definition upon the statute books of the United States. It may be that we will find unlawful and illegal uses—conspiracies, if you please—among some of the great financiers of New York City. But if we find conspiracies whereby they attempt to block the sale of railroad bonds or the building of railroads in some parts of the Union, Mr. Speaker, their acts are already unlawful upon the statute books to-day and have been for a hundred years under the common law. Those injured could go into court to-day and bring forth the proof which they would have to bring forward under any law we could pass in order to convict of unlawful acts.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. VREELAND. I can not yield now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this investigation.

The people of this great country of ours know so little, have a chance to find out so little, about these great financial affairs in the cities that I believe it will be educational to them, and possibly to some of the Members of the House, to know more of the great business of the country and how it is conducted. But what I object to, Mr. Speaker, in some of the resolutions that have been presented to this House, is the starting out with a preamble which declares that "certain great banks," lawfully existing under regulation of the laws of the United States, "are unlawfully using their deposits, are attempting to rob the public, are endangering the deposits of their customers," and therefore be it resolved that we will appoint a committee to go and find out whether there is anything in it. I think that is a dangerous procedure. I think that gentlemen who propose that sort of procedure know very little about the vast and intricate fabric upon which the great business of this country is built.

Why, gentlemen, I can show you in the printed hearings passages where gentlemen of this House have by name pointed out banks in the city of New York, national banks, presumably doing business in an honest way until the contrary is shown, under the regulation of one of the best Comptrollers of the Currency that this country has ever had, and asserted there—and it is printed as part of the records of Congress—that these banks have made efforts to rob the public at the risk of their depositors. That is what I object to. That is all that anybody objects to. That is what is called the danger of bringing on panics and loss of confidence. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the deposits in the banks of this country amount to nearly $16,000,000,000, scattered among 25,000 banks. Probably 95 per cent of the business of the country is done with credit instruments of some kind through banks.

This great structure is reared upon confidence, and whoever imperils the confidence which people have in this system may start a fire which will become a conflagration.

The reputation of a bank is as delicate as the reputation of a woman. Many runs upon banks have been started by thoughtless or malicious remarks. Gentlemen may assail the Sugar Trust or they may assail the Steel Trust upon this floor and it may do no great harm beyond scaring some of their stockholders into selling their stock. The purchasers of sugar and the purchasers of steel and iron are not disturbed by the talk here.

But assaults upon banks, upon our credit structure, within the Halls of Congress may be dangerous. Gentlemen say that if these banks and financial institutions have not been guilty of violating the law they have nothing to fear. But gentlemen who say this would say that a Swiss watch could be sent to a blacksmith to be repaired.

Let us take a concrete case. Let us suppose that three banks here in Washington had been mentioned by name in the Halls of Congress; had been charged with robbing the public and endangering the money of their depositors, and a resolution is brought in to investigate them, and is debated in this House and is adopted, and our proceedings and debates are reported in the newspapers. Do gentlemen not know that long before our committee would be ready to take up the work of investigation thousands of depositors would be swarming into those banks demanding their money? They might not believe that anything was really wrong, but they would give themselves the benefit of the doubt, and these runs might extend to other banks, and they might extend to other cities.

Mr. Speaker, it is because the members of the Banking and Currency Committee know the danger of assailing great credit institutions and impairing the confidence of their depositors in them that they are unwilling to pass resolutions in Congress which practically charge guilt against financial institutions without any definite knowledge whatever upon which to base such charges.

Mr. Speaker, whether we have competition anywhere else or not, we have it among the 25,000 banks of the United States. We have both competition and regulation by law, and nowhere is competition more keen than among the hundred banks which are located in Greater New York.

Statements have been made by both the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] that 75 per cent of the vast army of banks and bankers of the United States are under the domination and control of two or three groups of financiers in New York City. It is worth all the trouble and cost of this investigation to find out whether this is true.

I declare that it is utterly untrue. I declare that not 5 per cent of the banks of the United States are under any sort of control or domination by New York banks and financiers.

The interests of our multitude of our home-owned banks are in the towns and cities where they exist. They do a great proportion of their business at home. Their stockholders and their customers and depositors live where the banks are owned. No outside interest can compare in importance with the home interests of these banks.

The number of outside banks in which New York banks or their officers or directors hold stock would not, in my opinion, amount to 1 per cent of the total number of banks. Instead of outside banks being under obligations to the banks of the city of New York, the obligation is the other way. The outside banks are their customers, and the competition among the New York banks is keen for their business, and the alleged control exists only in the minds of the gentlemen making the statement.

Mr. Speaker, I favor this investigation, not with a blare of trumpets and explosions of dynamite, but along safe and orderly methods of procedure. I believe in making it thorough. I think any man or set of men in the United States who believe that financiers in New York have conspired against them or injured them will receive a full and fair hearing before the committee.

So much has been said upon this subject, so many wild statements have been given to the public, that I believe the investigation should go on. It may be that the light of publicity turned upon great financial transactions may result in good.

Complaint has been made that the Monetary Commission did not investigate this subject more deeply. The commission investigated it, so far as they needed to, for the purpose of framing financial legislation; and the more financial control and financial centralization of power over our banking and currency system are alleged or found to exist, the greater the need of adopting the plan of the Monetary Commission, under which the National Reserve Association is charged with the responsibility of maintaining the credit of the banks and of the business of the country, in place of the great banks of New York City.

As one member of the Banking and Currency Committee I have no interest of any description in Wall Street or in New York. I live 400 miles from the great metropolis. I do not own a dollars' worth of stocks or bonds sold upon the stock exchange. The statement that members of the Banking and Currency Committee are under the control of Wall Street "interests" is one of reckless mendacity, without a shadow of truth, made entirely for political and partisan purposes.

Speaking for the minority of the committee, we will do our best toward making a searching and impartial investigation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, if the Committee on Banking and Currency, upon the adoption of this resolution were to adopt the narrow construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], that committee would be damned by the whole country. I do not believe the Committee on Banking and Currency will adopt any such construction. I believe, in addition to that, that if, upon any given test arising it should be held that this resolution clothes them only with authority limited as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and they do not then come before this House and ask for additional authority, they would still be damned. In other words, I believe that the construction contended for by the gentleman from Wisconsin is a narrow and unwarranted construction of the resolution.

I further believe that this resolution to-day is a part and parcel of original Resolution 405, and that the action of the Democratic caucus practically and substantially, and, in fact, adopted House resolution 405, the Henry resolution only changing the reference of the investigation to the several committees having jurisdiction of the different subjects instead of to one special selected committee. And those of us who in the caucus voted for the reference to one special and exclusive committee may well yield our judgment as to method, in deference to the action of a majority of our brothers, finding that the whole House is determined and ready to make the very investigations asked for by Resolution 405, only referring the different parts of that resolution to the different committees.

With that understanding, with that belief, with that knowledge, and further with the statement from the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency on the floor of this House that he did not agree in the narrow construction of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and his further statement that if it should be held on any test that the construction of the gentleman from Wisconsin was right, he would come back to this House for further authority, I can not see any reason why anyone on this side should fail to vote for the resolution now before the House. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas yields back one minute.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the previous question in order that the House may have an opportunity to consider amendments to the resolution reported. But, saying that, I will say further that, speaking for myself, I think I should vote against any amendment which proposed to enlarge the scope of the investigation, and that I expect to vote for the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, the most delicate machinery in all the world is the system of financial credits. It might easily happen that the action of this House would produce an effect upon the financial credits of the country which would bring ruin and disaster in their wake. I am not in favor of making an assault upon the financial credit of the country or of attempting to prevent the use of money for the purpose of extending and carrying on the business and industrial operation of the United States. I think it is quite as important that the committee which makes the investigation shall be a committee composed of sober, sensible-minded men, who have only the interest of the country at heart, and who place principle above party. I believe that that can be said of the Committee on Banking and Currency. [Applause.]

I would not favor the passage of resolution 405, which, if I can read it correctly, would propose an investigation of everything happening or not happening in the world before and since the birth of Christ. I do not believe it is to the advantage of the country to endeavor now to make an investigation concerning everything. While we have recently had already an investigation of the monetary system of the country by an able Monetary Commission, it may be advisable to continue that investigation through the Committee on Banking and Currency, not for the purpose of finding a Money Trust, but for the purpose of showing that there is no Money Trust, and that there can not be a Money Trust in our Government, under our system of civilization. It would be pleasant if any of us could telephone to a bank for unlimited credit or an unlimited supply of money, but that time will never come, however much the use of the telephone may be extended. Those people who have money in their hands to loan will always be found willing and anxious to loan it to those who have the security which makes the loan safe, and an investigation which shows that fact may do good. Placing principle above party and love of country above party advantage, I congratulate the Democratic side of the House upon the first safe and sane move it has made since it came into control of this body. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for those who have given the thought to this Money Trust problem that the subject justifies to understand how serious-minded men can temporize the way many Members have done in this case. To allow personality or politics to influence one's action is an indication that the importance has escaped such person. I do not believe that there is a Member who would neglect his duty in this matter if he really comprehended the situation. The only thing that I would feel like criticizing the majority membership for is the way it seeks to deceive the public by having time to waste on unimportant and transient matters, but when real momentous problems are up for consideration the "previous question" is ordered and the Members gagged by the rules from explaining important measures. Not since the Emancipation Proclamation has so important a subject been before the people for their consideration as this Money Trust, but it is slighted by the leaders calling to their aid those who believe that standing in is more important to them than the real welfare of the people, so the House sets aside days to discuss political differences and personalities; but this, the most important matter, is split into a series of from 5 to 12 minute discussions, to be all cut off in 2 hours.

The Emancipation Proclamation freed 4,000,000 slaves. A proper treatment of the Money Trust resolution would emancipate over 90,000,000 industrial slaves, and yet the Money Trust is treated with kindergarten methods.

There is unrest in this country. If I alone were to give emphasis in adequate terms to the actual feeling of the people, I might be called a radical, or even a "neurotic," and possibly a "firebrand," but it does not occur to apply such terms to Judge Gary, president of the great Steel Trust, so I will quote from some remarks he made February 14 at the New York Lehigh Club, as follows:

Unless capitalists, corporations, rich men, powerful men, themselves take a leading part in trying to improve conditions of humanity, great changes will come. They will come mighty quickly, and the mob will bring them.

Mr. Gary made it very clear that people generally are "evincing a readiness to take things into their own hands." He also stated that the "spirit of unrest" is not confined to the United States, but is world-wide. "Things are being said," he declared, "very similar to things said just before the French Revolution. I tell you the spark may yet make a flame, and that soon. I have an especial reason for saying this, and a reason that affects you and me. Men of great power and influence in the forces of the country have not all of them done the fair thing."

The unrest referred to by Judge Gary he thinks so serious that it threatens revolution. No honest student doubts the seriousness of the unrest, nor does he doubt there being a real cause for it. The cause is the Money Trust and its allied interests. But in the face of its supreme importance we, here in this House, are kept from giving the matter proper consideration because of petty politics and personalities.

I share Gary's views that there is unrest. We all know there is unrest. But those of us who had time and desire to study actual conditions and see how to apply a proper remedy know that revolution is not the remedy. We do not believe in violence, and while there may sometimes be excuse for violence, it is never justified. There are no conditions now that should lead to violence, but there are conditions that should enlist more serious views of this Money Trust and the economic problems than the House gives to them, and Members' failure to take a sufficiently statesmanlike view of the existing conditions could be the cause of the very thing that Judge Gary fears. It was like indifference to the rights of the people that caused the French Revolution, and even revolution would be better than decay. Decay is an ailment here in the House.

It is indeed a misfortune that the best opportunity that has been presented to Congress in a half century for the meeting of a great common demand has, to a certain extent, had politics injected into it. To accomplish all the good that is possible no politics should have entered. It is of the most vital importance to this country at this time that the public in general should understand the meaning of its own finances as they are handled by the great financiers. That could be done best by the appointment of a special committee, selected with a view to their knowledge of how to make an investigation and the importance of using the information in such a manner as to create the least disturbance, for it is already known that business methods have been adopted by the financial kings that are not consistent with the interests of the plain producers and consumers. There can be no justification for using facts that might be obtained for any other purpose than the correction of the present evils. They should not be used for political purposes, but simply to bring about justice in a consistent and orderly way.

When the subject was first approached Wall Street saw that the resolution was loaded with powder and lead and that it would reach to the very heart of its practices. There was an attempt to smother it, so that the public might not know its importance, but as I pushed it for consideration, the press gave it publicity, and a realization of its importance, which has been growing larger and larger, until now it is recognized by the people as a momentous problem.

I was astounded a few weeks ago by an emissary from Wall Street calling upon me and directing my attention to the fact of the immense responsibility that I was taking in pressing such a resolution for consideration, and that if I continued a panic would be brought on worse than this country had previously known. He admonished me to withdraw the resolution. To this I suggested that if there was a condition existing among the greater business interests of this country that was so rotten that an investigation revealing those conditions would cause those interests to bring on a panic, that it is better that those conditions should be known now, that at least the future of the country might be assured. It is not possible to come to any other conclusion than that if the business is being honestly conducted an investigation could not do harm, and if business is dishonestly conducted then it is necessary that an investigation should be made in order to correct it. How is it possible that any honest, patriotic citizen should consent to stop an investigation in order to conceal such conditions as those intimated by the Wall Street emissary?

The Rules Committee continued to hold its hearings. It was sought to influence its chairman and members but they refused to allow politics to enter. That not succeeding the next step was to threaten some of the leaders of the House with a panic before election unless the investigation should be prevented, but in the meantime the public was making such demand that it would be dangerous to the political interests to do otherwise than at least give the appearance of making an investigation, so the members of a standing committee were secured to conjure up in their minds a jealousy, lest their privileges should be invaded, so that they demanded that they should be given the privilege of doing the investigating.

As long as these investigations were upon other matters that did not so vitally concern the special interests members of the committees were not so jealous of their privileges, and the less important investigations were therefore referred to special committees without the least compunction. This method of evasion of responsibility by the representatives of the people is one of the mockeries of representative government. Wall Street simply entered Washington and scared the politicians. It is a matter of common knowledge among many of the Members that its emissaries have been here lobbying in opposition to this investigation; but finally, when it was seen that the public demand was so great that it had to come and that it was too late to have it absolutely muffled, the next way out was to refer it to a standing committee.

Now that the public is being heard from, there is some chance of awaking the standing committee to the responsibility and force it to act with due diligence.

I do not impugn the honesty of the membership of the Banking and Currency Committee, but in view of the apparent wrong in our present system, openly demonstrated all the time, I do, and the country must, feel that the members of that committee are not over-diligent nor even diligent in attending to the great responsibility that rests on them. They have the ability, if they will apply it, but the education of most of the members of the committee is to permit the very things of which the public complain.

The chairman of that committee has proposed, and there is now before us for consideration, his resolution, instead of the ones introduced by me July and December, 1911, and January 3, 1912, and one by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], January 29, 1912. The resolutions introduced by Mr. HENRY and myself would permit a committee to go to the bottom of the subject and treat it with the importance of the problem. The substance of my resolution and the one Mr. HENRY introduced are the same.

I shall say little now about the caucus system. I have spoken on that subject before. I am more than ever, by the proceedings in this case, convinced of the great injustice that is being done the American people by the use of the caucus system in legislative bodies. The people will not much longer be fooled by caucus wrongs. The caucus system is to destroy popular government.

Speaker CLARK has properly stated that an investigation should take place that would go to the bottom of this subject. The Speaker has no more authority to order that investigation than any other Member of this House. It is the business of this House to direct that committee to make the investigation. The very absurdity of the phraseology of the Pujo resolution stamps upon those who are responsible for it a weakness that ought never to be shown in this House. The lack of force of the Banking and Currency Committee having charge of such an investigation is suggested in the resolution proposed by its chairman.

On the 30th of June, 1908, a law was passed directing the appointment of the National Monetary Commission, and that commission was appointed and by law was authorized to make a thorough investigation of this problem. The proponent of the present resolution was one of the members of the commission. He signed its report. There is in the report a proposed bill. He stands committed in its favor by having signed the report. By section 56 of that bill it is proposed that the Government of the United States shall give absolutely free to the proposed association approximately $220,000,000.

Other provisions of the same bill make it optional with the association to get $680,000,000 more free. Section 56 provides that the association shall pay a special tax on as much of the first $900,000,000 of its note issue as it buys 2 per cent United States bonds from the subscribing banks. By section 49 the association is required to offer for a period of one year to buy from the subscribing banks their 2 per cent United States bonds securing their circulation. But there is no provision that the banks shall sell these bonds, and if the banks do not sell them to the association, and they retire their circulation, then the association will have the privilege of issuing $900,000,000 absolutely free from tax for a period of 50 years.

There is no reason to believe that the subscribing banks will transfer these bonds to the association. It would be a bad business proposition for them to do so, for the Government has reserved the privilege to pay the bonds in 1930, and in order to maintain its credit, as it should, will likely pay them. The banks can draw 2 per cent interest on practically $680,000,000 United States bonds, retire their circulation, and in 18 years collect $244,800,000 interest, and by so doing save their association $675,000,000 of taxes for the period of its charter. Does anybody expect, is it reasonable to expect, that these banks that are in the business for the profit there is in it are not going to use the opportunity?

That is not all. In that same bill, by other sections, it is provided that the association may issue any amount of its notes without paying any tax whatever if the amount issued is covered by lawful money held by it. There are provisions in the bill by which the United States is to turn over its general funds and still other provisions by which the association can secure the reserves of the banks throughout the country. These reserves which the association secures from the banks and the Government deposits will at one and the same time act as reserves for the banks and as lawful money to cover association note issues to save it from taxes. Within one year after the association would begin business it would have from the Government, and as reserve agent for the banks, lawful money on which it could, if it chose, issue more than a billion dollars to lend to its subscribing banks—a gift, pure and simple, to the great moneyed interests. Why, if such a gift is to be made, not let the people have the advantage instead?

That was the report signed by the proponent of the Pujo resolution. The gentleman, no doubt, is sincere, but he has not entered into a study of these problems in such a way as to be able by his work to promote the general welfare. He has been willing to and has signed the report by which the people of this country would grant the privilege to a private monopoly to issue money free of charge and give it legal tender. Several other of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee served on the National Monetary Commission and signed the same report. Are we going to turn over the money investigation to them? If we do, we must expect the investigation to be made from the viewpoint of bankers, whereas it is the wish of the country that it should be made for the purpose of all business and the people in general.

The purpose of this investigation was to get information to enable Congress to pass proper laws on the subject of banking and currency. We are asked to turn the whole matter over to bankers and the attorneys of bankers. It is on the same principle as if we would appoint J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, and Andrew Carnegie, and a few more of the same school to investigate the trust problems and report their investigations and recommendations to Congress.

The Pujo resolution reads as follows:

Whereas the Committee on Banking and Currency is vested with the power to propose to the House all legislation relating to banking and currency; and

Whereas said committee is desirous of securing full and complete information regarding the banking and currency conditions of the country for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ experts, counsel, accountants, and clerical and other assistants.

My resolution reads as follows:

Whereas the money, exchange, deposit, reserve, and credit systems are essential to the business relations of the people with each other, requiring that they should be administered on a commercial and not a speculative basis in order to facilitate the dealing in, distributing, and exchanging of products, services, and articles of commerce; and Whereas it appears that our present system of money, exchange, and credit entails on the people enormous losses, due presumably to speculation, gambling, and manipulation, which are not necessarily incident to a natural commerce; and

Whereas it appears that these practices are directed through well-defined centers, the greatest of which, it is believed, does now actually have the power of controlling credit, exchanges, and deposits to the extent of being able to actually bring on business depression and even business disaster; and

Whereas there appears to be a constantly increasing power in certain individuals and corporate concerns to concentrate and control, for selfish purposes, the moneys, finances, and credits of the people: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of five, to be selected by the House, is authorized and directed—

First. To investigate as to whether there are or are not combinations of financiers or financial institutions or corporate or other concerns who control the money and credits, and through that control operate in restraint of trade and in violation of law.

Second. To investigate whether there are practices by which the spirit of the national banking laws is being violated in the organization of banks by the use of the kiting system of notes of the organizers, or by the use of others' notes through the organizers, or if any improper means are used to form the basis for any part of the capital of banks.

Third. To inquire into the deposit and use of the reserves by the banks, and especially that portion of the reserves authorized to be kept in the reserve and central reserve banks, and also the effect of the reserve system on the finances of the country.

Fourth. To make report to Congress on their investigation on said subjects and those matters having direct connection therewith, and make suggestions for further legislation if such seems to be necessary.

Said committee, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to sit during sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, and the hearings shall be open to the public, and the committee, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to employ clerical and other assistance, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses.

Then I amended that by adding the following:

To amend House resolution 314.

Whereas H. Res. 314 provides for the appointment of a committee to investigate as to whether there is or is not a Money Trust; and

Whereas it is common knowledge that certain of the larger and more important national banking institutions in New York City and in Chicago are owned and directed by those who are also in control of the larger and more important insurance and trust companies and industrial and railroad corporations of the country; and

Whereas frequent fluctuations in the prices of various and numerous stocks and shares of corporations have in the past brought great loss to the general public and in many instances to the people whose money was on deposit in said banking institutions; and

Whereas it is also common knowledge that the directors of said institutions have in the past profited largely by said fluctuations and manipulations of stock prices; and

Whereas there are certain subjects to which the attention of the proposed committee should be specifically directed as bearing on the main purpose of the resolution: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That without limiting or diminishing the present scope of H. Res. 314, the same shall be amended by adding to the four directing clauses thereto the following:

Fifth. To ascertain the ownership of stock and the practical control of the principal banks and trust companies eligible under the latest proposal of the so-called Aldrich plan, and as the same shall finally be submitted by the National Monetary Commission, to subscribe for and hold the stock of the proposed National Reserve Association, and if that is not the name proposed by the plan of said National Monetary Commission, then the association that will be proposed, and so far as practical to ascertain what relation in stock ownership, control, and management such stockholders have in the principal trusts that control the industries, railroad systems, and the large properties, and also, so far as practical, the influence these exercise over smaller banks and institutions throughout the country, so as to show what community of interest there is in the general scope of their business, and whether or not the business is generally conducted so as to conserve the country's general welfare.

Sixth. To ascertain the facts with reference to the use of the reserves by the reserve and central reserve banks, and so far as practical, to ascertain what proportion of the reserves are redeposited by the reserve in central reserve banks, and what percentage of the fixed reserves of the reserve and the central reserve banks are loaned, and so far as practical to determine what proportion of the deposits in the reserve and central reserve banks are loaned to persons and concerns engaged in commercial as distinguished from those engaged in speculative schemes.

Seventh. To ascertain the facts in regard to the control and use of the funds and resources of the principal life insurance companies, and whether or not they are so manipulated as to deprive the policy holders of a large part of the profits justly due them, and whether the management of these companies are or are not practically in the hands of a small group of speculators who use them for selfish purposes and in the interest of the Money Trust.

Eighth. To ascertain, so far as practical, the facts in regard to the loaning of surplus funds by country banks and the banks of the smaller cities, and what proportion of such funds are diverted from the localities of their origin in loaning to borrowers in other localities, and the effect of such diversion on the necessities of the local communities, and also the general character of the business in which the funds so loaned are used.

Ninth. To ascertain, as near as practical, how much cash is tied up in what are termed fixed reserves in (a) country banks; (b) reserve banks; (c) in the banks of the three central reserve cities, separating each of the latter, and from that determine, as near as practical, the working margin practical for business operation and particularly its holding, and find separately if the country banks and reserve banks generally keep larger deposits in other banks than are necessary for their current exchange, and if the interest paid by banks to each other influence the amount of such balance and to what extent.

Tenth. To ascertain whether the stockholders in the larger banks in New York, Chicago, and other large cities, or the banks themselves, or their controlling directors, directly or indirectly, have been using the funds on deposit with them for the purpose of buying and selling stocks and other securities for the purpose of manipulation on the stock market or upon the New York stock market, produce markets, or other exchanges.

Eleventh. Find the facts concerning and the inspiration for the formation and organization of the First Trust & Security Co. by the First National Bank of Chicago, Ill.

Twelfth. Find the facts concerning and the inspiration for the formation and organization of the First Bank Security Co. by the First National Bank of New York City.

Thirteenth. Find the facts concerning and the inspiration for the formation and organization of the National City Security Co. by the National City Bank of New York City.

Fourteenth. Find the facts concerning the flotation of the Amalgamated Copper Co. through the National City Bank of New York City.

Fifteenth. Find the facts concerning the speculative operations in the shares of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Reading Railroad Co. by and through those in control of the First National Bank of New York City.

Sixteenth. Find the facts concerning the speculative powers operating in the past in the shares of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co., in New York City, exercised by and through those in control of the Hanover National Bank of New York City.

Seventeenth. Find the facts concerning the speculation and manipulation of the shares of any and all industries and railroad corporations by or through any national-banking interests in the United States, or those in control or the directors of said banks.

Eighteenth. Find the amount, as far as practical, of the loans made by these New York City banks at various times, secured by stocks traded in on the New York Stock Exchange, and the reasonable value of these securities so deposited as collateral for such loans over and above the amounts so loaned.

Nineteenth. Find the amounts of corporation deposits in these banks or elsewhere, under the control of those in control of these banks, and find whether the persons in control of such banks in the past have called loans for the purpose of strengthening money rates and in supporting the stock market or have offered money on stocks traded in on the exchange at radically different rates from those which have been charged to commercial customers.

Twentieth. Find why it is that money is frequently easily procurable on loans from the larger banking institutions at low rates of interest for the purpose of Wall Street speculation while it is difficult for merchants and business men throughout the country to discount their paper with such institutions for less than the legal rate and at times practically impossible to discount their paper at all.

Twenty-first. Find why it is that at the present time it is difficult and almost impossible for those engaged in a new industrial enterprise to procure the necessary capital when money is easily procurable for the purpose of buying the shares and securities of industrial and railroad corporations controlled by the stockholders and parties interested in these larger banking institutions.

Twenty-second. Find whether said banks have at times in the past allowed their cash reserves to sink below the legal requirements of deposits and if at other times they have gathered in extraordinarily high percentage of reserves, and find the relation between the aggregate of stocks carried in the loans of said banks at such times.

That the committee shall be authorized and if required by the House shall report on any part of its investigations before making its final report.

Later Mr. HENRY of Texas introduced a resolution seeking still wider scope to the inquiry.

What must the spirit of unrest, to which Judge Gary referred, answer to the evasion of true responsibility that the House seeks by turning this investigation over to the friends of the system?

In my presentation of the reasons for the investigation before the Rules Committee I dwelt upon the different divisions of the subject at considerable length. I quote the following from my speech before that committee:

CONTROL OF MONEY AND CREDITS.

COMMITTEE ON RULES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1911.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, the committee has been called to hear Mr. LINDBERGH in reference to House resolution 314, in regard to the Money Trust. If you are ready, Mr. LINDBERGH, you may proceed.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I see you consider that House resolution 314 is the resolution that is under consideration. I was just going to ask that that be substituted for the other one.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the one we have before the committee this morning.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Credits and debits, balanced by a small fraction of honest money, might be used as an equitable measure by which producers would be paid and consumers charged on the products and services of commerce. Unfortunately, however, a few speculators have wedged in between the producers and consumers, and operate and now principally control the system of credits and debits, and through it enough of the money so that these speculators control the commodities by paying the producers the least and charging the consumers the most they can stand. Under that arrangement present property and financial management conflicts with human rights and hinders common success.

Our financial system is false and a huge burden on the people. The money kings know that the people are sweating under it, and since there are some rather loose points about it, the money kings wish, through the demand of the people for a change, to manage it in the interest of Wall Street, and have proposed the Aldrich plan and are industriously trying to make the public favor that plan.

We know there is going to be a change in the banking and money laws, and, as the people's servants, we have a responsibility for which we should be in every way prepared.

I have alleged that there is a Money Trust. The proposed Aldrich plan is a scheme in the interest of the trust. There is a Money Trust. It is not in the form of the steel, the oil, the tobacco, the railways, and the other common trusts. It is maintained and governed by entirely different methods. It is father of the others, but unlike. The Government prosecutes other trusts, and it specifically and systematically supports the Money and Credit Trust. The Government creates by indirectness what it seeks to destroy by direction.

American intelligence justifies a study of finances from a rational view. In this day of general business knowledge we need not speak in theory or in vague terms of philosophy and law about business matters that are practically within daily observation. It is enough to make a true statement of the facts and of how the system operates, pointing out the errors and suggesting remedies.

Everybody is concerned in this, and to get an honest, equitable plan through Congress, with the Money Trust opposing it, requires determinative public support. That can not be secured to any specific end until the public knows what causes the troubles and how to remedy them. I proposed investigation for that purpose.

In my plea for this you will not expect me to present all the facts that would be brought out by it. If I did that, the investigation would be unnecessary. All I shall attempt now is to show the purpose and scope of the inquiry and that it is reasonably probable that information may be obtained that will be of value in working out a remedy for evils known to exist.

Money, and especially credit, is controlled principally through the banking system. I shall begin by describing some practices in that system and follow up to where the trust control has become effective. When I speak of national banks, practically it includes State banks, for there is little difference in the practical results of their business, and remedial legislation should comprehend all banking business.

Almost anyone who can impress the citizens of a locality with confidence can start a bank. It is not uncommon for strangers with letters of introduction, easily obtainable, to go into towns or cities, introduce themselves to business men, and start banks. It is often done by persons of little responsibility. Ten such or any greater number, so far as the law is concerned, might associate to start banks in as many towns. Preliminary visits are made to secure the good will of the citizens from whom deposits are expected. To a few a little stock is sold to qualify them for local directors. Those who originate the plan subscribe for the stock not taken by local people. The local manager, usually the president or cashier, is ordinarily made the largest stockholder in that place. That impresses the community with his financial responsibility.

Banks may be started by paying one-half the stock in cash. The other half may be paid by installments. Permission to start must be obtained from the Comptroller of the Currency. That is a mere matter of form.

I stated that banks can be started by paying one-half the stock in cash, but that is often a mere matter of form, for the stockholders choose their own directors and officers and may turn around and borrow the cash and deposit their notes instead. Sometimes the notes are used in the first place. Ten persons may borrow enough to pay in the entire capital. The capital would then be represented by their notes. They would require enough cash to pay expenses of organizing and buying the required United States bonds on which to base circulation, and so forth. The parties might be insolvent and their notes worthless.

Mr. GARRETT. Just there, Mr. LINDBERGH, do you not think that is a pretty strong statement?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No; it is absolutely true. I know of cases where that thing has occurred, and there is nothing in the law that prevents it from occurring, because the parties themselves who organize banks are often left to themselves. It is not always that an examiner is sent to inspect the conditions preliminary to the bank starting business.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the bank examiner go and find out if the proper amount of money and security has been put up before the bank can be authorized to open?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Not always.

Mr. FOSTER. You are wrong about that, certainly.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I have no doubt you have had experiences yourself where the Comptroller of the Currency writes and asks you, as Congressman, what you know about these parties. They do make inquiry. I know of cases where banks have been organized without any actual inspection being made before they begin business. It has been done often.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you think it is done now?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes, sir; it is done yet. One was recently organized in my district, by perfectly responsible parties, but there was no inspector who went there to see what they were doing. The bank began business before an inspection was made.

Mr. GARRETT. I have had that experience of which you speak.

Mr. FOSTER. Where no inspector goes?

Mr. GARRETT. No; I do not mean that exactly. But I have had the experience of having a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency asking about men who are organizing banks.

Mr. FOSTER. That is always done. They inquire of you as to the character and responsibility of the people proposing to organize a national bank. But they do not take your word for any security. They send an examiner to examine into the bank—that is, as to the securities, and so forth—and the money that is put up for the capital stock. I never knew of a case where they did not do that.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I have no doubt they often do it.

Mr. FOSTER. They always do it in the country in which I live, and I have had considerable to do with the organization of several banks, and one in which I was interested myself. I know that that bank could not be opened until the examiner went there and examined into its securities, to see that the proper amount of capital had been put up in that bank. If the condition you speak of is going on in the organization of national banks, it seems to me it is a violation of law.

Mr. LINDBERGH. It is not a violation, technically, of the law, after they have organized.

I quote as part answer from page 18 of the Report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1910:

"Under section 5133 of the Revised Statutes the organization of national banking associations by any number of persons, not less than five, is authorized. This section provides that the incorporators shall enter into articles of association specifying in general terms the object for which the association is formed and a copy thereof forwarded to the comptroller and preserved in his office. The following section provides for the execution of an organization certificate by those who have entered into articles of association. This certificate is required to be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or a notary public and transmitted to the comptroller. When these documents have been filed with the comptroller the association becomes a body corporate, but with powers limited to transaction of business incidental to organization until the issuance of the comptroller's certificate authorizing the association to begin the business of banking. The law further requires the collection and certification of payment of at least 50 per cent of the authorized capital stock and the deposit of a specified amount of the United States registered interest-bearing bonds, and authorizes an examination for the purpose of determining the amount of money paid in on account of capital stock and whether all requirements of law in relation to organization have been met.

"As the law, however, specifically confers upon the comptroller discretion with respect to approval of the name selected for an association, the course of procedure under the established rules of the office is to require the submission of a formal application for authority to organize an association wherein is stated the title desired, location of the bank, the capital stock, the signatures of the applicants given, accompanied by advice in regard to the business and financial standing of the applicants, number of shares to be subscribed for, and the previous banking experience, if any, of the applicants. Indorsements are required with respect to the character and standing of the applicants, the population of the place at which it is proposed to organize the bank, and an expression of opinion with respect to prospects of success of the association if chartered and conservatively managed.

"Prior to the disposition of an application a copy thereof is sent to the national-bank examiner, to the Member of Congress for the district in which the bank is to be located, and to the superintendent of the State banking department, with request for information with respect to the character and standing of the applicants, the existing demand for a bank at the locality, and an expression of opinion as to whether success is probable.

"Applications for authority to convert State banks into national banking associations are made by the directors, and each case of this character is investigated for the purpose of determining whether the bank has been conducted in conformity with law, its measure of success, and also as to the character of its assets and general business.

"In view of the fact that bank stock is generally regarded as a very desirable investment, the organization of banks, both national and State, has been very active during recent years, and it has been shown to be evident to both Federal and State authorities that many banking institutions are organized, or organization attempted, without giving due consideration to their demand or their prospects of success. As far as possible the State authorities are now acting in harmony with the comptroller in the upbuilding of banking conditions by preventing the organization of banks where the demand therefor is not apparent or where organization is attempted by those whose character and standing are questionable."

It will be seen that certification of payment of at least 50 per cent of the capital is required, but that is by the incorporators and it does not say in cash. The comptroller is authorized to cause an examination to be made, but is not required to do so. There is, as I understand, more care in this now than formerly. The comptroller's report from which I quote shows that.

Mr. FOSTER. The law requires that they must go and examine the securities and the capital before the bank can be opened. But what is done after it is opened, and the bank examiner goes away, is another thing. They might pull down the money and put up the securities. I agree with you on that, that that might be done.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is often done.

Since I made the above statements the Comptroller of the Currency, in his report to Congress, on page 82, with reference to the same subject matter, states:

The following is a copy of the instructions to examiners in connection with investigations of this character:

"It has been for some time past the practice of this office to refer to national-bank examiners all applications received for the organization of national banks, with the request that they furnish such information as they were able to obtain in regard to the applicants and the existing conditions in the locality where it was proposed to organize the bank.

"As this office has no appropriation from which you could be paid for making a personal investigation, it has been necessary for you to get such information as you could by correspondence, and this has been in many instances entirely unsatisfactory. Hereafter, in all cases where the office is in doubt as to the propriety of approving an application, the examiner of that particular district will be asked to go to the place and make a careful investigation, for which he will be allowed $25 a day and hotel and travelling expenses, to be paid by the applicants.

"The reason for this change is that for many years the bank examiners have been making investigations and submitting reports on applications for charters for national banks without receiving any compensation therefor; and in many instances it is impossible for an examiner to make a recommendation to the comptroller which carries any weight as to whether a bank should be established in a certain community or not when, in all probability, he has not been in the place and knows nothing of local conditions nor of the people interested in the proposed bank, nor of the necessity for one. The information which he would gather and submit by correspondence is nothing more or less than what the comptroller already has on file."

Reverting to my statement, so far as the law is concerned, there might be enough other parties, and all worthless, so that between them they could borrow not only the capital but the deposits as well, except the reserve. Even the greater part of the reserve, in a roundabout way, could be borrowed by the same associates if a reserve and a central reserve bank were included in the scheme, and much of the big business of the country has been started on a basis of credit rather than capital. I am not objecting to credit, for under a proper system it would be good, but the kind of credits I have described are special privileges.

You may ask, What are the bank examiners doing if banks can be filled with paper originally worthless?

Since I made the speech before the Rules Committee, from which I am now quoting, the following statement appeared in the press on June 6, 1912. It is a further illustration. I quote from the New York Times:

"CONSPIRACY CHARGES IN BOROUGH BANK PROBE—EXAMINER MAHONEY EXPECTS THAT THE DEVELOPMENTS WILL WARRANT THEM—BASED ON DUMMY NOTES—THE SIGNER OF ONE OF THEM GIVES HIS OWN IDEA OF HIS RESPONSIBILITY.

"Sufficient evidence on which to base charges of conspiracy against the so-called looters of the defunct Borough Bank of Brooklyn will have been secured in a few more days if the expectations of the investigators, as intimated at the close of the session yesterday, are realized. Special Examiner Mahoney believes that the use of dummy notes for securing loans constitutes conspiracy, and he told one of the witnesses as much. This witness—one of the three Clarendon Hotel employees who had sent regrets on Wednesday—didn't seem particularly perturbed by the information, and in a response to a question he remarked that he thought Mr. Hill was able to 'take care' of him.

"He referred to John J. Hill, proprietor of the Clarendon Hotel, one of those who were connected with the small real-estate concerns that had borrowed from the defunct bank. Mr. Hill had the witness, Chester H. Roods, and two other employees of the hotel sign notes that were discounted afterwards by the Borough Bank. Roods said that he had signed two notes at Hill's command without knowing what they were for.

"Hill would simply call me up to his office," Roods testified, "and say, 'Sign this.' I always did. He didn't think it was wrong to take money out of the bank on his credit. If anyone could get money out of the bank on my name the bank must have been crazy," he said.

"Roods had never got any of the money, he said. The notes he signed were for $15,000 and $25,000. At the time of the transaction he was a clerk in the steward's department of the hotel at a salary of $55 a month. He said he also was a director in one of the real-estate companies in which Mr. Hill was interested, and he got a $5 bill from John W. Walker, of the John W. Walker Co., when he resigned from the directorate. That, he said, was all he ever got for lending himself to the financial convenience of others. He scouted the suggestion that Mr. Hill had taken an unfair advantage of him, and it was at this point that he expressed confidence in Mr. Hill's ability to 'take care' of him.

"His reason for staying away from the session on Wednesday was his employer's reason, he said. Mr. Hill had objected to three of his employees being called away from the hotel on the same day and had dictated the three notes, according to Roods, in which each regretted his inability to attend. A warrant for one of the three was obtained from Supreme Court Justice Carr, but the sheriff was not compelled to serve it yesterday, as all three of the men—Roods, A. J. Wegge, and O. P. Warlick—arrived at the borough hall before the session began.

"Roods was followed by Warren E. Diefendorf, a director, who professed ignorance of the loans made by the bank to irresponsible individuals. Russell Randolph, formerly employed by Robert W. Hall, testified that he had signed many notes for his old employer without deriving much personal profit.

"The investigation will be resumed on Monday forenoon."

To give the bank examiners time to learn the value of bank assets would require an examiner for each bank, or at least one should be limited to a very few. A tabulation of the assets and a special check-up system to detect the kiting of notes between stockholders would be necessary. It would require individual examiners, district examiners, and a general examiner's department to check up the whole system. That would be the only way to get a check on the approximate value of bank assets consisting of unsecured paper.

It is quite common for examiners to enter banks with near a million dollars assets, consisting of hundreds and sometimes thousands of notes, list their amounts, subtract payments, count the cash, and examine the books all in a day. Such examinations do not go to the responsibility of the makers of the bank's notes. Ordinarily these examinations practically deal with figures only. With the limited time given to examiners, intelligent though they are, they can not determine the actual reliability of the banks they examine. To a large extent they rely upon their intuitive and perceptive qualities of observation.

I do not confine my statement on note kiting to make bank assets to small banks. It can be shown that some large financial institutions have based a part of their capital on the kiting of notes. I quote from a letter, merely as illustrative of the way it is done. I omit parts of the letter, as the writer is scared of harm being done him if the interests find him out, but the Committee on Rules may see the letter. The chairman has seen it.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., July 28, 1911.

HON. C. A. LINDBERGH.

DEAR SIR:

Prudential Insurance Co. officials, desiring to control the public utilities of the State to their personal profit, not having the funds to purchase such control, devised the plan of increasing the stock of the Fidelity Trust Co., of Newark, some $6,000,000 and have the Prudential purchase it, as well as have the Fidelity purchase from the Prudential controlling owners the same amount of Prudential stock, so the control would be mutual and self-perpetuating, without financial interest on the part of the management. This plan was enjoined by participating policy holders, Neubauer v. Prudential Insurance Co., and the plaintiff's counsel adjourning the case, by mutual consent, sine die. * * *

The only string was that if they, the Prudential, was to attempt to carry out the same deal, that they would give 30 days' notice. In face of this they gave no notice, and have carried out, in effect, the same deal by slightly reducing the number of shares purchased, so as to conform in letter but not the spirit of the court order.

Since that time the Prudential makes their brags they do not hold "public-service corporation" securities. Now, the Equitable Life crowd accommodates them when it is necessary to hold an examination, and likewise the Prudential similarly accommodate the Equitable officers in their own control of securities.

To get at the bottom of the tobacco, steel, trolley, electric railroad, and banking combination you must get at the books of the insurance companies and examine the life insurance presidents, members of the Life Insurance Presidents' Association; there lies the secret of control. Now they are able to juggle around the loans and investments from one State's companies to another State's companies to accommodate the requirements of not being "found with the goods."

Respectfully,

I do not claim that banks generally are organized by the note-kiting system, but banks can be, and many are and have been. Even dummy notes are sometimes used. The extent to which these practices have been resorted to, directly and indirectly, is much greater than is realized. The general public has never realized that it is done at all.

The law providing for bank capital has not protected depositors. The bankers themselves have done that, and the public has been charged to make it up. Bankers are under the necessity of protecting themselves from failure, and it is due to their diligence and their self-interest that there has been so little loss to depositors, but lest I should give some of them too much credit, I again call attention to the fact that many banks are originally started and capitalized on paper originally worthless, but the toll charge to the public is so great that the public makes the paper finally good, and the careful, businesslike banker, even though he often starts insolvent, becomes rich and financially responsible. In other words, the business charges the public so much that failure, generally speaking, is visited on the careless and incompetent only.

I have thus defined the practical effect of the law in providing capital in the organization of banks. It is impossible, of course, to determine how many banks started on paper originally worthless, or, in other words, without actual capital, but as most banks so started have become financially safe and sound by reason of accumulating profits, no great good would come from a knowledge of which of existing solvent banks were originally weak. I am not proposing an investigation for that purpose. It would be remiss in me, however, if I neglected to direct attention to the weakness of the capitalization of the banking system if there was pulled out from under it the large toll the public pays in its support. These facts should be known when it comes to constructing a better system, and instead of giving a special privilege to the banks a community advantage should be given to the people.

My main purpose is to show that the banks are the first step and the principal arteries through which the Money Trust is constructed, not that the banks are a part of the trust. Only a few of them are in the trust, but the money is taken by the people to the banks and the trust secures the money from the banks. It makes no difference that the people own a large part of the money. In fact, that is an advantage to the Money Trust as long as it controls its use. However, to hereafter have a still greater control, it now proposes through the Aldrich plan to get the money of the United States in addition to making as much as it needs of its own money.

After a bank is organized and ready to do business the securing of deposits is the important thing. Banks can not succeed without. Neither can the trusts. It is because of getting the reserve deposits that the Money Trust has for many years been in control. It is because of being able to borrow the deposits that speculators are exploiting the people to an illimitable extent. That is the initiative of what gives the Money Trust power to create other trusts.

The pretense of being able to control the trusts by prosecution and to dissolve and reorganize them into their original elements to reduce the cost of living while the Money Trust controls the Government would be too ridiculous to mention were it not for the fact that it diverts public attention from the real causes of our troubles.

The dissolution of the trusts and the reorganization of each into several is on a plan of reducing the system from one of grand or wholesale larceny to several petty-larceny trusts, aggregating greater stealings from the people than if the grand-larceny trust cooperative plan should continue.

Since I made that statement some facts regarding the subject have developed. I quote an article from the New York Journal of Commerce, as follows:

HAS DISSOLUTION RAISED OIL PRICES?—IS INCREASE DUE TO GREATER COSTS OR RETALIATION?—ADVANCES IN CRUDE OILS AVERAGE 3 TO 5 CENTS PER BARREL—EXPORTS ALSO SERIOUSLY AFFECTED—OFFICIALS REFUSE TO EXPLAIN—OIL IMPORTS IN 1911 EXCEED THE PREVIOUS RECORDS.

Recent developments in the prices of both crude and refined oils, as well as local deliveries of petroleum, point with considerable emphasis to entirely new conditions in the oil trade at the present time, as compared with the latter part of last year in the period immediately preceding the date of the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. into 33 companies. In this connection it is pointed out that for the greater part of 1911, during the existence of the so-called Oil Trust, prices of crude and refined oils maintained an average balance which the present price movement does not hold.

The date set by the courts for the final dissolution of the Oil Trust was reached on December 21 last. Previous to that date oil prices had been suffering from periodic slumps. Five days after the dissolution, on December 26, the first upward price movement was witnessed, with advances averaging from 3 to 5 cents per barrel on three of the principal crude-oil productions formerly controlled by the Standard Oil Co., the Pennsylvania Oil Co., Kansas and Oklahoma, Ragland, and Somerset grades—from that time up to last Wednesday, at which time further advances were made, averaging 3 cents per barrel on Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana crude oils. Further strength was given to the upward movement in prices on the same day of this week, when there was an advance of 15 points in both "Standard white" and "water white" refined oils for export; at the same time there was an advance of one-half cent per gallon on all grades of naphtha, gasoline, and benzine for export.

While the many other grades of crude oils have yet to realize an advance in price, it is held by experts that such an advance generally is not improbable. The upward trend has led to considerable conjecture by the trade as well as the independent oil concerns. Investigation at the local offices of the various companies formerly comprising the Standard Oil Co., as to explanations for the higher prices met with no success, the various officials exhibiting great reluctance to discuss the situation. No response was given to queries as to whether the segregation of the companies had resulted in a higher cost of maintenance and operation which in turn had influenced a rise in prices of both crude and refined oils. The continuous rise and the latest confirmation of the movement, which was given yesterday when the Pratt Oil Co., another subsidiary of the former Oil Trust, announced that the price of oil to the consumer was raised from 8 to 9 cents a gallon, has led to the question of whether the rise is substantially corroborated by the new conditions or are the result of a desire on the part of oil interests to retaliate against the execution of dissolution plans. In this connection the question is also raised as to whether the higher prices of oil are the result of natural conditions which have now arisen or are part of a concerted movement among the oil producers and distributors of the country.

Another advance of 1 cent per gallon on refined local oil deliveries in barrel lots for jobbers and the same rise for tank-wagon delivery were introduced yesterday. The former is now at 10½ cents and the latter at 7 cents.

Jobbers throughout the country are seriously affected by the advance of one-half cent per gallon on naphtha, gasoline, and benzine, many having only recently taken on large orders under the lower quotations, which were considered steady. In many instances they have attempted to live up to their acceptances and still make a profit by demanding that the subsidiary companies "cover them up" on such orders; in most of these instances they have been compelled to refuse the orders on the old basis.

And only lately we find the following press statement, which is true:

Standard Oil attracted attention chiefly as an exhibit of the results of trust busting. In 1901 the stock sold at $43, but not until to-day did it approach that price again. In the meantime it has been down to 390, and since the Supreme Court's decision against it was handed down it has sold at 585. Insiders have made fortunes as a result of the splitting up of the concern. They alone have known which of the subsidiaries were valuable. They have refused to make any public statement of assets and have gone on quietly picking up the valuable ones until now they seem to have rounded up the available supply.

GAIN BY HOLDING ON.

But those Standard Oil shareholders who held fast to all they received have gained along with the insiders, for the record high price is offered for the old stock plus all its subsidiaries. The warning issued in this column at the time of the difference regarding the probable market action that would be taken by insiders, and the suggestion that none of the subsidiary interests be disposed of, has been justified by events.

The same thing will happen in Steel, and the insiders are fortunate in having to face dissolution. The courts should compel the subsidiary concerns of companies split up to make complete statements of operations from organization to the date of dissolution, so that the ordinary shareholders may know what they are getting. The Standard Oil Co. refuse to make such statements.

Positive announcement from Washington in the afternoon that the Government would mobilize troops on the Mexican border again was no surprise. The action has been expected for weeks, and the only surprise is at the delay.

Is it not rather strange that the people's alleged friend prosecutors of the trusts do not understand that the trusts are showing the value of the cooperation as an economic principle? The value of that plan is rather worth preserving in some form for the people, so they may get the products of their labor through economic cooperation. If we correct the money and credit system it will be easy to regulate the trusts. A new system will come about by economic evolution, forced by common necessity.

All this talk about the trust problem being adjusted in the first instance through special attorneys and the courts is a farce. The proper adjustment will have to come through the people in Congress. The money and credit system is properly and logically the first great problem requiring correction. Until that is done this side talk about trust busting is mockery.

A greater farce than the suit against the Standard Oil Co. is not to be found, unless it is the final wind-up of the Tobacco Trust case. The decree, which is always the vital part of a case, is futile. On page 191 of One hundred and seventy-third Federal Reporter the court finds:

"The distribution of the stock among the various defendants ratably among the shareholders of the Standard Oil Co., and the conveyance of the physical property and business of the defendants to one of their number, to perpetuate the unlawful monopoly, must be and is prohibited by the decree herein."

The above is the language of the court in its opinion, but by a mystery, that to the public may well-nigh seem incomprehensible with such eminent and well-paid counsel for the Government, the wind-up in that, like the Tobacco Trust case, came to naught for notice that the decree found in the same report, section 5, page 199, practically reversed the finding. The decree relating to that part reads:

"But the defendants are not prohibited by this decree from distributing ratably to the shareholders of the principal company the shares to which they are equitably entitled in the stocks of the defendant corporations that are parties to the combination."

The decree in practical effect is the opposite of the finding. On that case and its affirmance by the Supreme Court the true effect of the decree was never mentioned in the press nor by the trust busters. The trust busters were extolled for claiming to have done what the decree expressly and most emphatically shows they did not do. And it is the decree that counts. I predicted the effect of that decree. My prediction came true. A few days since, at 26 Broadway, the Standard Oil did distribute ratably among its shareholders. I do not claim any prophetic sight, but it was all very plain on the decree, and that is why I stated in a speech in the House, June 13 last, the following:

"It may be noted that the trusts are adjusting to the Supreme Court decisions under the Sherman Antitrust Act. The people are paying the expenses of the litigation in order that the trusts may know where they stand. Some of them are dissolved by decree, but the decrees are mere form, for the trusts carry on the work they organized for, regardless of that fact. What is the difference if they accomplish their purpose by a community of interest or under the management of the corporation? (Page 1996, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong.)"

Now, the Standard Oil and the Tobacco Trusts are legalized trusts. The Government paid the costs to make them so, and their stocks have since been booming on Wall Street.

For the reserve requirements national banks are divided into three classes. The smaller towns and country districts are ostensibly required to keep 15 per cent of their deposits in reserve; the reserve cities, ostensibly 25 per cent; and the central reserve cities—New York, Chicago, and St. Louis—25 per cent.

The money kings were early in the game and conceived the idea that they would use as much as possible of the reserves and deposits themselves, so that in addition to the direct deposits made in the large cities they provided that the banks in country districts and the towns of least influence need hold only 6 per cent of their deposits in cash and that 9 per cent could be kept in reserve and in central reserve cities, where the money kings, financiers, and speculators reside, and could get more than three-quarters of it for speculation.

New York had the par excellence of financiers and speculators, so it played over all the others, but for political reasons included Chicago and St. Louis; and so the three cities are exclusive money centers in which to concentrate the cash belongings of the country folks and of small depositors in the cities, there to be used to exploit them and the general public. In plain language, the largest banks in the three cities, and more especially New York, are the promoters for the trusts.

New York, Chicago, and St. Louis are authorized to hold all deposits except 6 per cent of the country banks and 12½ per cent of the reserve banks. It is not defined in those terms by law, for the law speaks of reserves; but there is no limitation, except that required in cash in vaults, to any bank sending all its deposits to reserve and central reserve banks. As a matter of fact, they do keep much of their deposits in these banks.

The system of permitting and encouraging banks to maintain a part of their reserve in other banks, and most of their deposits if they choose, and allowing the latter to pay 2 per cent interest—that is common—and to loan 75 per cent of it, and a still greater amount when it passes by the indirect route from nonreserve to reserve and then to central reserve banks, is a fraud on depositors, and may be termed the seed on which the Money Trust is grown and maintained. Outside of what is required for current exchange, the deposits of banks with each other breeds speculators, a Money Trust, and panics.

The 9 per cent of the reserves in one class of banks and the 12½ per cent in another, that may be kept in central reserve banks, may not, on first expression, seem sufficient to be the basis for a Money Trust. A trust controlling in the first instance only those amounts would not look formidable. These amounts, however, are only the seed, represented by the same principle as a farmer sowing 1 bushel of oats expecting to harvest 20, with the difference that the farmer has to reckon with the uncertainty of the season, while the trust has a certainty in its harvests.

Nonreserve banks must keep 6 per cent of their deposits in cash, but may deposit the balance of the 15 per cent, and any greater amount of the deposits, even to all, in approved reserve or central reserve banks. Having on hand the legal reserve, banks may carry balances in any other banks.

The district I represent is agricultural, and its bankers are mostly conservative and free from speculation. But, notwithstanding, they have had to follow the law of necessity created by our banking system. And to show what I mean by that statement I shall insert in my remarks, if I have consent to do so, three letters from banks as examples of the units from which the Money Trust gets its support, and that though the banks do not intend or desire to support the trust:

LETTER NO. 1.
(Capital, $500,000.)

GERMAN-AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK,
Little Falls, Minn., November 17, 1911.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 11th instant, asking some facts regarding our loans, in our report to the comptroller, under date of June 7, 1911, we reported:

	June 7, 1911.	Sept. 1, 1911.
Loans and discounts.....	$401,643	$421,679
Lawful money reserve.....	44,090	39,420
With approved reserve agents.....	103,020	48,208
Other national banks.....	2,154	643

Of the $400,000 loans, $300,000 is an average amount of outside paper, commonly known as commercial paper, and $100,000 is local paper. We have never been able to loan more than this locally for commercial purposes, but we could put out, say, $100,000 to $200,000 on good real-estate loans—farm loans—if we were permitted.

We have at present over $100,000 in savings deposits and $275,000 in time deposits in this bank, which amounts do not fluctuate very much from month to month the year round, and in my opinion 50 per cent of this could be safely invested in farm loans and be a great benefit to this county at large, and neighboring counties also.

In a recent report to the comptroller we recommended that national banks be permitted to use 25 per cent of commercial deposits and 50 per cent of time deposits for farm loans.

In times of panic it is almost impossible to realize quickly on commercial paper, especially the large amounts, but a good farm loan can always be disposed of either for cash or in exchange for credit. A bank holding good farm loans could, in case of a panic, turn over any of them to depositors in lieu of cash wanted and the party who receives it would be perfectly satisfied provided he knew there was good land back of it. I have heard of several instances of this being done, and I myself have heard people give excuses for taking out money in the bank in times of panic "to buy land where it is safe."

We therefore are very much in favor of a law permitting national banks to loan on farm property, and you are at liberty to use this letter in any way you see fit to further this end.

Yours, respectfully,

E. J. RICHIE, Cashier.
JOHN WETZEL, Vice President.

I see published for the same bank a statement, and the amount due from approved reserve agents to that bank on December 5 was $103,171.04. That fact applying to that and all other banks is an important consideration in connection with this whole question, because I expect to show that it is the reserves that we have in this banking system that give the Money Trust the control of the finances of this country, and the secret of their control rests principally in that the most of the reserves and a large part of the deposits are kept in the big banks that the trust controls. You will notice by the bank's statement in letter No. 1 that they have loaned out in the community from which they receive their deposits about $100,000; they have loaned out to parties who are nonresidents, who live in distant places and with whom they have no direct business, about $300,000; or, in other words, three-fourths of the deposits in that bank. That is another item that the public in general knows little about, that these country banks are obliged to take the deposits that are placed with them by the people who reside in the community in which they are doing business and loan them to distant borrowers, where the money does not serve the community in which it was presumably earned.

Mr. GARRETT. Why is that? Why are they compelled to do that?

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is because our national banking laws, and our banking laws in general, do not give the country banks an opportunity to invest in those enterprises that are going on in their own midst. They can not loan to a farmer because usually farmers require long-time loans, and yet those banks are taking time deposits. The time deposits of this bank writing letter No. 1 here amount, I believe, to about $300,000. That bank should be given the opportunity of loaning on securities part of its deposits which are made on time. The deposits which are there for checking in the usual way should be liquid, liquid all the time, so as to carry on the commerce of the country. There is a distinction between the two that we have to keep in mind.

Mr. LENROOT. Are not time deposits subject to call at any time?

Mr. LINDBERGH. They are subject to call.

Mr. FOSTER. The same as any other deposits, and they simply lose the interest—that is all?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; they simply lose the interest.

Mr. WILSON. Is there any bank that, if all the depositors made a demand for their deposits at the same time, could pay up?

Mr. LINDBERGH. There is not. It would be a bad bank for the community to keep its condition such that it could pay up instantly, unless it got help from the outside.

Mr. WILSON. I know; but they have only received the deposit, have they not, of these particular depositors?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes. They received them to be handled in the usual safe way. A bank that would receive deposits and leave them in the vaults would be a detriment to the community in which it did business.

Mr. WILSON. There is no question about that.

Mr. FOSTER. You understand that these foreign loans you speak of are many times commercial paper, sent out by large corporations that float paper at certain times. Is that what you mean by that—foreign loans?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes, that is what I mean by foreign loans.

Mr. FOSTER. You speak, for instance, of farmers. Is it your idea, then, that there ought to be a change in the national banking law permitting them to loan on long-time paper?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes, a certain amount of their time deposits.

Mr. FOSTER. How long a time?

Mr. LINDBERGH. At least a year.

Mr. DENVER. Do you mean by that they should be allowed to take mortgage loans?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mortgage loans. Of course, the time is a mere matter of detail. I would not have it too long a time, understand.

Mr. FOSTER. What is your idea—that the amount of loans they could make is to be governed not in limited amount?

Mr. LINDBERGH. In that way? Yes; limited to a certain per cent of their deposits.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. LINDBERGH. There should be a limit to it, such as experience shows would be safe. I have letters from probably 100 bankers, and they to a unit agree that it would be better for the banking business, and better for the communities in which they are doing business, if they were permitted to use a certain per cent of time deposits to make loans on securities and reasonable time on farms.

Mr. FOSTER. You confuse time deposits there, I think, because they are all deposits subject to call.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I understand; but the practical effect is time, and it is its practical effect that I consider in these matters.

Mr. FOSTER. They are all subject to be withdrawn at any time.

Mr. LINDBERGH. They are all subject to be withdrawn at any time, and this bank letter No. 1 that I have in the notes particularly defines the conditions with reference to those. The bankers generally, who have written to me, say they can convert their mortgage loans into cash quicker than they can convert the commercial paper; and that is my experience, too, in what I have observed. I have observed the operation of that business to a considerable extent. Depositors not needing to use their money would be glad in times of panics to get safely secured paper.

Mr. LENROOT. The claim has been made a great many times that independent organizations have been able to do business independently only because of the opportunity to float their commercial loans through these banks outside of the great money centers; that if it was not for them the trusts and combinations, the New York financiers, would be able to bring them to time. I would like to hear what you have to say on that.

Mr. LINDBERGH. The first consideration of a bank, in the beginning of its business and throughout its continuance, should be to take care of the community from which it receives its deposits. I do not think anybody would question that. The people who are there doing business, whether it is farming or whatever it may be, should be taken care of by the natural business of that community. I think the banks should have the right, when they have taken care of their local demands, to go outside and buy commercial paper. I do not question that, and I think there is big force in the point that Mr. LENROOT makes, and they should have the opportunity when the circumstances of their own localities favor it or justify the investment of deposits in other localities.

I continue by quoting:

LETTER NO. 2.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
St. Cloud, Minn., November 17, 1911.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Answering your inquiry of the 11th relative to reserves in this bank at the time of the comptroller's call for statement of condition, we are pleased to advise you, as follows:

Cash reserves, June 7, 1911.....	$62,162.35
With approved agents, June 7, 1911.....	105,707.70
With other agents (not approved).....	6,580.16
Cash reserves, Sept. 1, 1911.....	73,825.15
With approved agents, Sept. 1, 1911.....	154,204.34
With other agents (not approved).....	7,317.95

Our belief is that the privilege of making loans by national banks in rural districts on farm mortgages (not city property) would prove beneficial to the bank and the community. National banks in reserve cities should not be so privileged.

The proportionate percentage to deposits should regulate the amount to be loaned by the banks, the small banks having the larger percentage. For instance, 10 per cent for us should be the outside. For smaller banks, with, say, $200,000 deposits, 25 per cent would be about right. This question of distribution or proportion is the one that will take the careful thought. The principle is right. It would save a lot of evasion of the present law, help the community, strengthen national banks in the minds of many depositors, and serve to keep funds in their own community.

With the privilege we would not have to buy any commercial paper to speak of, unless for temporary surplus funds.

You are at liberty to use the above as you see fit.

Respectfully,

W. W. SMITH, Cashier.

LETTER NO. 3.

(First National Bank of Sauk Center, Minn., capital $50,000.)

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to give you the information requested in yours of the 10th.

We believe that national banks should be permitted to make loans on unincumbered farm lands not to exceed 25 per cent of their interest-bearing certificates of deposit, provided the bank has capital, surplus, and undivided profits equaling their capital after deducting the amount they are carrying their real estate at. Many banks have nearly all of their investment as capital stock tied up in bank building, furniture, and fixtures, and said investment is not available in case it is required quickly to meet existing obligations. Our experience has taught us that a good, safe loan on farm land not otherwise incumbered comes as near being a liquid asset as any paper we are daily taking from the farmer with a signer or with chattel security. Of course this does not apply to the large city banks, for they take such securities that they can quickly realize on, provided funds are needed at once. Certain listed bonds are perhaps more easily converted into cash than real estate securities, but they are no better under ordinary conditions.

This is the statement you requested:

June 7, 1911, due from banks (reserve).....	$62,800
June 7, 1911, cash in bank.....	24,000
June 7, 1911, on deposit with United States Treasurer.....	2,500
Total.....	89,300

Sept. 1, 1911, due from banks (reserve).....	72,700
Sept. 1, 1911, cash in bank.....	22,000
Sept. 1, 1911, on deposit with United States Treasury.....	2,500
Total.....	97,200

I am glad you are taking this matter up, and I trust you may finally be successful in getting a bill passed that will help the people in the country towns.

C. M. SPRAGUE, President.

On June 7 the reserve in the three banks was: Cash, $130,253.35; with approved reserve banks, $271,527.70. On September 1 their cash reserve was $135,245.15; with approved reserve banks, $275,112.34. At the same time they had about $10,000 with banks not reserve agents. The latter is below the average of other banks answering, but the cash in banks and amount with reserve agents is a fair index to the banks generally as showing the relation of cash reserve to the reserve with reserve agents.

It will be seen that more than two-thirds of the reserves carried were held by the reserve agents. About 75 per cent of that, when held by reserve banks, and 87 per cent of it, when redeposited by the reserve in the central reserve banks, is available to the money trust. Practically the same conditions as prevail in my district prevail in all sections similarly situated.

All the banks that reported to me ask the privilege to loan on real estate, and firmly believe that proper real estate loans can be realized on more readily and are better in time of panic than commercial paper, especially better than that taken from speculators and others from the cities.

Since exhibiting letters from different bankers and since I made the speech from which I am quoting, the National Monetary Commission has taken my suggestion and amended their plan so as to permit nonreserve banks to loan upon real estate. Other amendments were also made in accordance with suggestions made by my arguments. But the main defects in their plan still remain.

It is well to bear in mind a distinction between money that is used as property—that is, a commodity—and money used as an agent of exchange. Money used as a commodity, like that deposited by wage earners, farmers, professional men, and others, who do not use the deposits in commercial transactions, should be treated in a different way in regard to their investment than commercial deposits that are subject to check in the ordinary way. The true purpose of money is its commercial use and all notes and accounts used in commerce should be liquid and at all times kept so. The deposits made on time certificates and the like should be loaned principally on securities, while deposits subject to the ordinary checking system, for commercial purposes, should only be loaned on short-time commercial paper. The accounts of the two classes of deposits should be separated so far as practical. Notice the statement in letter No. 1. You will see that the savings deposits and time certificates combined are a little in excess of paper held by the bank against makers from other localities. The deposits used to carry the $300,000 paper taken from remote districts should be loaned to farmers and others in the locality where the deposits originate. That would also give confidence to the savings and time depositors. The bank making that statement shows that the officers fully appreciate the justice of responding to the legitimate demands of the locality from which it gets deposits, and that is true of all banks doing business independent of the Money Trust.

I commend for the study of Members letter No. 1 as giving a true state of conditions in the country districts. The other letters are as good on the facts they cover, and the study of the three is the A, B, C on which we can, in one respect, base an amendment to the banking laws that will save the country districts especially from some of the evil effects of panics, and it would lessen speculation in the cities.

The deposits of banks in other banks—that is, with each other—is the first start for the Money Trust.

Probably no banker in my district has the slightest idea that he furnishes the seed from which the Money Trust has grown, but I shall prove that they and their fellow bankers there and elsewhere are doing that very thing.

The CHAIRMAN. On that point, then, you do not contend that the bankers throughout the country in the respective States and the bankers in these money centers are in agreement, and have organized a Money Trust?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No; they have not.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you do not think there is any conspiracy?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I do not think there is a conspiracy on the part of the banks in general. I think there are a few banks in New York that form the backbone to a real Money Trust.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand. I mean in general.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Oh, no; not in the least can the bankers in general be charged with deliberately maintaining a Money Trust.

Deposits are substantially the assets of the banks. They term them liabilities, but it is from these they principally make their loans and profits. The accounts are due to the depositors, but the banks use the deposits to make loans. Consistently, the most of them prefer to loan in the locality from which they get their deposits. That would bring local repetition of deposits.

Bankers generally are fair and accommodating in their business, as the business is done. But the banking laws make it impracticable for them to loan all their deposits in the localities of their origin. In large cities, where the money kings, gamblers, and speculators reside, it can be done. These are heavy borrowers from the banks and take all they can get.

Mr. LINROOT. Right there, for information. Are what are termed as commercial loans loans of this character, commercial paper by stock gamblers, and so on?

Mr. LINDBERGH. The country banks figure all short-time paper that they buy as commercial paper.

Mr. LINROOT. I mean, as a matter of practice, are they that character of paper, or are they the paper of the large business houses, like Wannamaker and Marshall Field?

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is the real, true commercial paper.

Mr. LINROOT. What is the fact? That is what I am asking for.

Mr. LINDBERGH. The fact is, they use all kinds of paper they buy as commercial paper, or short-time paper.

Mr. LINROOT. I mean what do they buy? What is the character of the paper they do actually buy?

Mr. LINDBERGH. They actually buy paper of the character of Wannamaker & Co. and other companies like that. A large part of the paper is made by companies of that character. But they get paper that is made by speculators—men of means, you know—who buy for a rise in the market. They are satisfied if they get good paper.

Mr. GARRETT. In regard to reserves, your country bank is required to retain 15 per cent?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Six per cent in its vaults.

Mr. GARRETT. Six per cent in its vaults, and 9 per cent of it they put in a reserve. Then the bank in which it places that reserve is required to retain only 25 per cent of that 9 per cent?

Mr. LINDBERGH. And if it is a reserve bank it may redeposit it in another reserve or central reserve bank.

Mr. GARRETT. And so on; so that eventually it really works out to where there is almost only the 6 per cent that is really held?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Not very much more; not any more in the bank of original deposit. Farmers and wage earners can borrow but little from the banks, and especially from national banks, they not being allowed to loan on real estate nor make long-time loans. Some of the national banks in the country violate the law and do loan on real estate. They can better justify that than the New York banks can justify their continuous violation of the banking laws in other respects.

Another practice of most banks outside of the speculative centers and of which little is known by the public or depositors is the buying of notes from brokers. These are the notes of speculators and others in the large centers. This is another form of diverting moneys from the country to the centers. There is no record of sums so diverted. The bank statements include these in the item, "Loans and discounts," and as that item covers all loans, there is no way to separate them. The notes, as a rule, are purchased by the banks that carry large deposits in reserve cities. It is simply an additional way to use the deposits that can not be used in the locality of their origin because of the banking laws being made for Wall Street. Bankers are not to blame for this. It is simply a condition to which they are compelled to adjust. Funds thus diverted from the channels of their origin are large.

It will be seen in letter No. 1 that this small country bank alone loaned $300,000 to parties outside of its banking district. Most country banks have such loans. In my home county, covered by letter No. 1, there is now and has been at all times a demand within the county by borrowers who had first-class security to give, for more than all the bank deposits in the county. These borrow through local agents, who charge them a commission to get money from mortgage companies and individuals in other and usually distant places.

The farmers, wage earners, and others who save and deposit money in the local banks would be benefited if the money were loaned in the localities where they live, and the borrowers would secure the same at less cost, but "No" has to be said to them, because, under our banking laws, speculators are given a preference. There is no objection to banks making safe loans in localities other than in which they do business when the local demands are not sufficient for safe loans. But the law should not obstruct loaning in a way most natural and desirable to those needing to borrow in the localities where deposits originate. That would encourage local enterprise, be a saving in addition, and a mutual advantage to bankers and borrowers, and not a breeder of panics.

If banks were permitted to accommodate the community in which they do business, it would make a home outlet for their deposits, and then the payment of interest by banks to other banks could be prohibited, for that would make it practicable to reduce the deposits of banks with each other to the amount required for exchange purposes. It would remove some elements of danger in panics and reduce the power of the Money Trust. An act to accomplish that should postpone the taking effect until there could be a natural adjustment.

Mr. FOSTER. You treat that there as if they are loaning as speculators?

Mr. LINDBERGH. To speculators.

Mr. FOSTER. That most banks are speculative centers. As was said by Mr. LINROOT, these commercial houses handle paper—that is, their brokers—and send out these notes, or a description of them, and the banks buy them, as I understand?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. You do not treat them as speculative notes, do you?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Sometimes they are; not as a general rule. There is another class of loans that banks make in which I include the term "broker." For instance, a good many of the banks in Minnesota loan to parties in Dakota, or some other State, through other banks out there. I consider those bankers, through which they get such paper, when they act in that respect, as brokers.

Mr. DENVER. Is that for the purpose of stock speculation?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not speculators?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No; they are not speculators in the sense of bonds and stocks.

Mr. LENROOT. Do you think, Mr. LINDBERGH, there is any substantial percentage of loans made by banks on speculators' paper?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes; there is.

Mr. LENROOT. I mean made direct by the banks?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Not a large per cent of their deposits are made in loans direct to speculators, except in the large cities.

Mr. LENROOT. But a large percentage of what are known as commercial loans?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes; there is a considerable per cent of that.

Mr. LENROOT. It would not be considered very safe banking, would it, in any community where a bank did that?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Perhaps I should give an explanation there. I consider a person who is buying a large quantity of timber out in Oregon, or any other State, a speculator in that timber. I do not mean that I confine the term "speculator" to persons who deal in bonds and stocks, but any person who uses the money that he obtains to invest in property on which he expects to receive a profit by a resale of it is a speculator.

Mr. LENROOT. Through its raising value?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes. He is a speculator.

Mr. WILSON. Then you would consider a man trying to corner the wheat market a speculator?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I certainly would.

Mr. LENROOT. Most anybody would.

Mr. WILSON. Is it not true there in Chicago that the board of trade men borrow great sums of money from the Chicago banks on their notes?

Mr. LENROOT. I think they put up collateral for everything they get.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Most of those people put up collateral.

Mr. WILSON. Not all of them. I think the character of the man has a great deal to do with that. I think many of the men there can borrow great sums of money.

Mr. LINDBERGH. The bankers are practical men, of course, and they seek to accommodate any legal, legitimate business, and if a speculator is responsible they will accommodate him.

Mr. LENROOT. But I think a pure speculator would have to put up collateral—a man who has not any other business.

Mr. WILSON. A man who has not the reputation of being a wealthy man could not go and borrow; but I think some of the wealthy men in Chicago who have the reputation, at any rate, of being wealthy men go in the banks there in Chicago and borrow large sums of money without any security.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Resuming my argument, the facts thus far considered show where the initial original support is given to the Money Trust. It extends back to the small depositors and into the country districts. It is brought up from these and is placed in the control of the trust. Therefore it is necessary to consider the general stock of money and credits and deposits.

For computation I use the report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1910.

The volume of money in the United States June 30, 1910, was $3,419,500,000. Of this, $317,200,000 was in the Treasury, $1,414,600,000 in reporting banks, and $1,687,700,000 circulating among the people. The latter sum would be reduced by a small unknown fraction held by banks not reporting.

I call special attention to the $1,414,700,000 in reporting banks, and particularly to the fact that business as a whole is done on approximately 95 per cent credit, money being used merely as a basis.

Most credits and debts are balanced by checking on banks. Checks based on deposits serve as current exchange money in practice. Bankers settle by a clearing system with each other.

Individual deposits in banks June 30, 1910, were $15,283,396,284. At the same time the cash in banks ($1,414,000,000) was less than one-tenth of the deposits. There was not a 10 per cent reserve for depositors. All the money in banks was less than two-thirds of 15 per cent, the amount required as reserve for nonreserve national banks. Therefore the reserve required for a large part of these deposits must have been less than that required by national and ordinary State commercial banks. The $15,283,396,284 included large deposits in savings and trust company associations.

It is important to determine the amount of actual cash required as reserve, to find the margin left in the banks, on which the general business of the country is transacted. The small margin of free money easily enables the trust, through its banks, to control the money market. The cash reserve is dead capital. It can not be legally used except in the event of the banks being placed in receivership. But in a pinch the Wall Street banks violate the law by refusing to pay deposits except by clearing-house notes.

The $1,687,700,000 cash circulating among the people is not available as a base for the credit system, and therefore figures very little in the 95 per cent of business done on credit, but in the ordinary money exchanges from hand to hand it performs more or less service. Otherwise more money would be withdrawn from the banks for that use.

It will readily be seen that when there is only $1,414,600,000 cash in the banks to pay $15,283,396,284 of individual deposits, which does not include banks' deposits with each other, that there will be something of a panic when any unusual number of depositors at one time demand their money. The law does not permit the use of the reserve to pay them, though that is the ostensible purpose for which it is kept.

Reserve city banks violate the law and use clearing-house certificates to pay deposits, but other banks would be closed if they did that. That is one of the instances in which the money kings control the Government. It is in panics that the Money Trust gets in its deadly work of capturing the smaller concerns for its subsidiary trusts.

Mr. GARRETT. It was a fact that during the fall of 1907 clearing-house certificates were used pretty generally over the country?

Mr. LINDBERGH. In reserve cities; I mean they were used from reserve cities. It is a fact, as you state, but they grew out of reserve cities.

Mr. LENROOT. That is, they started there?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. But they extended quite generally, did they not?

Mr. LINDBERGH. They extended generally; yes.

Mr. GARRETT. In other words, your idea is that clearing-house certificates would not have been used in the country towns—the small agricultural districts like that which I represent?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No; they could not be used there.

Mr. GARRETT. They would not be used there if they had not been started in the reserve cities?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Where would you keep enough money to pay these deposits if they should be called for, as they were in 1907? Suppose the people wanted their money; would you keep it in the vaults of the banks?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No. I would use the reserves in a panic to stop the panic, in the place of piling up the reserves, as the banks now do as soon as a panic begins. In my district I know one bank that increased its reserves during a panic to a little over 60 per cent. You will readily see that when, instead of using those reserves for the purpose of their creation, you collect every cent you can from everybody and pile it up in the vaults of the banks, it is going to aggravate the panic instead of relieve it.

Mr. LENROOT. Could you prohibit that in any way by law?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Prohibit what?

Mr. LENROOT. The piling up of the reserves. The bank certainly has the right to call in the loans if it feels that the interests of the depositors require it.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Exactly. I do not question that right. But the Government should not, in the time of panic, compel the banks to keep their reserves in the bank. They should then permit the reserves to be used.

Mr. WILSON. Is not that a selfish, you might say, a quite safe, thing for a bank to do in time of panic?

Mr. LINDBERGH. What?

Mr. WILSON. Get all the ready cash they can.

Mr. LINDBERGH. They are forced to by the present system of banking.

Mr. WILSON. All banks do it, do they not?

Mr. LINDBERGH. All banks do it, because the law practically compels them to do it.

Mr. WILSON. Is it the law that compels them to do it, or do they not do it for their own safety?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Certainly, they do it for their own safety.

Mr. WILSON. That is the principal reason, is it not?

Mr. LINDBERGH. It is a practical result of the law.

Mr. WILSON. They would do it whether or not there was a law compelling them to do it?

Mr. LINDBERGH. To a certain extent they would. But we all know that the New York banks reduced the reserve below the legal requirement during the panic of 1907, and yet there was no complaint on the part of the Government, and no attempt on the part of the Government to close the banks on account of the reserves being reduced below the legal requirement.

Mr. WILSON. Should the Government have done it?

Mr. LINDBERGH. It should not do it, and likewise in the country it should not close the door of a bank for doing the same thing, as long as the bank is solvent.

Mr. WILSON. Unless it is insolvent?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Unless it is insolvent. They should allow a bank to use its reserves.

Mr. WILSON. There should be a latitude in the law?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. That is, to use them upon express order in an emergency?

Mr. LINDBERGH. That would be a matter of detail. Maybe that should be the case. But the reserves should be used for the purpose of stopping a panic; that is, in other words, the depositors should have the right to get the reserves. I do not think they should be used to make additional loans.

The small margin of money available for use in the panic of 1907, and the failure of the credit system to respond, enabled the Money Trust to force the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. to the financial death line, thereby giving the Steel Trust a chance to buy the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. for a small fraction of its value. Because of that condition, I stated in the 1907 panic that the panic was due to a Money Trust manipulation. For that and other reasons that seemed to me in the public interests, I opposed and voted against the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency currency bill, through which scheme the Aldrich plan now proposes to legislate a 50-year additional yoke on the public.

The evil influence of such an act would extend generations beyond its expiration or repeal. The American Reserve Association is a name proposed to make the public believe that it is not a central bank. That is because there seems to be a public prejudice against a central bank. Any intelligent person who examines the plan will know that it is a central system, designed for the control of the banking business, and any person with a little knowledge of the way finances are managed will know that the Wall Street Money Trust will dominate it.

Considering our financial system on its own weak and unjust basis, its weakest point is in the use of the reserves. It favors neither general banking nor the public, but favors Wall Street. Reserves are ostensibly for the safety of the depositors, but can not be used for that purpose until receivers are appointed.

On August 15 the New York World published that the New York State banking department reports show that on July 1, 1911, there was due to depositors from 141 savings banks $1,594,224,557.93, and included 2,962,845 accounts. The State banking department verified the figures to me. The New York World, commenting upon the report, said, "Here we get a glimpse of the real money power," intending, I suppose, to convey the idea that the money power was in the 2,962,845 open-account owners, the majority of whom had earned their little accounts by the sweat of their brows. But if that was the intent of the World it could not have missed the truth any further, for the money power is not in the owners of little accounts, not even if they combine with the owners of like accounts in savings banks, trust companies, and banks elsewhere.

Those who control these accounts and the credit based on them constitute the money power. They manipulate the money, stock, provisions, and general markets, and the owners of these little accounts and all the people are charged back with the interest the banks pay them and enough more to make it most profitable for the speculators to borrow the accounts and pay for them a larger rate of interest. The small depositors' accounts draw 3, 3½, and sometimes 4 per cent, and the banks reloaning them, of course, get a higher rate from the speculators. These have a system of gambling devices to control commerce, industries, and commodities, and they charge on the goods, wares, and merchandise, and other services the people buy enough to pay back all their expenses, including the highest rates of interest and dividends on watered stock.

It is all a deception that the money kings and speculators work on the plain producers. Plain people earn and save a few dollars and deposit them in the banks. The money kings attempt to make them believe that because the aggregate of their small deposits makes one large sum that they are the masters of the money situation. The only thing the small depositors can do to make their influence felt is to demand their money from the banks, which the banks can not pay until the speculators to whom they are loaned pay the banks. If the depositors make more than an ordinary demand it produces a panic.

That is a power to be sure, but is worse than worthless to the depositor. It is ruination to him.

The deposits of the nonreserve banks mean all things to the Money Trust. In national-bank deposits alone, including 7,173 national banks, on September 1, 1910, there was due from these to other national banks $929,652,332.28, and to trust companies and savings banks $499,646,587.85, and to State banks and bankers $476,745,154.06. There was due from those banks deposits, held as reserve agents alone, $688,715,945.08. It is on the facts as they thus appear that we may begin to comprehend the meaning of the power held by the Wall Street money kings and those in league with them. They control these great sums of money.

It is interesting to observe that approximately 400 national banks, in less than 50 reserve cities, authorized reserve agents, are by law allowed to deposit half of their own 25 per cent reserves with the central reserve banks in three cities. These redeposits are principally made in six banks. The growth of these deposits has been wonderful. I call your attention. They were—

September, 1898	$94,394,210.54
September, 1899	154,514,691.64
September, 1900	176,731,918.08
September, 1901	216,763,488.34
September, 1902	253,515,055.97
September, 1903	227,780,147.03
September, 1904	258,558,149.91
August, 1905	291,732,471.82
September, 1906	334,560,214.13
August, 1907	336,553,788.53
September, 1908	311,499,877.57
April, 1909	332,682,210.28
September, 1909	399,658,140.85
September, 1910	400,740,817.04
March, 1911	427,767,313.91

It will be seen by the rapid increase of these reserves deposited in central reserve banks from $94,394,210.10 to $427,767,313.91 in 15 years that the money is being concentrated and fed out to speculators. In the period covered the money in all banks doubled only, but New York's control of the reserves more than quadrupled, and the Money Trust is bending every energy to pile up "fixed reserves"—"fixed" so it can use them.

The business of the stock market and the creation of trusts increased in proportion to the concentration of the money in the Wall Street banks under this system. But the increase thus mentioned is only a part of the Wall Street money power. There are other deposits and reserves besides those last described.

The reserve in the three central reserve cities due to other national banks, including that from nonreserve national banks, was, on March 7, 1911:

New York City	$379,597,587.88
Chicago	158,083,336.10
St. Louis	69,175,213.99

A total in the three cities of..... 606,858,037.97

These figures do not include the deposits of State banks and State institutions kept in these central reserve cities. Those, I shall show, greatly increase the total. But before doing that an idea may be obtained by considering the deposits of the six principal banks of New York City. These banks are controlled by the trust. Individual deposits in these banks are as follows:

Hanover National	$40,795,708
New York City National	127,707,910
National Park	44,183,799
National Bank of Commerce	82,819,314
First National	49,912,183
Chase National	26,445,545

Total amount of individual deposits..... 371,864,459

The amount due from these banks to other banks was as follows:

Hanover National	$64,403,705
New York City National	102,036,546
National Park	57,844,090
National Bank of Commerce	86,741,446
First National	63,524,916
Chase National	70,353,728

The total due from these six banks is..... 445,104,431

Individual deposits for the six banks..... 371,864,459

Total..... 816,968,976

It will be noted that the deposits due to other banks is greater than the individual deposits. In the figures "due to other banks" are included some unimportant items which do not properly come under that heading. "Due to other banks" means all banks, whether national, State, trust, or savings banks.

I now wish to insert in the record an instructive letter I received from a party in New York City, whose name is left out for reasons that appear in another letter of the same party. I insert only such parts as bear on the points we are considering. Such of the figures as I have had time to verify are correct and I think they are all approximately correct:

LETTER NO. 4.

NEW YORK CITY, July 11, 1911.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH.

DEAR SIR: For a long time past my attention has been aroused by what seems to be a common belief in the great control of banking capital and deposits of this country in the hands of a very few of the strongest private banking houses; and your speech the other day, reported in the newspapers of Sunday last, while not perhaps upon that exact point, has attracted my interest and has incited me to write this letter.

In a very crude way I have been giving much thought to this topic and to allied subjects. My thoughts have been focused upon it recently by the amendment of the constitution of the clearing house of this city, which permitted trust companies, organized under the laws of this State, to become members of that clearing house, with the result that some 11 or 12 trust companies have now joined the clearing house. I have taken the trouble to gather together a few figures which seem appalling. Of course, substantially the total banking capital and deposits of all banking institutions in this State gravitate toward the large banks and trust companies in this city, and if these are now to be absorbed in and swallowed up by the clearing house of this city, that unincorporated, voluntary, self-perpetuating institution, which rumor has it is controlled by a few men, will, in addition to the funds of national banks, control the banking capital of this State, including that of State banks, savings banks, and trust companies.

I find the following figures, which are approximately correct, as taken from various documents in the office of the State superintendent of banks:

Total deposits in New York State savings banks Jan. 1, 1911:
(a) Greater New York	$1,065,000,000
(b) Balance of State	477,000,000
Total	1,542,000,000

Total deposits in trust companies in Greater New York, reporting to clearing house as per—
July 1, 1911	596,000,000
Not reporting to clearing house	646,000,000
Trust companies outside New York City	158,000,000
Total	1,400,000,000

Total deposits in State banks in Greater New York, members of clearing house	248,000,000
Deposits in other banks in Greater New York	103,000,000
Deposits in banks not in Greater New York	102,000,000
Total	453,000,000

Building and loan associations, say	50,000,000
-------------------------------------	------------

Add by surplus of savings banks	152,000,000
By surplus and capital of trust companies	259,000,000
By surplus and capital of banks	83,000,000
Total	494,000,000

Making a total of banking capital governed by the laws of the State controlled by the clearing house of..... 3,939,000,000 or about one-fifth of the total banking power of the United States.

The fact that New York is a central reserve city, toward which naturally gravitate the deposits and investments of national banks throughout the country, and we have at least $5,000,000,000 additional added to the power of the New York Clearing House. Of course these figures are not easily assimilated. They are so vast as to be almost meaningless, but the power which can control this banking capital, surplus, and deposits can easily control the business affairs of the Nation.

It was to direct your attention to this vast aggregation in the hands of a few that is the primary purpose of this letter. I have in mind another purpose—the recent success of the prosecution of the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. It has been demonstrated that after 21 years the Sherman act is a powerful instrument for public benefit when honestly and resolutely enforced, but behind the accumulation of corporate wealth and the thing which makes these vast aggregations possible is the control of money.

Why, then, is not the clearing house of the city of New York an even greater offender against the spirit of the Sherman act than the Standard Oil or the American Tobacco Co.? Does any reasonable business man in the United States to-day believe that the flotation of a corporation with $100,000,000 or more of capital can possibly have a successful outcome without the intervention of J. P. Morgan & Co., or the so-called First National Bank, or Rockefeller crowd, or one of the other powerful financial combinations in this city?

It must be conceded that the functions of the clearing house are beneficial so long as the clearing house confines its activity to the fundamental purposes of its creation, to wit, that of a clearing house; but when that clearing house seeks to control the deposits of its members by directing where those deposits shall be made, how much of them shall be retained in cash, what the nature and character of their investments shall be, and other similar details, being itself under no control, imagination need not be stretched to realize how all this power can be abused when vested in the hands of a few, nor is it beyond the clearing house of this city to use force to accomplish its purposes.

It is actually rumored that the institutions which have refused to join it will be penalized by having a tax placed upon their checks under the guise of a collection charge, and the newspapers of this city recently reported—within the past two or three weeks—that the clearing house had issued a new regulation that no member should clear the checks of a nonmember unless that nonmember maintained reserves of the same size as those required for members. If this condition could be legally imposed, the clearing house could equally impose upon nonmembers, as a condition for the privilege of clearing their checks, investment of their capital and surplus in designated securities or the deposit of their reserve funds in designated institutions.

The subject, of course, is too mighty to attempt to write in full about it, and with every temptation to extend, I feel that I have already imposed upon your good nature beyond reasonable limitations, especially when I consider the hot weather in Washington; but the two main thoughts that I should like to direct your attention to, if you have not already considered them, which undoubtedly you have, are, first, the enormous power possessed by a few men who control the New York Clearing House; and, second, the question of whether or not the clearing house is amenable to the Sherman Act, or if not now so amenable, could it not be made so by an amendment to that law or the enactment of a similar one?

Yours, truly,

Mr. WILSON. I see this letter here is not signed. Of course you have the name of the man; it was not an anonymous letter?

Mr. LINDBERGH. No. He is in business in New York City, and I have shown your chairman the letter, and I have his permission to show it to any member of this committee.

Mr. WILSON. I do not care to know his name; only I wanted to know whether it was an anonymous letter.

Mr. LINDBERGH. No; it is not an anonymous letter.

I wrote the writer of that letter asking him if I might use his name in connection with a print of the letter, and he replied as shown by letter No. 5:

LETTER NO. 5.

NOVEMBER 21, 1911.

HON. C. A. LINDBERGH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of November 18. Since I wrote you in July last my time and all my efforts have been occupied in commencing the practice of law, having recently passed my bar examinations. For this reason I have not further studied or considered the matters of which I wrote you, and for the same reason I fear harm might result to me if my name appeared in your brief, and I would much prefer that it did not. I am sincerely glad if my letter was in the smallest degree helpful, and am sufficiently repaid in the interest displayed by you in the matter, and particularly in your recognition of my letter. I shall follow your speeches with deep interest if you will put me on your mailing list, and will take the liberty from time to time of writing you if I run across any new facts which I think may interest you.

Very truly, yours,

I have received more than a thousand other interesting and instructive letters, coming from all parts of the country, giving information of wrongs practiced by the Money Trust. Many of them expressed a fear that they might be harmed if it was known that they wrote, and asked that their names should not be disclosed.

To show some of the advantages gotten from the use of the depositors' money, I quote from an article written by John Moody and George Kibbe Turner in McClure's Magazine:

"MASTERS OF CAPITAL IN AMERICA—THE SEVEN MEN.

"[By John Moody and George Kibbe Turner.]

"Seven men in Wall Street now control a great share of the fundamental industries and resources of the United States. Every year they and their successors will control more. They dominate, with their allies and dependents, the national machinery for the making and holding of great corporate monopolies, into which a greater and greater part of the capital and business of the country must inevitably be drawn.

"Three of these seven men—J. Pierpont Morgan, James J. Hill, and George F. Baker, head of the First National Bank of New York—belong to the so-called Morgan group; four of them—John D. and William Rockefeller, James Stillman, head of the National City Bank, and Jacob H. Schiff, of the private banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.—to the so-called Standard Oil-City Bank group.

"Not one of these seven men ever invented a mechanical operation or created a great industry. They are one thing, and one only—makers and traders in monopoly, the oldest and most reliable makers of monopoly in America. They began work in widely separated fields when the movement toward monopoly began to shape itself, shortly before 1880; came together 10 or 15 years ago in the two famous groups of monopoly makers in Wall Street; and since 1907 have been drawn closer and closer into one central group by the irresistible movement toward concentration in our industries.

"A DOZEN BILLIONS IN RAILROADS.

"According to the figures in Poor's Manual of Railroads for 1910 the securities of railroad companies actually in the hands of investors amount to nearly $15,000,000,000. The market value of these, calculated on the prices of January, 1911, was about $14,500,000,000. About 60 per cent of the railroads represented by these securities was under the direct and permanent control of the seven men and their nearest allies. About 25 per cent more is under a partial but still sufficient control. The remaining 15 per cent of the railroads is made up of a few weak systems and small, unrelated scraps of road. A detailed statement of this control follows:

Control of steam railways.

	Capital.	Percentage.	Market value.	Percentage.
Capital (Poor's Manual):
Central group.....	$9,080,853,307	61	$9,562,523,976	66

Central group: Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Illinois Central, Hill roads, St. Paul, New York Central, New Haven, Erie, Reading, Southern, Rock Island, Atlantic Coast Line, etc.

Alliances: Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio, Atchison, Gould lines. Other Wall Street groups: Hawley roads; Yoakum-Hawley roads.

"THE OWNERSHIP OF TRANS-MISSISSIPPI ROADS.

"West of the Mississippi, Hill, Morgan, and Baker, with a little group of multimillionaire fortunes, hold ownership of 20 or 25 per cent of the commanding stocks in the billion and a quarter dollar 'Hill system.' William Rockefeller, Stillman, and Schiff, with a very few associates, own nearly a third of the commanding stock in the billion and three-quarters Union Pacific system. William Rockefeller and another group of multimillionaires own a smaller but practically controlling interest in the half-million St. Paul system, and John D. Rockefeller is the financial backer of the whole billion-dollar Gould system. It is now tending out of the Gould hands into Rockefeller's exclusive control. The eastern link, which bound the system to the Atlantic seaboard, has already fallen definitely into Rockefeller's ownership. The western end narrowly escaped going into Rockefeller's and Schiff's hands last spring.

"The Rock Island system is controlled by the Moores, one of the closest subsidiary groups of the Baker-Morgan banking interests in Wall Street. The Atchison had from 15 to 20 per cent of its stock in the ownership of the Union Pacific and its directors until a few years ago, when fear of suits for monopoly by the Government caused the sale of the railroad's holdings. But the Atchison still remains closely allied to the central group by members of its directorate and undoubtedly by considerable stock holdings. In this trans-Mississippi territory there is only one railroad system not directly controlled by the seven men or closely allied to them; that is the new system which Edwin Hawley and B. F. Yoakum—two outside Wall Street men—are working to build out of minor roads from Chicago to the Southwest.

"This three-fifths of the United States west of the Mississippi—collapsing financially in the nineties and ever since growing in resources faster than any other section—created more wealth for railroads than any other part. A great share of the power of four of the seven men—of Hill and Schiff and Stillman and William Rockefeller—came from the money accumulated here, and it is used inside or outside of the district in extending their control.

"The control in other districts, although along different lines, is not less complete. In the South Morgan holds the Southern Railway by a voting trust; the Atlantic Coast Line is owned by Henry Walters, one of Morgan's closest allies, and is tied closely by interownership of necessary terminals to the Southern Railway; the Union Pacific Railway holds the Illinois Central by stock ownership; the Illinois Central the Georgia Central; and Henry M. Flagler, of the Standard Oil Co., the Florida East Coast Railroad. The only railway system of consequence not directly under control by the seven men is the Seaboard Air Line.

"THE MONOPOLY IN THE CENTRAL DISTRICT.

"Railroad monopoly in the great central railroad territory of the United States, between Chicago and St. Louis and the Atlantic seaboard, was established by tying bankrupt roads to the two commanding systems—the Pennsylvania and the New York Central. Morgan brought this about very largely, with the assistance later of George F. Baker. The other men in the group of seven entered the control of this monopoly still later. Together the seven men and their allies now control all the prosperous roads in the section. Only one line controlled outside the group passes through the territory—the system that Edwin Hawley is now trying to piece together out of minor and discarded railroads from Chicago to Newport News, Va.

"The dual railroad monopoly created by the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Railroads in the central territory of the country is the most important in the United States. It is in the control of the seven men. The New York Central is controlled by a stock ownership of over 20 per cent. The Union Pacific and the Vanderbilt family—Morgan's oldest alliance—each hold about 8 per cent; the rest is held by members of the Standard Oil and Morgan groups.

"The Pennsylvania Railroad is always displayed as the one great independent railway system in the country. Theoretically this may be so. Actually it is tied up with the New York Central and Union Pacific in the common ownership of the large competing railroads of the district into practically one concern. And the seven men and their allies not only own a stock control of the Union Pacific and the New York Central, but they own or vote nearly all of the largest blocks of stock in the Pennsylvania itself. Out of the control of this dual monopoly they have advanced to take control of the New England States.

"HOW NEW ENGLAND IS SEALED UP.

"New England is sealed up in an almost absolute transportation monopoly held by the New York Central and New Haven Railroads. The New Haven is held by a stock ownership in the hands of the Pennsylvania, the New York Central, and three institutions under the absolute control of the Morgan-Baker group of the seven men, the Adams and the American Express Cos., and the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York. These hold nearly 15 per cent of the New Haven's stock, and holdings of some half dozen individuals bring the group's ownership up to nearly 20 per cent. The New Haven and the New York Central own every steam railroad in New England except two spurs from Canadian systems to minor seaports and a small Maine road which gets most of its income from handling lumber. The New Haven Railroad also owns all the larger trolley lines in Connecticut, Rhode Island, and western Massachusetts and all the important coastwise steamers between New England and New York.

"CURIOUS TOOLS OF MONOPOLY.

"It was only about 8 or 10 years ago that the peculiar possibilities of the express companies began to be understood by the central Wall Street group. In that time they have made them into the most ingenious and interesting tools for creating monopoly in the country. The greatest of the express companies—the Adams and the American—are in form curious survivals of the time, 50 years ago, when they were created. They are not corporations, but joint-stock associations. One of the peculiarities of this form is that the board of managers hold office and elect their own successors continuously, unless the shareholders demand a special election and depose them. In practice the board of management is immortal.

"The American Express Co. is tied to the central group through ownership of its shares. A sixth of these are held by the New York Central Railroad; individuals have other large blocks of stock. The American absolutely owns the National Express Co. and holds stock control of the Wells, Fargo Co., the third largest in the United States, by the ownership of one-fifth of its stock.

"The Adams Express Co. has as the two most influential members of its board of management Charles Steele, a partner of J. P. Morgan, and George F. Baker. These managers could be changed only by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders, taken at a special meeting. No such meeting has been held in the 50 years of the concern's history.

"The Adams Express Co., with one old alliance, the Plant fortune, owns the Southern Express Co. With the American it owned a stock control of the United States. Because of fear of Government prosecution on account of monopoly this was sold in 1909 to individual ownership in the central group, where it is now held. This holding completes the control of all the express companies of consequence in the United States by the seven men and their allies.

"The Pullman Co. has a complete monopoly of the sleeping-car business in the United States outside of three lines, which operate their own cars. Since 1900, when it absorbed the Wagner Palace Car Co. by the exchange of stock, it has been under the domination of J. P. Morgan and the Vanderbilts, who together control the Wagner Co.

"THE ANTHRACITE COAL MONOPOLY.

"These subsidiary railway corporations, outside of the value of the express companies as stock-holding concerns, are small affairs. Their total capitalization is not over $250,000,000, with a market value of under $350,000,000. The anthracite-coal monopoly created by Morgan and Baker through the railroads is of more consequence.

"About $160,000,000 worth of anthracite coal is produced annually in the United States. All of this comes from a small area of Pennsylvania. The railroads have been for 40 years buying control of these anthracite-coal lands. The first important work of Morgan as maker of monopoly was the eliminating of competition by buying control of a competing railroad line for the New York Central. The second was an attempt to create an anthracite-coal monopoly through railroad combination. He worked at this for 20 years, George F. Baker nearly as long, and 10 years ago the monopoly was formed. The roads that hold it are now all in the control of the seven men. These roads now own lands containing about 95 per cent of the anthracite coal in the United States. They produce only 82 per cent. It is their policy to let the independent operators work out their deposits. This will give them in the future a still greater control of this mineral.

"It has been difficult to create any monopoly of the bituminous coal of the country; it covers so great an area. But this, like anthracite, is naturally controlled by the railroads which take it to the consumer; and there are many effective local monopolies. Morgan has been very active in creating these in connection with eastern roads. West of the Mississippi a great share of the usable coal is controlled either by the Union Pacific, the Gould system, or the Hill lines.

"87 PER CENT OF STEEL INDUSTRY.

"The steel industry has been dominated by or closely connected with the railroad from its beginning in America. To-day one-third of its business is supplied directly by railroad companies, and still more indirectly. On the other hand, the rates that railroads give the steel business on its heavy low-grade materials and products can make or unmake its profits. The seven men in control of railroads would very naturally hold a strong influence on its affairs. But they have, in fact, taken a much more direct part in its affairs. It came into their hands in very much the same way that the railroads and other industries have done—through actual or threatened collapse from competition—and was made into a monopoly.

"The United States Steel Corporation, the greatest industrial corporation in the world, was formed by J. P. Morgan to avoid the immediate danger of ruinous competition. He has held the management of the concern from the first, and the operators of the company are his choice, and a good share of the directors are either members of his firm or his direct business associates. Nothing short of financial revolution could take it from him. George F. Baker is now a director of the concern; John D. Rockefeller was at one time its largest stockholder.

"The Steel Corporation has always held to its announced program, never to control more than 60 per cent of the steel output of the country. A much greater control of the industry, however, is held in the hands of the seven men and their allies. The Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. is directly under this control. The Pennsylvania and Cambria Steel companies are owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad. Together with the United States Steel Corporation they had about 87 per cent of the capitalization of the steel business of the country, as given by Poor's Manual for 1910; and they had nearly 80 per cent of the output. But any statement of the present hold of the seven men and their allies upon the steel situation is inadequate. It is the future in which they are strongest.

"THE ULTIMATE SUPPLY OF ORE.

"Elbert H. Gary, the operating head of the United States Steel Corporation, appearing before the Ways and Means Committee of Congress in the winter of 1909, made this statement concerning his company's ore supply:

"Question. You practically do control the ore supply of the country?

"Mr. GARY. No; not now; not for the immediate future.

"Question. Well, the ultimate supply?

"Mr. GARY. Yes; I think so; that is, pretty nearly.

"Mr. Gary's meaning was this: There is an indefinite amount of low-grade ore in this country. The Steel Corporation has never owned any great percentage of this whole. It does own a great proportion of the richer ores of the country. Mr. Gary estimates that it now holds about three-quarters of the richest ore in the country (that containing from 55 to 60 per cent of iron) and nearly the same per cent of all the known ore of the country that is profitably workable under present prices. Its competitors are working out their richest ores much faster than it is doing; ultimately it will have a great share of all of this highest type of ore that remains in this country. In the meanwhile its corps of trained engineers are continually searching the Western Hemisphere for new ore bodies.

"CONCENTRATION BY BANKRUPTCY.

"The Steel Corporation was brought into Morgan's hands by a threat of ruinous business competition. All of the best of these ore bodies dropped into the hands of the steel company, either directly or through members of the central group in Wall Street, to whom they gravitated, as the railroads had done, through bankruptcy.

"John D. Rockefeller secured the best of the wonderful Lake Superior ore deposits in the panic of 1893 by the foreclosure of a mortgage of a few million dollars on a small ore railroad. He invested a few million dollars more in improvements and transportation and transferred the entire thing to the Steel Corporation at its foundation for $77,500,000 in securities.

"James J. Hill also secured his Lake Superior ore deposits—second only to Mr. Rockefeller's—by the failure of a small railroad in the panic of 1893. He took it in the interest of the Great Northern Railroad, and after spending a few million dollars in the purchase of more lands, leased the mines of the Steel Corporation and distributed certificates representing them to his Great Northern shareholders. At present prices these certificates are worth nearly $100,000,000."

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I call attention to the last two paragraphs to show how the Rockefeller and Hill interests, by loaning a few hundred thousand dollars to embarrassed men and then foreclosing and taking the properties and expending all told but a few million dollars, created so-called vested rights to the extent of $177,500,000, peddle out the certificates to so-called innocent purchasers who are now claiming the right to assess the public annual interest on the total sum.

I continue quoting from the article:

"The third great ore body, the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co.'s, was taken by the steel corporation direct, with the advice and assistance of Mr. Morgan, in the panic of 1907. The holders of the Tennessee Co.'s controlling stock were overextended by the panic, and the steel corporation simply took over the stock of the company in exchange for an issue of bonds.

"One after another—always through the same route to actual or threatened business ruin—the iron resources passed from the weaker hands to the stronger monopoly. And, as in the railroads, it was the hands of the chief monopoly makers of the country who took them up and placed them there. Every year the steel corporation grows stronger. It holds the future not only by its raw materials, but by the strategy of its position. With its plants in Pittsburgh, Chicago, Alabama, and now on the Pacific coast, it has so covered the country that there are great areas where it can make profits over its competitors by its savings of freight charges alone.

"The future of the steel business belongs to the great corporation. But more than that is coming to it. Like the railroads, the steel industry is now extending into a control of other great industries which are bound to it by physical necessity. Two of these are now apparent.

"GAS AND CEMENT, BY-PRODUCTS OF STEEL.

"The first is the lighting of great cities. Until the last few years the gas produced in steel making was thrown away—millions of dollars' worth every year. In the steel corporation's new plants this gas will be carefully saved. In the great new plant at Gary enough gas will be generated, not only for its own use, but to light the whole city of Chicago as well. This gas is a by-product; it is lost entirely by the steel corporation's competitors. It can be piped 25 miles to Chicago and sold at a price that is but a fraction of the cost of specially manufactured gas. Sooner or later Chicago will be lighted by this gas, and sooner or later the other steel plants of the country will supply the cities about them with illuminating gas.

"The use of a second by-product is at the present time putting the steel corporation and Morgan in command of another new industry—the most remarkable growth of the past 10 years—the manufacture of cement. The output of this industry is now valued at some $60,000,000 a year. In the last 10 years it has quadrupled; in the next year it will certainly double.

"The steel corporation at its beginning inherited from the Federal Steel Co., one of its underlying corporations, a method of using the waste of its furnaces for making cement. A considerable part of its material in this way costs it nothing, and it has built up a cement business of its own with enormous rapidity.

"In the past five years there has been murderous competition in the general cement business, in spite of the rapid growth in demand. It culminated about a year ago. At that time J. Rogers Maxwell, a close associate of George F. Baker, who controlled the Atlas Co.—the largest producer in the country—found that he had overextended, and was forced to drop his controlling interest. It was taken up by Morgan and his close associates. With this company and the steel corporation plant Morgan now controls about a third of the cement business of the country.

"THE TIGHTENING HOLD ON OIL AND NATURAL GAS.

"The greatest chain of monopoly control in the country started from the railroad; but the second and scarcely less important one has grown out from the petroleum trade—the oldest of successful monopolies in the United States. For 35 years this monopoly has never been broken. It was never stronger than it is to-day—after the order for its dissolution from the United States Supreme Court.

"The Standard Oil monopoly, like all others, is built upon the principle of progressive bankruptcy in its trade. Never was that principle in more active operation than now. In the past five years there has been a tremendous gush of petroleum. The Standard Oil, with its tens of millions of available money, has bought it at half price, stored it, and extended its pipe system for carrying petroleum, so that it delivers oil to the entire country at a minimum cost. Its system of distributing oil is now almost perfect.

"This same gush of oil has started a trade war in petroleum which is covering the entire world. As a result of it competitors in the United States are being either wiped out or brought into working alliance with the Standard Oil. At the present time concerns in these alliances handle some 85 per cent of the petroleum of the United States; the Standard Oil concern itself handles all of the two-thirds. No situation could be better for the Standard Oil Co. than the present condition in the oil trade. It is an exaggerated form of the very business conditions that created it.

"Meanwhile, in the past two years the Standard Oil concern has been acquiring greater and greater control of another field—the lighting of cities by natural gas. For years the Standard has been in this business, in competition with other companies. It is now bringing the advantages and savings of monopoly to this by a readjustment and division of the field. In the one territory of the United States where natural-gas supplies are near a great market—in Ohio and West Virginia and western Pennsylvania—the Standard has established a practical working monopoly in which it controls, itself, a large share of the production of the gas and sells much of it direct to the consumer. The profits of this business, under its readjustment, will be immense.

"So, between the Standard Oil Co. and the Steel Co., and the Consolidated Gas Co. of New York (controlled by the central Wall Street group), a great new business is entering directly into the hands of the seven men—the lighting of the cities of the United States by gas.

"LEAD, ALASKA, AND COPPER.

"The railroad and petroleum enterprises have brought in the chief assets of the seven men and their allies in the past. But other enterprises, especially in the last few years, have been coming into their control with equal rapidity. They come direct, seeking the aid of the only group in the United States that now has the apparatus to create successful monopolies of the size that present conditions demand.

"The monopoly of the lead output of the United States centers about the American Smelting & Refining Co. This handles 80 per cent of the lead produced from ores requiring smelting, and 60 per cent of the total lead of the country. By controlling the National Lead Co., the big consumer of lead for paints, it holds a strong domination over the lead business of the country.

"Men closely allied to the Standard Oil group were instrumental in starting this American Smelting & Refining Co. Soon afterwards it passed into the hands of a Hebrew family—the Guggenheims—who came into smelting from the lace business.

"The Guggenheims have been very ambitious and have extended out of the smelting business into the general production of metals—into lead and silver and gold, and especially copper. They have become a nucleus for a centralization of the metal business. As they have extended they have sought the assistance and alliance of Morgan.

"Alaska, the new mineral field of the United States, was opened up at just about the right time to come into the hands of the Guggenheim family. In developing it they joined themselves with Morgan in the Alaska syndicate. This now controls most of the steamers entering the district, all of the railroads of any consequence, and from time to time acquires the best of the mineral resources. Its general control of the district is assured by its control of railroad transportation.

"The monopoly of copper was first attempted by the Standard Oil City Bank group of monopoly makers in the late nineties through the formation of the Amalgamated Copper Co. This was unsuccessful. Since then the Guggenheims have taken the central position in the copper business by the development of great low-grade copper deposits which can be worked very cheaply. These two interests, between them, control about 60 per cent of the copper production of the country.

"In the meanwhile the copper business has gone from bad to worse through overcompetition. The usual conditions preceding combination exist, and for some time a general consolidation of copper companies has been under consideration by the Morgan house.

"TAKING HOLD OF ELECTRICITY.

"Together with their plans for building the metal business into a working monopoly, the central group is now performing the same service for the electrical business. The largest consolidation now going on is the tying up of the telephone and telegraph systems.

"The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is the largest electrical corporation in the country, with a total capital of nearly a billion dollars. In 1906 it had been growing so rapidly that it could no longer get enough money outside of New York. It then made an arrangement with Morgan and Schiff to finance it.

"It had not long been financed in New York when the Western Union Telegraph service was joined to it. For 30 years control of this had been in the hands of the Gould family. In 1909 George Gould sold it to the telephone company. The combination of the two concerns was a logical arrangement which had been under consideration for 25 years. It will make for economy and better service.

"Almost at the same time the American Telephone Co. began to absorb independent telephone concerns. In the preceding six or eight years this had developed very rapidly; the formation of a national system was being worked out. The usual overextension followed. In 1909 financial collapse came, and the largest and most ambitious of the independent concerns were ready to pass through the usual route to consolidation.

"They were at first sold directly to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. State laws forbade this. Then Morgan took them over himself. The loss of these telephone concerns, located in the central and most important section of the country, greatly weakened the other independent telephone systems of the country. Since then the larger of these other independent telephone concerns have been negotiating with Morgan for absorption into the central concern. The American Co. and Morgan now hold at least three-quarters of the telephone business of the country. The long-distance lines are practically all in their hands, and all or most of the profitable business in the various larger cities of the country.

"During just about the same time that the control of the telephone business was coming into the hands of the central Wall Street group the smaller business of electrical manufacturing came under their control to a greater degree than ever before. Morgan has been the financier and a large stockholder in the General Electric Co. from the first; his firm is represented in its directorate. In the panic of 1907 the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. was thrown into the hands of its creditors, and New York banking interests, in which Schiff is a leader, now manage the concern for them. These two concerns have now between them from 70 to 90 per cent of the different larger branches of the electrical manufacturing business.

"AN ESTIMATE OF THE CENTRAL GROUP'S CONTROL.

"It is impossible to express in exact terms the ownership or control of the seven men and their allies in American industry. But a rough expression of the percentage of their control of the various greatest operations and resources of the country follows. The percentages, where not otherwise indicated, are calculated from the figures of capitalization appearing in Poor's and Moody's Manuals:

Percentage of industries and resources controlled.

	Central group.	Alliances.	Outside.
Railroads.....	61	25	14
Express and Pullman.....	93½	6½
Anthracite coal (supply owned).....	88½	6½	5
Steel.....	82	5	13
Cement (output).....	33½	66½
Petroleum (output handled).....	67	18	15
Lead (output).....	60	40
Copper (output).....	60	40
Telephone.....	74	26

"This table gives a general idea of the control that the seven men and their allies have gained in certain specific industries. But it is, at best, only a rough and only a partial statement.

"The control of these men has gone everywhere that it is possible to create a practical working monopoly of any kind. Steamship lines, cracker baking, the manufacture of farm machinery—these and many other industries as widely varied—have been combined into the so-called trusts controlled by them. And the list is always extending.

A BILLION OF CORPORATE CASH.

"With the creation of successful monopolies another source of capital came into the hands of the group—the savings and profits of corporations. How funds of this kind have aggregated in New York is well shown by the following statement of the cash holdings of railroads and large industries controlled in New York, taken from the figures given in Poor's Manual."

Cash holdings of railroads and industrials under New York control.

	Railroads.	Large industries.	Total.
1880.....	$11,281,626	$11,281,626
1890.....	51,872,152	$17,408,090	69,340,242
1900.....	160,561,811	46,536,909	207,098,720
1909-10.....	640,545,178	267,337,175	907,882,353

These figures do not include the holdings of Standard Oil.

The article from which I have quoted had broad and extensive circulation. The truth of it, I believe, has not been denied. I believe it states the facts as they substantially are, and they are very material in connection with the Aldrich plan for financial reform.

I have quoted from the article extensively for the purpose of calling attention to how much a few men in control of the people's fixed deposits with banks, trust companies, life insurance investments, and so forth, can do with those deposits. The people, in the first place, furnished these men with the money that was taken from their deposits in banks and sent to New York to give the Money Trust the use of it to get a monopoly on all the agencies of production and distribution.

It is through the process of concentration of the small depositors' earnings into the Wall Street banks that Morgan, Rockefeller, and a few others, mainly controlling the New York banks, secure the use of a volume of money belonging to depositors in all parts of the country. They use it the same as if it was their own; with it they control finances, commerce, industry, and practically all the products on the market. By this system they drain the rest of the country of its free money and thereby destroy its local enterprise in the communities from which it comes.

The system takes the money and credits out of the localities of their origin and ownership and places them at the disposal of the Money Trust, enabling that monster to pyramid financial dealings aggregating tens of billions of dollars annually, and resulting in the establishment of the monopolies described in the article from which I quoted. On these the public is assessed interest and also charged to pay dividends on watered stock. It is added to the cost of commodities and the services of commerce that the people must buy.

The public meekly, innocently, and at times, I may say, almost admiringly permits itself to be robbed of practically all its natural rights and of a far greater part of its products from daily labor. It is all done through the systems of monopoly and charges of usury on loans and bonds pyramided over and over and in assessments for payments of dividends on watered stocks and the expenses of the whole game. Additional charges are made for a surplus on which to maintain the outrageous extravagances of a few thousand families. It would not be satisfactory to these pirates of commerce to take the cost of their families out of the principal, so, worst of all for us, they are to pile up so-called vested rights and property, the status of which is by the courts made superior to human personal rights.

On this vast accumulation of property the principle of its perpetual maintenance in a few hands is fixed by Judge Sanborn in the Minnesota rate case, in which that judge holds, and was concurred in by the other judges sitting, that 7 per cent above expenses and maintenance is a proper return for the capital investment. The people shall maintain and pay the expenses of all, and then 7 per cent interest compounded annually, until the principal and interest will swallow all their property and the products of their labor and ultimately reduce them to abject slavery—the inevitable sequence of the rule. Mr. Chairman, will we stand for it, and will we give that as a heritage to the unborn generations? Can we look our minor children in the face and do nothing to liberate them from such prospects? Will we let the system fasten the Aldrich plan as a final climax to hasten complete servitude to the interests?

Innocent depositors complaisantly look on the statute books of the United States and those of their States and assume that their deposits are supported by reserves held by the banks of deposit equal at least to 15 per cent, whereas the truth is that the greater part of the reserve has been concentrated in the control of the central reserve banks, and these being controlled by the trust have diverted more than 75 per cent of the reserves to its own use, thereby enabling it to monopolize the very things the people require in their daily lives. It is because of this system that we have become industrial slaves, a slavery even more dangerous than the old human-chattel slavery.

When we were in possession of our original and natural resources and could select the place we preferred to make home, go into nature, and, by the application of our energy, gather a living from God's storehouse, we were then free.

Now, nature's supplies, the factories for their conversion into usable material, the transportation facilities for taking them from the producers to the consumers, and money, the agent of exchange, all have gone into the control of the Money Trust. We no longer can select the place of our abode. We are compelled to live and work for this great trust. We are, I repeat, industrial slaves, and I defy successful contradiction to the truth of the statement.

We see ignorant officials, or else willfully deceptive ones, prosecuting the trusts that are subsidiary to the Money Trust, claiming to resolve them into their original elements, thinking, or else seeking to make the people think, thereby to lessen the cost of living. They are attempting to destroy the best means for efficient work and cheaper cost in production instead of modifying the application of the benefit.

This is not a period to trifle, as some noted politicians seem to think while jumping from hobby to hobby without other motives than to please the people when the people do not need them, and to stand by the special interests when it is material for the interests that they should.

This is an age of philosophy, of science, of mechanics, and of business, and a general all-around desire for knowledge and practical sense to meet actual conditions and necessities. If we are, or would be, true representatives, it is our business to discover the errors in the affairs of the people and of the Government, whether they are popularly known or not, and point out the remedies and by the force of truth, reason, and a better common understanding make corrections popular.

The gradual absorption of the reserves by the banks of the reserve cities, and especially those in the three central reserve cities, and more especially New York, has been nothing less than a political crime to the Nation. All these, and particularly New York, Chicago and St. Louis, have been feeding the reserves out to the Money Trust. The New York banks, by their report of March 7, 1911, are shown to have absorbed of the country's holdings at that date more than ever. The Money Trust of Wall Street is systematically taking to itself the control of everything.

By the pyramiding system of the Money Trust, in the use of money and credit under their control, worked through stock and bond brokers, these sums have been made the basis for billions and billions of dollars in credits, on which to corner stocks and control the products of the country for the trusts, and whenever the trusts run short of money they replenish by peddling watered stock and bonds out to so-called "innocent purchasers" whom the courts are educated to protect, and saddle their payments with interest on us and our posterity.

The transactions in stocks and bonds have kept pace in volume with the growth of the reserves held in New York City. It simply means that the money belonging to the people elsewhere in the country is being sent to these centers, and especially New York, and is there used by a few gamblers, under the direction of the Morgan-Rockefeller influences, to rob the producers and consumers everywhere. Not only does this group of monopolists handle reserves and deposits belonging to others as they please, but they scare the concerns ordinarily supposed to be independent, so that they dare not act independent of the trust. To illustrate the meaning of that I quote an editorial from the Duluth Tribune of September 17, 1911. Many similar articles appeared in the press in different States. People whom I do not know, from different sections, took the trouble to mail many to me. This is an evidence of the public interest in this question. The Duluth Tribune editorial is:

"IS THERE A MONEY TRUST?"

"Congressman LINDBERGH is of the opinion that there is a Money Trust. The average citizen will generally agree with him. Mr. LINDBERGH wants this subject investigated, and again the average citizen adds his 'Me, too.' If for no other reason than to satisfy public opinion, the investigation should be made.

"The concentration of the money power is generally recognized as far more dangerous than any or all the industrial trusts. If there is a Money Trust, it is the father of the entire brood. The public has grown very suspicious, if not convinced through the seeming inability to float any large loan for any purpose, national or international, municipal or industrial, for transportation or any great enterprise, without the sanction and help of a small group of men.

"If Duluth or any other city should undertake to buy its railroad terminals, how could it sell the bonds? If the railroads opposed such a movement, does anyone believe it could be financed? Yet such bonds would seem to be gilt-edged. The railroads themselves would have practically to guarantee the interest and the surplus. But who would take the bonds in the face of their 'No'?"

"If this country is to have any semblance of competition to its present trusts, how could such a grouping of the present so-called 'independents' be financed? It would necessitate the organization not only of these industries, but of a powerful financial combination. Even Mr. Rockefeller, in the days before the perfection of the combinations, found he must keep off Mr. Carnegie's preserves.

"Some of the present conditions which to the man in the seat of the lowly seem pernicious are the control by the small financial group of the funds of the great insurance companies and the bulk of the deposits of the largest banks, the support by banks of speculative enterprises and stock manipulation, the underwriting of financial schemes of banks, and the alliance of speculative investment to the banks through subsidiary organizations.

"The same names are found in the directorates of the group of powerful banks. Investigation will show these same men to be directors of the industrial corporations which are dubbed 'trusts,' of the great railroad systems, of insurance companies, steamship companies, and mining ventures.

"It is not unusual for one man to be a director in from 20 to 50 corporations. He does not himself know the names of all of them, and is there only seemingly to assure that they will not get away or do obnoxious things. Such men are supposed, popularly, to represent not so much the stockholders as this more or less intangible Money Trust.

"Speculation goes up or down; stocks become active or lie dormant; industry expands or contracts; prosperity moves steadily, sweeps along, or halts; chimneys smoke or stand sullen; machinery whirs or wears a shroud; enterprise responds to ambition and energy or stalls; and, apparently, just as a few may will.

"We hear of the market being supported or allowed to go to the dogs, as these few think wise. We hear of a man reaching great wealth and having vast interests, only to learn later that, having grown ripe, he has been picked; or sometimes he is taken in to occupy a seat with the mighty, having given assurances of his willingness to be 'good.'

"Maybe there is no Money Trust, but the people would like to know a few more details before they mark Mr. Aldrich's banking plan with their approval."

The little depositors in the banks everywhere should know how their money is being used as a means to corner everything they need in this world and to boost the prices of all they must buy. In their right they should demand of their bankers where they deposit that the banks send not another cent except that necessary for current exchange to the reserve cities, and, further, that their balances now in those cities shall be withdrawn as rapidly as the same can be without creating financial disturbance. The bankers should be given reasonable time in which to make the adjustment, and from then on should be held to the financial support of the communities from which they get their deposits.

But the Money Trust has foreseen what might happen, and so has made the country bankers helpless. It was arranged that commercial banks should not loan farmers and wage earners who might need money for a year or more.

The money of farmers and wage earners and of small business men can not be loaned by the banks to farmers and wage earners who may need it for any considerable period of time. The money earned in the locality and deposited in the banks must be sent to reserve cities, to be mostly loaned on demand or short-time paper to speculators and sharks on the market.

Mr. WILSON. You say that the townspeople can not get the loans from their own banks, which is the depository of the townspeople; and, of course, when they want to borrow money, do they not pay a percentage to some broker for borrowing it for them from some eastern capitalist or insurance company in your part of the country?

Mr. LINDBERGH. They do. I cover that by my remarks. What a wonderful scheme this banking system is, and how helpless the country bankers are to bring about a remedy. Without intending it, they have become a part of the system, and New York now commands the most of them, directly or indirectly. You can imagine what we would get if we leave the settlement of this financial problem to the bankers, "because they know the business." The trusts and their dupes advocate that we should do that.

We might as well leave the trust problem to be settled by Rockefeller, Morgan, and others, as they know their business and would settle the trust problem in the same way as the bankers would settle this financial problem—for themselves.

I will cite an example of how scared the bankers and others are of the trusts. I quote you an editorial from the Duluth Tribune of November 23, 1911. By the way, the Duluth Tribune is owned by parties not in hostility to wealth nor the accumulators of wealth, but it is a live newspaper with an editorial writer who has a brain, a conscience, and a judgment enabling him to discriminate. The article is as follows:

"MEAT FOR LINDBERGH."

"If Congressman LINDBERGH wants excellent evidence as to the existence of a Money Trust, the transcontinental railroads seem determined to furnish it. Also, if these railroads desire to force Government ownership of transportation, they appear to be taking the right course to bring it about.

"It is reported and vouched for by a special correspondent of the St. Paul Dispatch that Bernard N. Baker, who was to build an independent line of vessels to operate in the coastwise trade via the Panama Canal, has been balked by the transcontinental railroads in his efforts to finance the enterprise.

"He was to put on this line boats to meet the requirements of the Post Office Department as to the payment of postal subsidies, with the purpose of keeping the canal independent of railroad dominance. Evidently this precaution was necessary.

"Mr. Baker proposed to capitalize his company for $15,000,000. Several banks volunteered, so it is said, to underwrite this entire amount, and applied to take the whole or to be granted a part of these bonds. Later, one after the other recalled the offer.

"Baker then sought private capital and had no difficulty in finding individuals willing to take the bonds. But the aftermath was the same, and these, one after the other, recalled their subscriptions. He was tagged by detectives, said to be in railroad employ, and it is said that subscribers to the fund have admitted that they withdrew because of railroad pressure.

"If that is not in restraint of trade, what is it? If that does not indicate a Money Trust, what does it show? If that is not undue and unreasonable control of financial affairs, what is it?"

"More than this, Congress has indicated that, if private capital did not put such a line of boats in operation, the Government would do so. It is to be hoped that it will. Indeed, it must do so, or concede control of the canal and ownership of coastwise ocean traffic to the railroads.

"The transition from Government ownership of ocean transportation to Government ownership of land transportation would be easy and swift. Is this what the railroads want?"

There has been a recent gathering of the Monetary Commission in my State, Minnesota, and they talked with the bankers and the men in control of great business. The farmer, the wage earner, and the thousands of small business interests were not consulted.

What do we expect this Monetary Commission to learn in their ramblings around the world when they do not enter into and tell us the inside of the Wall Street and Money Trust games? That commission is supposed to be getting facts for Congress, but it does not get the facts Congress needs the most.

September 29, 1911, 84 trust companies of the State of New York had due to them from approved reserve depositories, less amount of offsets, $146,380,135, and due from trust companies, banks, and bankers, not included in the preceding item, $55,543,292. The 84 trust companies held $1,375,565,304 deposits. At the same time the New York State banks had total deposits of $523,432,606. In trust companies and State banks there were deposits $1,898,997,910 in the State institutions of New York alone. In connection therewith I call attention to the fact that the 84 trust companies held public securities, $90,784,120; other securities, $356,258,586. These two are counted as stock and bond investments. Then they had loaned on collaterals in addition $541,991,508. The two latter items amount to $898,250,044. I call attention to these two items particularly, for they are evidence of important facts, to wit, that the accounts of the depositors are being used by the speculators to exploit the people. The center of activity for staging these exploiting schemes is Wall Street. Therefore it is interesting to know that of the sums named that under control of the trust companies alone in two counties, New York and Kings, which are practically the city of New York, there was invested by these 84 trust companies in stocks and bonds and on collaterals $504,179,029.

Why did the National Monetary Commission fail to investigate and obtain the facts so as to give us a report on the community of interests existing between the stockholders of the different New York banks and of the trust companies, and also show us who controls the funds belonging to the life insurance companies? Morgan, Rockefeller, and their associates control more than one and one-half billions of assets of three life insurance companies. Why did not the commission show us the relations between the officers and directors of all these and their interest in the different monopolies controlled in New York and elsewhere and how these branch out and control the managing boards of directors of the Standard Oil, the Steel, the railways, and show us other trust management?

Without giving us any of that data they offer us the Aldrich plan as a remedy. That Aldrich plan, I assert, is the Wall Street plan. One of the proponents of that plan, in a speech at Chicago November 11, 1911, in the following language, issued his challenge:

"I certainly welcome honest criticism. Of course, it takes peculiar forms at times. For instance, there are gentlemen who say the Government of the United States ought to take this business and manage it. Do you think that men appointed by even so wise a President as we now have could manage better than men who own the banks and who have spent their lives in learning how to run banks? Men who study history will find that every 20 years or so we have had men who wanted to put currency into the hands of the Government. We had the greenback craze and lots of other crazes."

And he continued as follows:

"In the last analysis it is the management of the association that will mean everything. I will tell you, and you already know it, you can not legislate to give men who are managing our institutions either ability or honesty. I am willing to trust the bankers of this country.

"This plan will meet opposition from the men who think the Government should control the currency."

He continued:

"I am glad to say that is where the contest is coming. Our predecessors all through the ages have fought it, and if we must fight it out we are ready for it. Let it come.

"Every 20 years or so"—

The same party said—

"we have had men who wanted to put currency into the hands of the Government."

He tells the truth there, but each time the Money Trust has taken and controlled the Government. "Yes," he added, "I am willing to trust the bankers of the country." He may be willing to do that. We are all willing to trust them to look out for themselves, and I say that with full respect for the bankers, for I do not know better people than my banker acquaintances, and those in my district, most of them, are as much opposed to false monopoly as I am. But I am not, as a public servant, willing to trust the bankers to make a currency and banking system all by themselves that involves their business with the public in general. The bankers will take care of their own end for the profit, and I do not condemn them for that, but we certainly have a right to and should condemn those who are dearly paid by the public for recommending that the settlement of the financial problem be left to the bankers.

I again quote the challenge of the proponent of the Aldrich plan:

"I am glad to say that is where the contest is coming. Our predecessors all through the ages have fought it, and if we must fight we are ready for it. Let it come."

That is a broad challenge to the Government by the champion of the Money Trust. It means another panic, if necessary, to intimidate the people, and it also means that we can not control the trusts as long as the Money Trust controls the Government.

Aldrich, paid by the Government to represent the people, proposes a plan for the trusts instead. But he is not alone, for there are almost innumerable others, some on the pay roll like him. Perhaps they think it a brave thing for the Money Trust that is in control and in possession of the Government to make this challenge.

These men are probably not intentionally wrong; it has been their education. Most of them have been rocked from the cradle of wealth to the walking child and nursed by the mothers of wealth and schooled by its extravagance, and thus ushered into the system of plutocracy without understanding the principles of a square deal to all mankind. I do not make that statement with any prejudice against wealth, but when a plan is presented to us we must analyze it and not rest content with the say so of those who drafted it. I analyzed the plan a year ago. Since then Aldrich has offered some changes. As the plan is a part of the Money Trust scheme, we should consider it here.

In the first place, it was by a very clever move that the National Monetary Commission was created.

It was in 1907 that nature responded so beautifully to the farmer's touch and gave this country the most bountiful crop it ever had. Other industries were busy, too, and from a natural standpoint all the conditions were right for a most prosperous year.

If the Government and business had been properly managed, it would have been a year to make us all happy. Instead, a panic entailed enormous losses on us. Not many of us knew the cause. Wall Street was wise, and it knew that we were demanding a remedy against a recurrence of such a ridiculously unnatural condition.

Most Senators and Members then fell into Wall Street's trap and passed the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency-currency bill. Its ostensible purpose was to provide an emergency currency, but the real purpose was to get a monetary commission which would ultimately frame a proposition for amendments to our currency and banking laws to suit the Money Trust. The "interests" are now, and have been for some time past, busy everywhere educating the people to favor the Aldrich plan. It is currently reported that a large sum of money has been raised for this purpose.

Wall Street speculation brought on the panic of 1907. Wall Street had used the people's deposits to speculate and gamble with. Deposits and liabilities had, by the usual Wall Street pyramiding practice, been increased until at that time they were very large, and on May 20 the banks' liabilities were larger than ever before.

A little later the depositors demanded some of their money, more than usual, but the reserve banks had loaned it to the speculators and stock gamblers. The banks in the country districts, from which much of the deposits came, were not allowed to loan the reserves nor the deposits to good, honest, industrious, reliable farmers, laboring men, or anybody, even on gilt-edge securities, unless they promised to pay it back in an unnecessarily short time.

The depositors' "sacred reserve" funds were sent to the reserve banks and by these loaned to gamblers, speculators, and anybody the Money Trust wanted to favor. Then, when the depositors wanted their money, the reserve banks did not have it. They had to call for pay from gamblers and others who had gotten the reserve and other deposits. The depositors wanted their money faster than these could pay. That made the panic. Some Wall Streeters profited by the panic and some failed, but the seven big men and their allies referred to in the article from which I quoted were great gainers.

All banks except those in control of the money kings were scared. These money kings, so far as it seemed necessary to them, took everything in hand, including the funds of the Government. They managed that panic. The Government was impotent in their control, except to aid them.

The New York Clearing House is an institution in the Money Trust control, and that institution issued its certificates instead of money to pay depositors. The New York banks refused to pay the country banks the reserves due them. Some of these had been deposited directly by the country banks and others indirectly through the reserve banks. The New York banks simply defied and violated the law.

If a country bank had done that it would have been closed by a bank examiner. If a group of country banks had attempted it, they would all be closed. But the New York Clearing House issued clearing-house certificates and forced them to pass as money. If the United States had issued certificates to help the people in that time of stress, the Wall Street Money Trust would have vetoed it. It would have dared to veto such action by the Government. But the Government did not dare to veto the New York banks' clearing-house system.

The Money Trust did other things. It intimidated some of the country banks for which it acted as reserve agent from paying cash to depositors. It ordered them to pay in clearing-house certificates. Through the guardianship of the Morgan-Rockefeller régime some of the more influential of the cities did resort to the New York Clearing House system to pay deposits.

The Money Trust at different times has sent notices to certain of its agents and those in community of interest to tighten up the money market and raise the rates of interest.

Merely as a suggestion of one of the methods, I quote from another letter such parts as seem to the point. I omit all parts that would identify the parties, for the reason that it seems best to do so, if their testimony is later to be secured. The original is in my office, and I will secure it for the inspection of any member of the Rules Committee. It is as follows:

NORTH DAKOTA, July 29, 1911.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the investigation of the Money Trust you can get valuable information from * * *

He has a personal knowledge that the * * * was invited to join in tying up money more than a year and a half ago to raise interest rates, and the rates were raised, as you know. * * * refused to go in, but had to follow suit in raising the rates after that was accomplished. Some one should interview * * * without his knowing beforehand for what purpose, and he will give them a lead that can be followed up and which will open up a great many facts of value for the investigating committee. Of course my name must not be mentioned in any way, either publicly or to * * *, but this letter may, if you deem it proper, be shown to the committee, and afterwards you had better retain it yourself.

Respectfully,

The first relief must be provided through the country banks. It is our duty to amend the banking laws so as to give an outlet for their deposits without sending them into the speculative centers, where they are used to corner the staples and services needed by the people and to bring on panics. A few simple amendments to the banking laws will relieve the country bankers of the necessity of sending their depositors' money to the speculative centers. No report from the National Monetary Commission is necessary for that.

We need an entirely new money and banking system. But first we must know some things concerning the financial situation that the Monetary Commission has failed to furnish. We need some additional information, and can then build a permanent, honest money and banking system.

The people must know the ins and outs of the treatment they have received at the hands of the Money Trust, in order to avoid its pitfalls. We can not be bluffed out of an honest money just because of the Money Trust challenge.

Why does the Money Trust press so hard for the Aldrich plan now, before the people know what the Money Trust has been doing? Has it not got the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency law, an act of its own concoction, that does not expire until 1914? It said, when it fooled Congress to pass that act, that it was a sure remedy for panics. It knew we were scared of panics then. We had just been pinched by one.

We should get ready to pass honest money and banking laws as early as we can get the facts to properly guide us.

WHAT IS THE ALDRICH PLAN?

The Aldrich plan is the greatest monstrosity that was ever placed before the people. It proposes to create a corporation to include all the national and State banks and trust companies. In one breath some of our so-called great men are advocating this Aldrich plan to create the greatest corporation in the world and the most complete trust and in another breath they are praising the works of prosecuting the trusts. "Consistency, thou art a jewel" needs a new language dress in view of such.

It is proposed by that monstrous plan to make all State and national banks and trust companies into one. It is proposed that it shall take from the community in which it is doing business cash equal to 20 per cent of its capital and hand it over to the control of Wall Street.

The national and State banks and trust companies now in existence are capitalized at approximately $2,000,000,000, which would give the Aldrich corporation approximately $400,000,000. He says $300,000,000, but my figures are nearer correct.

The Aldrich plan is to be vested with numerous special privileges:

(a) Its first act will be to drain all the communities of cash equal to 20 per cent of the capital of their banks and trust companies.

(b) The Government of the United States shall deposit its cash balance with the National Reserve Association, and the association shall pay it no interest. If the people asked the Government to furnish them money without interest, it would be charged by Aldrich and the advocates of this plan that they were Socialists. Again, "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

(c) The reserve association shall take over the Government bonds held by the banks and have the currency privilege attached to the same and assume responsibility for the redemption of the notes secured by the bonds. The reserve association shall issue its own notes—that means money—on the terms named, and may issue other notes—money—from time to time to meet business requirements.

(d) If the Government shall adopt the policy of issuing securities—bonds—at a higher rate of interest than 2 per cent, the reserve association shall have the first chance to get them.

The stockholders, which are the corporations that will own the National Reserve Association, are to get 5 per cent dividends. A sure thing if we once breathe life into the reserve association, which it is knocking for at the door of Congress. See its note-issue scheme.

It is hard to conceive of a private institution having the boldness to demand a special privilege of the nature asked for the National Reserve Association in regard to note issues. In order to force national banks to subscribe to its stock, it is provided that for the period of one year the association must offer to purchase, at not less than par and accrued interest, the 2 per cent bonds held by subscribing banks and deposited to secure circulation notes, and that the reserve association may issue its own notes instead.

Then follows the proposition that it shall be the policy of the United States to retire as rapidly as possible the bank-secured circulation and substitute therefor notes of the National Reserve Association, which may be issued from time to time to meet business requirements. The proposition is to cover these notes to the extent of one-third by gold or lawful money and the remaining portion to be bankable commercial paper or obligations of the United States. It could, for example, take $10,000,000 lawful money and $20,000,000 commercial paper and issue $30,000,000 in notes (to be used as money) and keep repeating that operation over and over until the sum reached $900,000,000. Thus by the use of $300,000,000 of lawful money it may issue not only the $300,000,000 of its own paper but $600,000,000 in addition, a privilege so great that a person with a proper conception of the general fitness of things is filled with awe at the gall of the proposition. It is an endless chain by which to keep issuing money for the Money Trust. Here this association is to be given the privilege of making its own money, secured by notes given for loans of the same, and if after issuing $900,000,000 under this wonderful special privilege it still is not satisfied with the gift of that it may issue $300,000,000 more on the small tax of 1½ per cent per annum. If perchance or design it becomes the desire to corner the commodities of all the world to help in that, it is proposed to give it unlimited power to issue its notes, which are to pass as currency. If it issues in excess of $1,200,000,000, it must pay a special tax at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Absolutely no limit to the amount, and yet there are times when on Wall Street there are skirmishes to secure possession of great properties when the payment of 5 per cent interest would be a matter of minor importance to speculators. The commerce of the country could suffer unnoticed in one of those contests.

(f) The notes of that association shall be received at par in the payment of all taxes, excises, and other dues to the United States, and for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, or associations, except obligations of the Government which are by their terms specifically payable in gold. Note the last. That refers to the Government bonds that the reserve association itself proposes to hold. It is to take all of the money of the United States, and may pay the United States in reserve association money, but the United States must pay its bonds to the association in gold.

(g) The national reserve association and its branches and local associations shall be exempt from State and local taxation except on real estate.

The special privileges mentioned are not all. There are many others in the plan. They want it to be the absolute arbiter of the future finances of the people and of the country. They ask Congress to breathe corporate life into it. The people and the Government's finances would then be under its control.

It is proposed to give it power to make money. The Constitution of the United States says:

"The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin."

Now, it is proposed that a private concern shall issue notes (make money) and look after the finances of all banks and, incidentally, of all of us.

It is a question of first importance: Who is to govern it? That is an all-important matter that the proposed investigation of the Money Trust would reveal with a clearness that would leave none in doubt. None should be in doubt now if they will read and understand. It is easy to see that the Money Trust would govern it.

I have shown that a few men already own most of the wealth, and that by the compounding of the annual interest at even as low as 3 per cent, and Judge Sanborn and his associates decided it should be 7 per cent, that the few will soon own all the property. By computation, that is the inevitable result of the court's decision. There is no escape if the rule of the court is followed. The few men who own the wealth would govern the proposed Aldrich corporation. Take his plan and analyze it.

There is first the father association—that is, the National Reserve Association. That will rule. It will have 45 directors, and they will control it. Who will elect these? There are 15 branches of the reserve association, and 1 director is to be elected by each, which will make 15 of the directors of the National Reserve Association. The units of a branch are the local associations, provided as follows:

"Each local association shall be composed of not less than 10 banks, and the combined capital and surplus of the members of each local association shall aggregate not less than $5,000,000."

The public was not expected to analyze what would happen to the units of a branch—that is, the local associations—nor the units of the reserve association—that is, the branches. It is very doubtful if under the unit system proposed that territory for a single branch association out of the 15 could by the most skillful management be so framed as to take it away from the Money Trust control. These branches, we must remember, elect 15 of the directors that run the whole scheme.

We know that the controlling interests in the large cities are owned by the railroad officials, officials of other corporations and wealthy concerns, and by the stockholders and their friends, and that they are related to each other by a community of interests. All are tied up to Wall Street, as they depend on Wall Street to market their stocks and bonds.

North Dakota, for instance, contains units enough only for 1 local association. That is because there are no large cities in that State. It takes many local associations to make a branch, because there are only 15 branches in all. In Minnesota, Minneapolis and St. Paul alone contain units enough for 4 local associations and the State at large enough for 3 more, but 1 of the latter would include Duluth, which would dominate it.

As a matter of fact, there would not likely be 7 local associations in Minnesota; but whether there were or not, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Duluth would dominate in any financial scheme in that territory, and Wall Street would control those cities on any financial problem that would not be submitted to the people, for there are enough trust interests in those cities to do that, without a shadow of a doubt. But even if these I have mentioned were not controlled by Wall Street, even the most hardened prevaricator would not deny that the cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston, and still other great cities, would each control the branch associations in which they would be, respectively, located. Even the 5 cities last named would control more than enough out of the 15 directors to be elected by the branches, so that with the 12 to be elected on a stock basis they would have a majority of the 27, who would select 12 more, the election of whom no one should be bold enough to deny that they would control absolutely.

I know, and this investigation if proceeded with will prove, that all except 3 of the 45 directors of the National Reserve Association would, even without effort, be controlled by the Wall Street Money Trust. The community of interest in the present holdings of stock in the banks and trust companies would lead to that. The three ex officio members, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Comptroller of the Currency, would have no power with the other directors opposed to them.

The other three ex officio members are the governor of the National Reserve Association, who shall be chairman of the board, and two deputy governors. But the Aldrich plan does not leave these three to be named by the President of the United States as in the President's judgment might seem best. On the contrary, the plan proposes that the President shall select them from a list submitted by the board of directors, which board, I assert, would be under the control of the Money Trust. The list would contain none that the trust objected to. They might just as well be chosen by the Money Trust.

The Aldrich plan, as proposed, is a most ingenious contrivance that in every way protects the Money Trust. The trust could let the local organizations and the branch organizations and the election of the directors of the National Reserve Association all go on without the least attention if it chose. The trusts would control the directorate without effort, for the stock interests would vote and conserve trust control.

It is well known that 20 per cent holdings of stock centered in any active force ordinarily controls the management, and in the case of the National Reserve Association on the very start a majority of the stock would be owned by the interests at such places that they would hold the key to the whole.

I have shown that enormous special privileges are proposed for the National Reserve Association. It is to get a nest egg to start with of over $300,000,000 by taking it from all the communities in the United States. It is to have all the cash of the United States deposited with it and is to pay no interest and be exempt from taxation; it is to have all the Government bonds if it wants them; it will take from the banks the privilege to circulate money; it is to have the right to make its own money and force the people and the Government to take it in payment of debts; and it is to have many other special privileges.

After getting the people's money and the right to make its own, in addition to other powers given, it is proposed to give it the following powers:

To purchase and sell securities of foreign governments or of gold coin or bullion.

To invest in short-term obligations of certain foreign governments, to be named in the act.

To have power in other lands to deal in gold coin or bullion, to grant loans thereon, and to contract for loans of gold coin or bullion, giving, when necessary, acceptable security for their repayment.

To have power to purchase from its depositors, and to sell, with or without its indorsement, checks or bills of exchange payable in England, France, or Germany and in such other foreign countries as the board of the reserve association may decide.

To have power to open and maintain banking accounts in foreign countries and to establish agencies in foreign countries for the purpose of purchasing and selling and collecting foreign bills of exchange and shall have authority to buy and sell through such agencies prime foreign bills.

The association is to be a world-wide speculator, and at the same time it is proposed that it should be the financial guardian of the banks, the people, and the Nation. It is to be given unlimited powers to speculate not only at home, but abroad as well.

A special provision is made in the Aldrich plan for organizing foreign banks, and these banks could be used in Europe as a base, like the New York banks are used in America, to create European monopolies. And in one additional step we would be confronted with world monopolies to deal in all things that the people need to buy.

Are we going to let this monstrous proposition of the National Reserve Association for the conservation of wealth to the wealthy come seriously before the people and Congress without verifying the facts on which to base our judgment? Are we to act upon it without these facts?

I have already discussed the use the Wall Street Money Trust makes of the so-called depositors' "sacred reserves." The present fixed bank reserves is the rock on which prosperity may run at any time and produce a panic. Prosperity ran onto that rock in 1907.

The fixed reserves are the practical holdings of the Money Trust and they want to make them larger by the rules of the proposed National Reserve Association, for it is provided by that plan that all subscribing banks must conform as to the requirements as to reserves to be held against deposits of various classes, and that there shall be no change in the percentage required by the law to be held against demand deposits by national banks in the different localities, and that hereafter the same percentages of reserve shall be required of all subscribing banks—meaning the National Reserve Association—in the same localities.

That is intended to comprehend State banks and trust companies, which under the latest Aldrich plan are eligible to subscribe to the National Reserve Association.

No, the Wall Street Money Trust can not let go of the "sacred reserves." "There shall be no change," but on the contrary it wants to increase them by adding more banks to follow the same rule. They always have had the use of the reserves. They never have been used for the depositors except after actual insolvency. Insolvency of a bank brings loss to depositors, so the "sacred reserves" are most sacred to the Wall Street Money Trust.

A proper investigation of the trust will show the wrong that has been perpetrated on the people by this false fixed reserve—fixed—fixed—why, of course the Money Trust wants fixed reserves so that it can absolutely depend on having them. The penalty visited on depositors, if they insist on taking them away from the trust, is insolvency of the banks that would have them to pay their depositors.

The Money Trust for many years has had the use of practically a billion dollars fixed reserves—"sacred reserves"—to use in speculation and to manipulate and secure corners in stocks, capture and control railways and industrial companies, and to buy and own the Nation's enterprises and its natural resources, making them vested rights in the trust, on which to fix fabulous values to issue bonds and watered stocks and annually compound interest as a fixed charge on this and future generations. That is what the "sacred fixed reserves" have done for the Money Trust.

Fine and useful as the "sacred fixed reserves" have been to the Money Trust, still that monster has ever used them and has created and pyramided bonds and corporate stocks in such colossal amounts that the godfather of them, Morgan & Co., sees a mighty problem on his hands to cement all the world into one gigantic holding to forever secure the sacredness of "vested rights" to levy the full toll of the human capacity to respond with interest and dividends. That gigantic task is to be consummated in the adoption of the Aldrich plan for the National Reserve Association.

Any honest, intelligent, and active committee appointed for the purpose, and given proper powers to investigate the actual conditions, can prepare an abstract of the facts that have taken place under our present financial system that will show to Congress and to the people the absurdity of fixed reserves for the use of the Money Trusts. Any competent committee can demonstrate from the actual facts, that are easily obtainable, that the methods of the Money Trust more than any other one thing, are directly and indirectly responsible for the cost of living being several times higher than it should be.

New inventions and methods have increased production manyfold, and the cost of living should be correspondingly decreased, but the Money Trust has so manipulated the control of things that the increased production has been practically all added to capital.

The importance of the subject under consideration has necessitated a somewhat lengthy statement, and still the field is only partly covered. I could continue almost indefinitely showing conditions that lead me to charge the existence of a real Money Trust, but I think it is not necessary to add more to a preliminary statement. An investigation, if ordered, will cover the field more fully.

I have omitted entirely any reference to some practices that I have been informed exist, which, if true, would be sensational. If these exist, it will be for a committee to find out.

As of importance in the consideration of financial problems the House needs some information on the subjects I have described and on others. There is no source from which the information will come unless through a committee with proper authority to investigate. It will not be denied that the money and credit system is the most important consideration that will be before Congress for some time, and therefore the importance of the facts.

It is a matter of common knowledge, and judicial interpretation has established it as a legal fact, that we have within our social fabric great monopolies and trusts that are in control of many of the industries and much of the commerce of the country and are directing it in restraint of trade and for selfish ends. There has been some pretense to control these by prosecutions, but it is apparent that these prosecutions can be of no substantial advantage to relieve the people of the burdens of monopoly prices on things they buy for their daily use. We can not relieve the people of excessive burdens as long as Wall Street controls the use of the money and credits.

We know that a few men and their associates control, by stockholdings and a community of interest, practically all the most important industries and also the transportation systems on which the products of all industries must be carried from producers to consumers. These same few men control the finances of the country and may bring on a panic any day that such would suit their selfish ends. We need no evidence of that fact.

The Aldrich plan is offered as a remedy for panics. I have investigated enough to know already that the Aldrich plan is wrong and in the interests of the same few men who control generally; but most of the people have not investigated, and there are many who believe it is right and are seriously advocating its enactment into law, some because of personal selfish views and others because they have not analyzed it in full view of Wall Street finance.

Therefore I would suggest that the committee called for by the resolution under consideration shall ascertain the ownership and management of the principal banks and trust companies that are eligible to hold the stock of the proposed National Reserve Association, and also ascertain the ownership and management of the principal trusts that control the industries, railway systems, and properties in general. Finding these facts will enable the public and Congress to determine whether or not there is a community of interest between the controlling banks and trust companies and the industries, railways, and other great property interests that are in trust control. I contend, with the finding of the true facts in regard thereto, that these will show that the National Reserve Association would be distinctly a Wall Street institution and would give the Money Trust still greater powers.

But it is not sufficient that this committee should establish the facts that will tear out from under the Aldrich plan its support, for that plan is the response of the interests to a demand by the people for an honest money and credit. The Money Trust is simply trying to ride in on that demand with a plan of its own in the hope that it will pass before its true purpose is discovered. The committee must keep in view the demand of the public and proceed to secure actual facts that are necessary to give a true understanding of the defects in our present money and banking system.

The committee should find, as far as practical, the extent of the abuse of the spirit of the law in the capitalization of banks and trust companies through a practice of note kiting and by the use of dummy notes.

The committee should find, as near as practical, to what extent the funds of country banks are being used to purchase so-called commercial paper in the cities and, if practical, to obtain some information as to whether or not the funds secured on such paper is not, much of it, used in speculation, and therefore a breeder of panics.

The committee should find, as near as practical—and this may be done with practical accuracy—how much of the fixed reserves of the different banking institutions is concentrated in the reserve and the central reserve cities, and particularly what part of that is kept in the three reserve cities, separating that which is deposited directly by the nonreserve banks and the reserve banks from that which comes by the indirect route from a nonreserve to a reserve and by the latter deposited in the central reserve.

The committee should find how much cash is tied up in what are termed "fixed reserves" in (a) the country banks, (b) the reserve banks, and (c) the three central reserve city banks, separating the latter, and from that determine the working-margin balance practical for business operations and practically its holding, and find separately if the country banks and the reserve banks generally keep greater deposits in other banks than are necessary for current exchange, and if the interest paid by banks to each other influences the amount of such balances, and to what extent.

The committee should, in a sort of a general way, for it can not be done specifically, find to what extent the diversion of deposits from country banks, invested in commercial paper in the cities and their deposits in the city banks, injure the localities from which these deposits are taken, and at the same time make suggestions as to how the deposits of those banks may be authorized in safe loans in the localities of their origin.

It should be the policy of the banking laws to give the banks in each community complete authority to take all safe loans, and banks should be stamped with disfavor whenever they loan funds in remote places when there is a local demand for safe loans in the territory from which they secure their deposits. When there is not sufficient local demand, the banks should be permitted to extend their loans into other safe channels. If each community is placed on its own resources to the greatest practical extent, there will be less loss and no serious panics of country-wide distress. Now the reverse policy is being followed. Everything is centered in New York, and a disturbance there creates general disturbance. The committee should inform itself on all these points, and report.

The committee should find whether or not the principal banks in New York and some other places conspire to raise the rates of interest to borrowers.

The committee should find whether the life insurance companies are being manipulated by their management to contribute to the control of the few principal banks and financiers; and if so, by what means it is done.

The committee should find whether or not any undue influences are used by certain of the New York banks that are in control of the trusts to concentrate with themselves the deposits of banks and trust companies in other localities.

The committee should find if any unnatural and improper methods are being used by the New York Clearing House to concentrate deposits and business into the special banks that it favors, and as to whether the rules of exchange and charges for the same are used to give a monopoly to its special favorites.

The committee should inquire particularly into whether or not there is a real Money Trust existing by virtue of the community of interest in a few parties who have the power to practically regulate the finances and the business of the country. I claim there is such a trust and that the fact can easily be established, and that when established the settlement of the money and banking problem will be very much simplified.

There is one of two things that will have to take place in this country if we are to be relieved of made panics—either the Government must go into the business of managing the issues of money and controlling the finances or else the concentration of the money belonging to the people into Wall Street will have to be stopped and the different sections of the country be allowed to conserve their own resources, aided by such legislation as may seem proper. The latter is, on condition of things as they now are, the first solution. Ultimately the other will come and compete with the first, and if it seems to the general public the most satisfactory it will replace the first; so, therefore, it is up to those who want the first to take more than a purely selfish interest in the adjustment of this great problem.

The whole country is now tied up to the Wall Street fortunes—tied up because the money from every section of the country is centered there in the control of the speculators. It is fixed by the reserve laws there for them.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken much of the committee's time, but I think no apology is necessary, for no one, with a conception of the wrong that has been inflicted on humanity by reason of not having an honest money and credit exchange system, can doubt the importance of the proposed investigation. By it can be determined the true causes why the producers and consumers are burdened by existing extravagances. With a knowledge of their causes there will be awakened in the public conscience a sense of justice the response to which will be evidenced by a liberation of personal, factional, and party prejudices, and it will lead to a common demand for the adoption of a system that will give to all a square deal and an opportunity to successfully develop through faithful industry. It will point the way to a liberation from industrial and commercial slavery. Under honest, intelligent direction the work may be useful to the world and become a peace bearer to relieve from some of their troubles the unsettled and restless peoples of other nations.

We still have with us a few veterans of the Civil War, some who fought for the emancipation of slavery and others who fought against it. On both sides there is now common agreement that right prevailed, and personal and sectional prejudice has ceased. It is now our duty to show by our actions and appreciation of the victory that came to the Union soldiers at enormous sacrifice. We still stand for freedom, and if we preserve it their sacrifice was not in vain. This appreciation surely is seconded by those who fought in the other battle lines in the first great struggle and they now recognize the justice of the maintenance of the principles settled in that struggle. We all join now in seeking to make those principles practical. We are of one heart and one soul, an inseparable national brotherhood, and unite in the acknowledgment of the wisdom and prophetic foresight of the immortal Lincoln when, near the close of the war, he gave utterance to the following:

"Yes; we may all congratulate ourselves that this cruel war is nearing its close. It has cost a vast amount of treasure and blood. The best blood of the flower of American youth has been freely offered upon our country's altar that the Nation might live. It has been, indeed, a trying hour for the Republic; but I see in the future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war."

Yes; corporations were enthroned and an era of corruption in high places followed, and the money power of the country has prolonged its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people, and now wealth is aggregated in a few hands; and a proponent of the Aldrich plan, a representative of the money power, has issued the challenge by stating, "The plan"—meaning the new Aldrich plan—"will meet with opposition from the men who think the Government should control the currency. I am glad," he says, "that that is where the contest is coming. Our predecessors"—meaning the money kings—"all through the ages have fought it, and if we must fight it out we are ready for it. Let it come." That is the only open challenge that I know of coming from the money power. Its practice has been to do and not to challenge. This challenge is an evidence of impotence. In it I see a weakening of their forces. Through the money power industrial and commercial slavery was established. The place of its origin was in the North and it spread until it encompassed the Nation, and now the boards between the North and the South are the same. Each allowed slavery to originate in its territory, and now the plain people, North and South, everywhere, join by the law of reason and common sense and accept the money trust challenge. The campaign is on. We are ready.

In quoting my Rules Committee speech above, I have left out very little of it. I now desire to conclude by submitting, as an appendix to my remarks, a memorial to Congress from W. B. Fleming, of Louisville, Ky., formerly a law officer of the Treasury Department, I am informed.

To the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Your petitioner, a citizen of the United States and of the State of Kentucky, respectfully represents that there is now pending before you House resolution 314, introduced by Congressman CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, of Minnesota, "authorizing the appointment of a committee to investigate as to whether there are not combinations of financial and other concerns who control money and credits and operate in restraint of trade through that control."

Your petitioner humbly petitions your honorable body to act favorably on said resolution.

1. Because it is notorious that the combinations referred to in said resolution exist.

2. Because these combinations are dangerously inimical to the public welfare.

3. Because it is of the utmost importance not only that the Congress but the public whose welfare is at stake be informed of the material facts relating to said combinations, including their existence, their methods, their aims, and their power.

4. Because the necessary facts can in no other way be so well ascertained and given publicity.

Your petitioner further represents that this investigation is all the more urgent and necessary by reason of the fact that the Congress will soon be called upon to consider the report of the National Monetary Commission, which is indorsed and being pushed by these same combinations who are raising a very large sum of money to influence the public press and Congress itself. The scheme of the said commission is the most portentous ever presented for adoption to Congress, and is fraught with infinite possibilities for evil. If enacted into law, it will concentrate in a few hands a power greater than the Government itself.

Under the specious plea of providing against panics it is proposed to breathe the breath of life into a Frankenstein monster which would turn upon and destroy its creator and enslave the people.

The danger of a money monopoly was thus pointed out by John C. Calhoun in the United States Senate in a speech upon the United States Bank:

"If we turn our attention to the laws which govern the circulation we shall find one of the most important to be that, as the circulation is decreased or increased, the rest of the property will, all other circumstances remaining the same, be decreased or increased in value exactly in the same proportion. To illustrate: If a community should have an aggregate amount of property of $31,000,000, of which one million constitutes its currency, and that one million should be reduced one-tenth part; that is to say, $100,000, the value of the rest will be reduced in like manner one-tenth part; that is, $3,000,000. And here a very important fact discloses itself which explains why the currency should be touched with such delicacy and why stability and uniformity are the essential qualities; I mean that a small absolute reduction of the currency makes a great absolute reduction of the value of the entire property of the community. * * * If we suppose the entire currency to be in the hands of one portion of the community and the property in the hands of the other portion, the former, by having the currency under their exclusive control might control the value of all the property in the community and possess themselves of it at pleasure. * * * It results from this that there is a dangerous antagonistic relation between those who hold or command the currency and the rest of the community."

President Garfield said:

"Whoever controls the volume of currency is absolute master of the commerce and the industries of the country."

Mr. Chase, Lincoln's ex-Secretary of the Treasury, before he died, saw the Money Trust in its infancy and realized that it had its birth in the national bank act. He said:

"My agency in procuring the passage of the national bank act was the greatest financial mistake of my life. It has built up a monopoly that affects every interest in the country. It should be repealed."

Jefferson said:

"Banks of issue are more dangerous than standing armies."

President Jackson said:

"All money, whether of metal or paper, should be issued by the Government, and bank issues should be abolished."

If the Morgan-Aldrich Central Reserve Association be enacted into law we will have a colossal octopus with one head and many tentacles. The big Wall Street banks, controlled by Morgan and Rockefeller, would be the head and the local branches the tentacles. These arms and armlets, reaching out from the head at New York all over the land, are to gather the sustenance upon which the monster is to feed. From the center of Wall Street orders will go out as Nero's orders went out from Rome—to the remotest bounds of the Empire—and to it will flow the spoil of the Nation as the plunder of the provinces poured into the Eternal City. This institution will be the fiscal agent of the Government and do business all over the world. Its speculations will not be confined to Wall Street, but extend to London, Paris, Amsterdam, Berlin, and other rich cities. And the Government—that is all the people—will guarantee the payment of all the notes issued by all these banks of issue.

The framework of this mighty structure is already set up.

The chief genius back of it is J. Pierpont Morgan, the great trust promoter. Some time ago this extraordinary man, who has long exercised strange influence at Washington, both in Congress and at the Treasury Department of the Government, took over the Equitable Life Assurance Society from Thomas F. Ryan, paying two and a half million dollars for stock that can legitimately earn only $3,415 a year, so as to get control of the Equitable's $400,000,000 assets and $80,000,000 surplus, and lately his trust company has bought from his Equitable Life Assurance Society its holdings in the Mercantile Trust Co., by which transaction the aggregate assets of the bank controlled by him are said to exceed $1,000,000,000.

The Morgan and Rockefeller interests are allied, and their big bank is the National City Bank. "The National City Co." has been organized. This company is under the absolute and perpetual control of three trustees, all officials of the National City Bank. It is to be the holding company of the stocks of other banks, and to become to the other banks what the Standard Oil Co. has been to its subsidiary companies.

The Money Trust has long been plotting to bring all the banks under the domination of one gigantic trust, and the Monetary Commission, which has already cost the people nearly $250,000, is but the instrument in Morgan's hands to consummate this conspiracy.

Fed by the scheme recommended by the Monetary Commission, the centralized power already organized at Wall Street will quickly grow to the dimensions of a giant trust, and become the head and manager of the reserve association and dominate all the banks and business of the United States, and thus be made the legal arbiter of the destiny of the country and all our fortunes.

To combat the present power of the financial interests and to stay its mighty hand and prevent the absolute monopoly which the Central Bank Reserve Association would entail, it is of supreme importance that Congress should forthwith use its powers to lay bare the essential facts and, as servants of the people, expose them to the public view, so that the sovereign people may know the truth and take proper steps to save themselves from this threatened danger to their liberties.

To the end that the public welfare be conserved, a thorough investigation and report as to the present accumulations of capital, where and how it is concentrated and used; the effect of such concentration upon business and the life of the people; its connection with Wall Street; the names and motives of the great magnates who are concerned in the combinations; what, if any, laws of the United States have contributed to the monopoly; and the real scope and purpose of the Aldrich scheme are absolutely necessary.

Notes of warning of the power and menace of the Money Monopoly have come to us from many well-known publicists, and cries of alarm have come to us even from the ranks of the rich themselves.

Every industrial trust has been underwritten by the Money Trust, which is the keystone of the arch of trusts.

Gov. Woodrow Wilson has said that "the great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly."

Confronted as we are with the reign of the monopolies, will the House of Representatives, fresh from the people, as it is, refuse to even investigate the worst of all the monopolies?

The big financiers of the country have taken advantage of the financial laws, passed at their own instigation, to organize the Money Trust.

An appendix is added as part of this memorial, that you may see at a glance how the Congress has been made to play into the hands of those who control the currency and credits of the country.

To Federal legislation and money issues has been added the use of the credit of the Nation and of the great reserves of the United States Treasury Department.

Behind these laws and administrative and governmental favors and powers the Money Trust is entrenched, and it now boldly proposes to consummate its power and add the capstone to the fortress it has built by the enactment of the Aldrich scheme.

Congress alone can save us from the grip of the money monopoly; but even Congress may not be able to do this without bringing the machinations of the money power into the light of day, and this can only be hoped for through congressional investigation, an investigation which the Money Trust is trying to block by threats of another panic. These threats of themselves suffice to prove the existence of the monopoly and the menace it is to the public welfare and the necessity for the action they are designed to prevent.

Wherefore your petitioner humbly prays that House resolution 314 be adopted.

And your petitioner will ever pray, etc.

W. B. FLEMING.

APPENDIX.

A REVIEW OF THE FINANCIAL LEGISLATION UPON WHICH THE MONEY MONOPOLY FEEDS AND WHICH THE ALDRICH SCHEME IS TO CROWN.

Early in the nineteenth century the financiers passed a law incorporating the United States Bank, and by that bank established a banking monopoly, which was destroyed by the heroic Andrew Jackson.

Not until the public mind was absorbed in the mighty struggle of the Civil War was any serious attempt thereafter made to again build up another; but in that struggle the money changers saw and took advantage of their opportunity.

In spite of its ravages and the vast destruction of property which that war entailed, the people of the United States were never so prosperous as they were at the time it was drawing to a close and immediately thereafter. This was largely because the people were supplied with an ample circulating medium issued and controlled by the Government. So ample was that currency that the business of the country was universally conducted upon a cash basis. The population of the loyal States was some 24,000,000 and the amount of money in circulation was $1,180,197,147, or $50 per capita. The times were so good that the sage Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McCullough, said in his official report that the country was "too prosperous." The Secretary was the spokesman for the greed of those who wanted to "draw all wealth to themselves." What he really meant was that the wealth of the country was being too well distributed. A vast conspiracy was formed to change this order of things so that the great wealth of the United States might be diverted from the many to the few by the control in private hands of the circulating medium.

To this end it was necessary that the Treasury notes, public money, should be destroyed and be superseded by bank notes, private money. The foundations of this had already been laid by the national-bank system adopted in 1864, under which the national banks were made banks of issue. But in that year less than $32,000,000 of these notes were in existence.

On April 12, 1866, an act was passed under which all Treasury notes were made convertible into bonds at the option of the owner. Under this act a large portion of the public money was exchanged for bonds, and the circulating medium thus greatly contracted. A tax was put on State-bank circulation to force its retirement. The demand notes, the one and two year notes, the compound-interest notes, the State-bank circulation, and other Treasury notes were withdrawn, until the aggregate of their retirement exceeded $800,000,000. By 1869 the volume of money was reduced to $750,000,000 for 40,000,000 people. That same year, by act of March 18, all the Government's obligations were made payable in coin. This included bonds bought with Treasury notes, and under the law payable in Treasury notes.

The panic of 1873 necessarily followed, and under its shadows, which long rested like a pall upon the country, the act of January 14, 1875, for the resumption of specie payments, was passed, providing that after January 1, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury should redeem in coin the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding and sell bonds for that purpose. Under this act the public debt was increased and the reduction of the currency continued until Congress was forced by popular demand to pass the act of May 31, 1878, forbidding the further retirement of the legal-tender notes.

The next step in the evolution was to cut off the supply of silver money by closing the mints to silver coinage. Under cover of a bill which provided for revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, the coinage of silver was covertly dropped. By the same surreptitious method, under an act to codify the statutes, the legal tender quality of silver dollars for any sum in excess of $5 was taken away.

This brought on the silver struggle. Popular agitation for the reopening of the mints and the recoinage of silver resulted in the partial restoration of silver coinage under the Bland-Allison bill of 1878, which was superseded in 1890 by the law known as the Sherman bill, whereby silver bullion to the amount of 4,500,000 ounces per month was purchased by the Government, against which were issued silver Treasury notes. These notes constitute a large part of the currency used in business to-day.

Under Presidents Harrison and Cleveland the Money Trust succeeded in having the Secretary of the Treasury surrender the option of the Government to redeem its notes in silver and in having them redeemed in gold.

The next step was to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman bill. To accomplish this Mr. Cleveland did not hesitate to use all the power of the Chief Executive, including the use of the Federal patronage. In addition the country was given "an object lesson." The command went forth from Wall Street that bank credits should be withheld. The panic of 1893 ensued. Some 600 banks failed and thousands lost their all. The commercial class was made to cry out for the repeal of the Sherman law. The Money Trust succeeded in repealing the Sherman law and in establishing the gold standard. Unfortunately in this fight the real issue was obscured by a contention for the ratio of 16 to 1—an arbitrary ratio. The question of ratio is a mere incident. The vital question involved, a currency supply of Federal money as against private money, was lost sight of.

The supply and use of silver thus curtailed, the trust busied itself with the Gage bill (Hill-Fowler bill), which boldly proposed to replace with bank issues the Government money—gold and silver certificates, greenbacks, and Treasury notes—aggregating nearly a billion dollars. But the Gage bill, prepared on the plan of the Baltimore Bankers' Convention, failed to pass. In 1900 the currency bill, a compromise measure urged by the Indianapolis Bankers' Monetary Convention, was passed. This was done in fulfillment of pledges made for enormous campaign contributions of 1904 and 1898. By this bill the Secretaries of the Treasury (commonly appointed at the dictation of the Money Trust) were vested with unlimited power to issue bonds; the tax on national-bank notes was reduced one-half; permission was given for the issue of national-bank notes to the full amount of bonds deposited, instead of 90 per cent as previously provided; Treasury notes were to be cancelled; short-term bonds were replaced with long-term bonds; and the greenbacks impounded. Treasury notes, including silver certificates, were made redeemable in gold; the gold dollar was made the standard unit of value; and thus the silver dollars themselves and all forms of indebtedness, private as well as public, were in effect made payable in gold or its equivalent, in spite of the Mathews resolution of 1878, which passed both Houses of Congress, declarative of the law which vi et terminus provided that the obligations of the Government might be paid in silver as well as gold dollars.

The panic of 1907 enabled the trust to take another step in its march toward the goal of arbitrary and complete control of the currency. The Aldrich-Vreeland bill, which authorizes national banks to issue asset currency to the extent of $500,000,000, was passed. Under this law the banks may deposit railroad and other bonds and securities with the Secretary of the Treasury and receive national-bank notes for these pledges, and while drawing interest on the securities loan out the money received.

Of this law the Philadelphia North American said:

"This law will mean the turning over of the Treasury of the United States to the gamblers of the New York Stock Exchange; the making of 'good times' and 'bad times' a 'bull' market and 'bear' market, according to the pleasure of Rogers and Rockefeller, of the National City Bank, and J. P. Morgan, of the National Bank of Commerce; the gift to the chief enemies of the Nation of the power to issue or retire half a billion dollars, exciting speculation, or compelling disaster, according to whatever suits their betting book."

The national bank act was designed to concentrate the currency of the country in the great cities. The "reserve" banks are there and the money of the country banks deposited in the reserve banks counts under the law as so much cash on hand. By a premium offered in the way of interest the deposits of the country banks are thus drawn to the great cities, chiefly to New York. In that metropolis is gathered also the money of the great insurance companies. Here, too, are deposited vast sums from the National Treasury. This congestion of money in the big Wall Street banks serves to divert the currency from commercial to stock jobbing and speculative purposes and puts it in the power of the big financiers to dominate the country. The Wall Street banks have in alliance with them the big banks of Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago. The principal owners of the stocks in these banks are the industrial trusts, and by an interlocking system of directorates, the railroads, the iron and steel and copper business, the telephones and telegraphs, the express companies, and the municipal utility corporations are all largely brought under a common control—a control which, as shown by Senator LA FOLLETTE in the Senate, is now reduced to some 14 men.

This power overawes city councils, State legislatures, the Congress, and even the Supreme Court itself. Worse still, it overawes the people, who are afraid to vote for a change of administration when this power is arrayed against them. When a fearless enemy of the system is nominated for the Presidency a panic is threatened by the Money Trust, and the voters know it is able to execute its threat.

This trust is above the law. It defies all the laws against monopoly, including the law of its own being, the law of the banking act. Under the national bank act, whenever a national bank fails to pay a depositor's check, it is the duty of the comptroller to put the bank into the hands of a receiver. This law was utterly ignored in the panics of 1893 and 1907, which the bankers themselves instigated, and the banks were allowed to refuse payments of depositors' checks and to issue and circulate as money clearing-house certificates.

Potential as it now is, the Money Trust is actively engaged in the effort to legalize all the powers it is now exercising and make it even more despotic. To this end it secured the Monetary Commission and its recommendation of the central reserve association, by which the trust would monopolize governmental authority over financial matters and in effect create a United States bank with practically sovereign powers over the money, the credits, and the business of the country. To have the scheme enacted into law, bankers' conventions have been held all over the country and a stupendous fund is being raised to influence public opinion and control Congress.

[Mr. FERRIS addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on the other side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has 18 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] 16 minutes left.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, when the true history of congressional action on the so-called Money Trust investigation is written it will be found that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] is entitled to more credit than any other Member of the House. It was this gentleman who introduced the first resolution demanding an investigation of the Money Trust. It was at the hearing before the Committee on Rules, on his resolution, that the argument made by the gentleman from Minnesota set the members of that committee, the Members of this House, and all the country to thinking. Considerable has been said in this debate of a partisan nature, in which it is claimed that the present Democratic majority is entitled to whatever credit may be due for the proposed investigation. It is not my desire to enter into any partisan discussion of the subject, but the real facts are that it was the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH], a Republican, who first put the wheels in motion, and if there is any partisan credit to be given it should be given to him. His resolution covered the subject fully, but after a discussion of his resolution and after the entire country became interested in the discussion, then, for the first time, appears the mailed hand of politics, and for the first time there is an attempt made to get a partisan advantage. Then it was that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] introduced his resolution on the subject. It was likewise a comprehensive resolution, and the gentleman from Texas is entitled to credit for its preparation and its introduction. I have no doubt of his sincerity and honesty of purpose as far as his attempt is concerned to get a real investigation. His resolution if adopted would bring about a real investigation. He provides in his resolution that the investigation shall be made by a special committee, but in his enthusiasm he seemed to forget that the emissaries of Wall Street were able to work within his party as well as within any other party, and as it became evident that it was his intention to make an attempt to have the Rules Committee report his resolution the leaders of the Democratic majority stepped in and called a Democratic caucus. This caucus seemed to be opposed to any real investigation. They decided that the Banking and Currency Committee should be instructed by a harmless resolution to sit during the session and the recess of Congress and make such investigation as they deemed necessary. It gave to them no additional power, no additional authority. On three different days this caucus resolution has been brought into the House. Every time, for fear of defeat, it has been withdrawn, and now it seems that the political machine has been so perfected that they feel confident that a real investigation can be smothered and this meaningless resolution passed through the House.

Shorn of all legal verbiage, this resolution, if passed, would simply give the Committee on Banking and Currency the right to sit during the sessions and the recess of this House. This resolution, which came in here to-day, practically means that and nothing more.

Now, we passed the resolution providing for a special committee for the investigation of the Sugar Trust, a special committee for the Steel Trust investigation, and when making an investigation of the greatest trust of all you simply refer it to the Committee on Banking and Currency, whose jurisdiction, it is admitted, does not reach more than one-third of the matters involved in this proposition of a Money Trust.

This resolution has been first in the Rules Committee, then to the Democratic caucus, then back to the Rules Committee, then to the House, back to the Rules Committee, back to the House, then the Rules Committee, and now here it is the third time, clothed in a little different garb, but it is just as impotent, just as worthless as it ever was, and if it could speak, it would offer its apologies to the Missouri poet, and then in the agony of its miserable existence say:

Every time I come to town
The boys keep kickin' me all aroun',
It makes no difference if I am a clown,
You've gotta quit kickin' me all aroun'.

[Laughter.]

The Democratic caucus by a vote of 115 has smothered the real investigation that was proposed by the Lindbergh and Henry resolutions. Think of 115 men in a secret caucus controlling the official action of 393 Members. We have here a practical illustration of the evils of the caucus. Oh, yes, gentlemen, you did—you helped some of us to overthrow what you termed the czar; and then you have given your allegiance to and placed upon the throne King Caucus, and you kneel and bow and scrape before his throne like the slave crouches in the dust at the feet of his master. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If you want a real investigation, why not pass the Henry or Lindbergh resolution? If you want to give to the people, to the public, to the country, and to this House the facts, then why conceal it and cover it up in this sham resolution that is now before the House by consent of Wall Street and by virtue of this Democratic caucus? [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to have a little more time.

[The time of Mr. NORRIS was extended.]

Mr. Speaker, it has been argued that there is no Money Trust and that an investigation would injure business. If there be no Money Trust, then no one can be hurt by an honest investigation, no matter how thorough it may be. Honest business will not be hurt by publicity, and any business that can not exist in the light of day is not honest and does not need and ought not have protection. I have here a letter from Mr. A. E. Stilwell, the great railroad builder. I presume every Member has a copy. It is an open letter, directed to Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. In this letter Mr. Stilwell specifically charges that there is a Money Trust, and sets forth some of its evil doings. He says that he has felt its power in his work. He has been delayed and halted, and at times it looked as though he must fail on account of enormous combinations of wealth controlled by men who did not want to see his railroads constructed. It is common knowledge that no man or set of men can finance any great institution or enterprise without they get the consent of a few men in Wall Street, and these men always demand their rake-off. In this letter Mr. Stilwell quotes from a speech delivered by the president of the Continental Commercial Bank, of Chicago, at a meeting of financial men. He quotes this gentleman, as follows:

I believe the money power now lies in the hands of a dozen men. I plead guilty to being one.

Mr. Stilwell says that two or three banks in New York, two or three in Chicago, and two or three in St. Louis control the question of whether loans shall be made to correspondents throughout the entire country. The man or men who control the money of a country control everything there is in it, and there is a general understanding throughout the country that such a condition exists and that a very few of the great money kings absolutely have their grip upon every enterprise and upon every great undertaking. The American people from one end of the country to the other are demanding the truth. They want an honest, square investigation. It was the purpose of the Lindbergh resolution and also of the Henry resolution to give such an investigation. This money power can prevent railway construction. It prevents the development of States and Territories by the control of credit. It holds in its greedy hands the destinies of millions. We are importuned by people from all over the country to provide for an investigation that shall be honest and thorough. As I have said, it is admitted that the Banking and Currency Committee does not have jurisdiction over more than a third of the matters controlled by the Money Trust. It is understood and known throughout the country that Wall Street has been laboring through those who can control the Democratic caucus for weeks and weeks, trying to squelch this investigation, or, failing in that, to have the matter referred to the Banking and Currency Committee and not investigated by a special committee, as provided in the Lindbergh and the Henry resolutions. There are many Democrats on that side of the House who, if uncoerced and uncontrolled by the silent but terrible power of the caucus, would gladly vote with us to defeat the previous question and then to pass an amendment that would make this a real investigation. The parliamentary situation is such that unless the previous question is defeated no amendment will be in order, so the vote on the previous question is the test vote; and I want to call to witness, gentlemen, that the man who has thrice lead your party in the presidential contest has sounded the warning and called attention to you and to the country that this investigation should be made, according to the Henry resolution, by a special committee, and to refer it to the Banking Committee is only to smother it. Mr. Bryan recently telegraphed Mr. HENRY of Texas, chairman of the Rules Committee, as follows:

I regard caucus on Money Trust investigation as crisis. Its result will largely affect our chances in coming campaign. Please say to anyone who values my judgment that I am heartily with you in demand for special committee. There are many objections to investigation by regular committee, but it is enough to know that Wall Street prefers regular committee. We can not afford to allow accused parties to select this jury. Success to you. If our party is afraid to offend the powerful financial interests that have fought us since 1896 we can not expect public confidence.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

But, my Democratic friends, that is not the only warning you have received. The chairman of the Committee on Rules, the able gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], on the 2d day of February published a letter over his own signature in the Washington Post. In this letter he calls your attention to the real situation. Mr. HENRY says:

The truth is that only one-third of the matters provided for in my resolution pertain to the duties and jurisdiction of that committee, and an equal third each goes respectively to the Judiciary and Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees, should the facts and frauds be uncovered, which I have promised the American people will be done if we can have a real investigation and not a sham.

These discoverable facts will belong with equal pertinency to the jurisdiction of these three committees when we unearth them. Then why send my resolution to the Banking and Currency Committee? Why?

These same men who are trying to do that were just as determined at first that there should be no investigation under any circumstances. They have now changed their tactics.

In a communication from Mr. Samuel Untermyer he informs me: "I happen to know something of the desperate efforts that are being made from New York, through the local banks in every section of the country, to defeat this investigation or to send it to the Committee on Banking and Currency. You have a big fight on your hands, but the game is well worth the candle. No more important or public-spirited fight has ever made."

Let me give assurance that I know Mr. Untermyer is speaking the unvarnished truth.

A careful reading of my resolution will demonstrate that if a real investigation can be had, facts will be uncovered and established that throw a flood of light on other propositions than a simple currency law. It will unearth conditions and a system that will show the American people not only how to legislate on the currency bill now pending, but the trust problem and interstate-commerce corporations and railways.

A thorough examination of my resolution will show that we will also get at the methods of the Money Trust in manipulating the prices of cotton and other agricultural products, their power to make "bull" and "bear" markets, and their conspiracies to depress the prices of farm products, and thereby the cotton growers of the South, the grain growers of the West, and the farmers everywhere will have authentic information and a long-sought answer as to how Wall Street has been executing these deeds and conspiracies for many years.

Therefore, I am fighting for a real investigation in a sane, deliberate, wise, and unsensational way.

R. L. HENRY.

Now, the question arises: Are you going to permit the call of duty to be subservient to the dictates of the caucus? Why not declare your freedom on this occasion and help us to amend this resolution so it will be effective? If you will vote down the previous question we will offer as a substitute the provision of the Henry resolution, providing for a special committee, giving to them full and ample powers to make the investigation thorough and complete. There are some of us over here who will not be shackled by the mandates of a secret party caucus. There are many of you over there who believe as we do. Why not, then, come out into the open; join with us; let us present a united front to a united enemy?

How foolish this investigation would be, even if it were started by three separate committees of the House. The House of Representatives, as I have said before, has never taken such a course in any prior investigation. What would you have said to us when you proposed to investigate the Steel Trust if we had said, "Let that part of the matters pertaining to the Steel Trust that is within the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee be investigated by that committee; let that part that is within the jurisdiction of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee be investigated by that committee; let that part of the investigation pertaining to banking and currency be investigated by that committee; let that part which relates to the labor of its employees be investigated by the Committee on Labor?" The very statement of the proposition discloses its foolishness. The only practical, honest, fair way to make this investigation is by some one committee having complete authority to investigate all the details and all the ramifications of this great trust, no matter whether it leads in the direction of the Judiciary, whether it leads to Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or whether it leads to Banking. Everybody here knows and understands that this is only an attempt to avoid the real issue. You have been inveigled into it through the instrumentality of a caucus. Why not put our work here on the floor of the House, the place we have sworn to perform our duty, above and beyond the control of an unofficial organization held in secret, dominated and controlled by the political machine?

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, first offering my apologies to James Whitcomb Riley, I want to dedicate to the loyal subjects of King Caucus this little stanza:

There was a little Democrat who wouldn't say his prayers,
And so the caucus gobbled him and spanked him unawares.
They threatened him, they pounded him, they rolled him thin and sleek,
And when the job was finished there he was humble, sore, but meek.
And the caucus 'll git you if you don't watch out.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

There were some stalwart Democrats, who swore they saw a trust;
With bulls and bears it gamboled there in Wall Street's dirty dust;
But when the caucus finished them they saw 'twas just a dream.
They laid their heads in Wall Street's lap and slumbered on again.
And the caucus 'll git you if you don't watch out.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, public opinion is so easily molded for right or wrong, as the promoters of publicity intend it shall be, that it is refreshing to observe how cheerfully the editorial brethren dwell together on certain problems of political interest. Our friends of the Democratic Party have been discovering a great many mare's-nests since they have been in control of this House, and some of these they have investigated until the lead became too hot for comfort, as in the great Controller Bay exposé, which wound up in such a lamentable fiasco. As to the propriety of these proceedings, we have had both sides of the question; first, that the regular committees should make these investigations; second, that the work should be done by special committees with Representatives as accusers, as in the case of the inquiry into the Army shoe contracts; and both methods have been held by the House to be justifiable. While cutting down the tariff and reducing expenditures in other directions, making it a serious question whether both ends can be met during the next fiscal year, and whether great public improvements like rivers and harbors and public buildings can be continued, the publicity following in the trail of the investigators has been a sufficient inducement to encourage and continue the investigations at much expense, notwithstanding the small returns and frequent failures resulting therefrom.

The latest scheme to attract attention to the activity of the Democrats in the House and to secure the newspaper headlines, which are so valuable for campaign purposes, is the professed desire to discover and drive from its lair the Money Trust. I do not intend to enlarge upon this new sensation, except to lay before the House the views of three of the great newspapers of the city of Philadelphia, who "agree" most indifferently upon this subject. In fact, even the casual reader of the editorials, which I now present, will be able to understand not only how wicked are the "malefactors of great wealth," who put all the money of the country in their own strong boxes, and deprive every mortal son of the 92,000,000 of us, who are still doing business in the country, to obtain any spare change at all, but they also seem to suggest that this hydra-headed and multi-fingered octopus, the Money Trust, is as much a myth as the Cerberus of Dante. That there is something spectral, if not demagogic, about this frightful monster that so completely enslaves us all is shown by the Philadelphia Record, our leading Democratic newspaper in Pennsylvania, in its issue of February 8. The Record's article is worth the reading, not only because it tersely presents its facts, but throws in a little classical history that is satisfyingly illustrative. It follows:

Of all the foolish spectres conjured up by politicians and demagogues to frighten a free and independent people, that of the so-called Money Trust is perhaps the most absurd. While we hear more of it now than perhaps ever before, this bugaboo is by no means new, but has frequently been invoked in days gone by for much the same purposes as now. Its history is interestingly traced by Prof. Joseph French Johnson, dean of the New York University School of Commerce, who delivered an address before the Economic Club of Boston on Friday evening. Taking as his subject "The proposed banking and currency legislation, with especial reference to monopolistic control of credits," he had this to say of the appearance of this monster in past centuries:

"The so-called Money Trust is the same old bogey with which demagogues have frightened the Simple Simons of all ages. Apparently its blood-sucking tentacles are no longer, nor more numerous, than when under the name of Julian, in the second century of the Christian era, it bought the Roman Empire, or than when, under the disguise of a Venetian banker, it financed the Crusades in return for a first mortgage upon Christendom.

"The Scotch historian, Archibald Alison, discovered the monster at work in England nearly 100 years ago. He writes of the 'common complaint that the money power has become all powerful, that its sway is paramount in the legislature, and that it is able to set all the other interests in the community at defiance.'

The people of the interior, who hate Wall Street, which is as much a hidden terror to most people of the East as it is to those of the South or West, might feel a sense of relief in the perusal of the Record's editorial were it not for the widely circulated Philadelphia North American, which is pronouncedly active on progressive lines. The North American does not agree with its distinguished contemporary the Record, but thinks there is a "Money Trust" and an "oligarchy" and a "conspiracy" and a great many other things that are calculated to stir the political fighting blood of all its readers. This is what the North American says in its editorial of February 9:

DEMOCRATS SURRENDER TO WALL STREET.

There can be no further dispute about where Presidential Candidates UNDERWOOD and CLARK and their assistant engineers of the Democratic House machinery stand in the conflict between special privilege and the public welfare. By their caucus action on Wednesday they classified themselves permanently when they substituted a false-pretense, perfunctory inquiry for the proposed thorough investigation of the centralized control of money and credit, which is giving to the Morgan-Rockefeller-Wall Street combination the power of life and death over business and industry.

Only four days ago that Wall Street spokesman, the New York Sun, said frankly: "An investigation of banking conditions carried on by the House Committee on Banking and Currency, whose members are known to be conservative men, and for the purpose of supplementing the work of the Monetary Commission, would be looked upon with comparative indifference in financial circles." And yesterday, while the Philadelphia and other Tory newspapers were deceiving their readers with such headlines as "Democrats order an investigation of Money Trust," joy produced new candor in the Sun, its headline reading truthfully, "No money hunt, says caucus."

Naturally, the Underwood-Fitzgerald-Clayton-Palmer-Adamson-Littleton-Pujo crowd did not dare openly oppose an investigation. They still hope to delude the people in regard to their worthless subterfuge. And, in a parliamentary way, it must be admitted that they did their service to the masters of Wall Street with some skill. The bogeyman of Bryan was set up and may have angered a few Members into support of UNDERWOOD. But the false pretense that the Henry resolution, which spoke the sentiment of all the progressives in both parties, represented only a desire by Mr. Bryan to "run Congress" did not blind many in or out of Congress.

More shrewd and more effective was the indignant plea that the appointment of a special committee would discredit all the standing committees and impeach the honor of their personnel.

Wall Street threats of a panic, the power of the House leaders, including Speaker CLARK, all the influence which could be brought to bear by banking institutions in the districts of the Members, all the threats and promises which direct representatives of Wall Street could utter, and all the arguments in favor of party harmony and the wisdom of doing nothing to arouse the opposition of the great financial interests had more or less effect. And the Wall Street service was accomplished by a vote of 115 to 66.

The scheme thus successfully perpetrated was to save the Aldrich monetary plan from the exposure of its evils, which would have been certain in an honest and thorough investigation, and to do this by the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which PUJO, of Louisiana, is the chairman.

There is not in the entire list of House committees one so absolutely reactionary and special-privilege controlled as this. Most of the older members of the committee were appointed by CANNON, and were named by him to pack the committee against former Chairman Fowler, placing it in line with all the schemes of public exploitation which former Senator Aldrich and the Morgan-Rockefeller combination, which he represents, wished to force through the Congress.

VREELAND, appointed chairman of the Cannon packed committee and now vice chairman of the Aldrich packed Monetary Commission, is the leading Republican member. PUJO and the two other leading Democrats are also members of the Aldrich commission and signed the Aldrich consolidated banking scheme.

To refer a resolution affecting the direct interests of great and powerful financial combinations to the present Banking and Currency Committee of the House is exactly as would be its reference to former Senator Aldrich or CANNON or to any one of the half dozen Democratic House Members, like UNDERWOOD or LITTLETON, who are so obviously seeking to serve those interests for purposes of their own.

The whole Democratic Party must bear the burden of the subservience of UNDERWOOD and CLARK to the commands of the centralized Morgan-Rockefeller control of money and credit. But justice should be done to the Democrats who composed the surprisingly large minority in the caucus.

Only a little while ago PENROSE was declaring, in substance, that no one in or out of Washington was interested in the money question, and that only a select few experts had a glimmer of understanding of it. The action of those 66 Democrats, standing firm against all outside pressure and the power of their House organization for a full, fair, frank presentation of facts to the American people, was not, as the New York Sun chastely and temperately terms it, "the act of a band of populist blatherskites and former free silverites," but proof that understanding of the centralized control does exist and is swiftly spreading.

UNDERWOOD and CLARK stand self-exposed in their true colors as doers of Wall Street's bidding. If there follows any investigation, it will be a mock and a sham, conducted to conceal and not reveal the facts that would enable the American people to form an intelligent opinion of the Aldrich monetary scheme.

But one of the most important features of that caucus vote was its corroboration of Woodrow Wilson's statement at Allentown: "Parties are simply men who take sides, and there is no vitality in a party unless there is something to take sides about. One of the most difficult things in our time is for a man to determine what party he belongs to. It's like tweedledum and tweedledee."

That vote of the 66 and the open control assumed by Wall Street of the Democratic machinery and leadership in Congress are the latest auguries of an inevitable birth of a new party in this Nation, unless the reactionaries in either the Republican or Democratic Party are routed this year.

But the Philadelphia Record, great newspaper that it is, still loyal to the Democratic Party notwithstanding its ridicule of the so-called Money Trust in its issue of February 8, comes back to the rescue of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in its issue of February 9 with a further editorial, which is commended to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] who has in mind the very important question of continuing the search for the "hydra-headed monster." In this second editorial, the Record says:

THE HUNT FOR A MONEY TRUST.

Mr. UNDERWOOD remains leader of the House of Representatives despite the efforts of William Jennings Bryan to displace him. The House has been organized in accordance with the general public interests, and the standing committees are competent to perform any duties the House may assign to them. Mr. Bryan was anxious to have an investigation of the alleged Money Trust by a special committee created for the purpose, presumably with Mr. HENRY of Texas at its head, but the very reason why he wished this was a reason why it should not be done, and Mr. UNDERWOOD understood this and carried his point, that the several parts of the investigation, which many Members desired, should be assigned to the appropriate standing committees.

There is no Money Trust in any such sense as Mr. HENRY of Texas uses the term, but the financial interests of the country are centralized to a great extent, and it is entirely proper for the House of Representatives to see how far this centralization has gone and what are the effects of it. This work can very properly be done by the Committee on Banking and Currency. There is some demand for such an inquiry outside of political circles. There are men of business who believe such an inquiry would disclose useful information. The inquiry will create no alarm or uneasiness anywhere, and Congress can secure the information it may need to guide its action without any disturbance of business.

The project of a special investigating committee under the leadership of a man who believes that Wall Street has cornered the United States would be felt in all financial circles as an expression of hostility on the part of Congress, and it would add to the sense of uneasiness with which the commercial world looks forward to a presidential campaign. Investigation by the standing committees will not get on the nerves of financial concerns, and it will yield all the useful results that could be looked for from a special inquest.

The Democratic Party is opposed to monopolies of every sort, but it is not hostile to business, even big business, not even big financial business, and the efforts of Mr. HENRY of Texas would have created an injurious misconception of the party's purposes.

Meanwhile, it is fair to observe that the stalwart Republican Inquirer, of Philadelphia, viewing with favor the Democratic Record of February 8, and differing from the Record of February 9, with sinister references to certain presidential possibilities which might be affected by the outcome of the nationwide excitement over the so-called Money Trust, hints that the Democratic Party is itself a little perturbed over the consequences of its heroic mounting of St. George to slay the dragon. Indeed, the Inquirer is skeptical, as will be seen in the following extract from the issue of February 9:

RUNNING AWAY FROM AN INVESTIGATION.

Are the heavens falling? Are the clouds tumbling down about our heads? For at last the Democrats of the House of Representatives actually are running away from an investigation. They have investigated about everything under the sun except the cold weather of this winter. They have ordered committee after committee to make inquiries. They have wasted tens of thousands of dollars on useless probings, and they have never seemed to learn wisdom.

But at last something has broken in upon the serenity of their dreams. One of their number—Representative HENRY—demanded still another committee—a special committee to be charged with the investigation of the Money Trust—and in caucus assembled, and in spite of the earnest advice of Mr. Bryan that the special committee be named, they have declared against the proposition and have buried the proposed inquiry in the pigeonholes of one of the standing committees.

There will be various opinions concerning this action. They will be obliged to listen to charges that they are under the thumb of the Money Trust—and Bryan himself will take that ground—that they don't dare to tackle Wall Street; that their professions of piety are loud but meant only for the ear, and that the "interests" have got 'em by the hair of the head.

But, after all, the probability is that the bulk of the Democrats assembled in caucus concluded that if there is a Money Trust it is intangible and impossible to get at, and that any serious effort to chase it would be about as fruitless as a boy's pursuit of the will-o'-the-wisp.

Nevertheless, between the Underwood and Bryan sections of the Democratic Party a great gulf is fixed, and it is likely to grow wider and wider, like the Panama Canal in the Culebra Cut.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have cited these important editorial comments upon a problem that seems to be setting the political pulse afire, because they serve to show that the great mass of the people are sometimes to be excused for drifting away from their fixed principles. They depend largely upon the great editors for political gospel, and according as they are swayed, they frequently lambaste their Members of Congress who do not incidentally kill off all the railroad presidents, corporation managers, manufacturers and other employers of labor, or purveyors of wealth, as the restless and excited spirit dictates. To a large degree the Democratic Party thus far during this session of Congress has undertaken to destroy almost everybody and everything against which anybody has a grievance, and they have succeeded so well that business has been seriously affected, that revenues have been reduced, and that public improvements have been halted. There has been no let-up in the search for trouble, and there promises to be none so long as there is anything tangible to investigate or any constructive agency remains to be torn down.

But, Mr. Speaker, while I am inclined to believe with both the Democratic Record and the Republican Inquirer that this resolution is practically an ordinance to investigate windmills and will-o'-the-wisps, I do not want to deny the majority the right to exercise its own free will in this instance. Indeed, it would be useless to oppose them. If you are ready to assume the responsibility and take the consequences of an investigation that is calculated to work injury in financial circles, and possibly to institutions wherein are kept the savings of the poor, without accomplishing any corresponding benefit to the people at large, it is your affair. I am satisfied under these circumstances to have the matter go to the Committee on Currency and shall vote accordingly. It will be the simplest way of imposing the penalty and of allaying the agitation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Nebraska, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have been amused by the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. He recited a little poem, saying there was a little Democrat, and so forth. The difference between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party is, the Democratic Party is sincere, harmonious, and militant, and the Republican Party is insincere, divided, and unreliable, and after the next election there will not be enough Republicans left in this House to write a little poem about. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has been called neurotic by a distinguished Republican, and since that last effusion of his I am inclined to the opinion that he has been taking narcotics. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen on the other side who are opposing this investigation base their opposition upon what they term a lack of sincerity on this side to make the investigation. Will any Democrat in this House support them in this unwarranted contention?

This resolution states that the committee has the power to propose to the House all legislation relating to banking and currency, and then it expresses the desire to secure full and complete information regarding the banking and currency conditions of the country for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed. And this resolution authorizes the Committee on Banking and Currency to compel witnesses to come before it, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, to employ experts, counsel, and so forth; and not only that, the Speaker of this House is authorized to summon persons to appear before the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the most effective arguments made as to why we should have this investigation was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. Every Democrat in this House should vote with his party upon this question, if for no other reason, because of the speech made by the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman says that we have been talking about money trusts and other trusts for 16 years, when we were not in power in this House, and I desire to say to him that we are in power now in this House and we are going to make this investigation that you and your party have failed and refused to make for 16 years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Kansas would have us repudiate the action of the Democratic caucus and reflect upon the sincerity of the men who represent this side of the House on that committee. We propose to make this investigation, and we will not come back to the House with broken promises, as you have so frequently done. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This committee will make a thorough and honest investigation, and we will report whatever we find to this House. We will not do as you did in 1904, when you pretended to have Mr. Cortelyou, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, with the Bureau of Corporations in his hands, to investigate the trusts. He was chairman of the Republican campaign committee and a trust investigator at one and the same time. He went out investigating trusts with one hand and showing his badge as chairman of the Republican campaign committee with the other, and the trusts said, "How much do you want?" [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Where are all the facts gathered by Cortelyou regarding the oppressive trusts? Where is his report upon his findings? They sleep some where in the cashed-in checks of the Republican Party. His was a farcical investigation, and you are so accustomed to farcical investigations you can not believe that any other kind can be had. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You stand to-day branded all over with broken promises to the people, and during your reign great evils have sprung up in the Republic and this is the first time that the people have had an opportunity to get at these evils, and, by the eternal gods, we are going to get at them in spite of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman on the other side of the aisle complains of this resolution because it refers to only one-third of resolution 405. I want to say to those over there who believe in investigation of all subjects contained in resolution 405, if you will possess your souls in patience a little while we will start honest W. W. RUCKER, of Missouri, after the investigation of the collection and expenditure of campaign funds used in elections. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And then, when it comes to the antitrust question, I am sure we will give the distinguished and able chairman, HENRY D. CLAYTON, the power to investigate what is necessary as to the trusts and the laws necessary to take care of them. Then, when we get through with him, we will turn to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and we will give that committee all the power that is necessary to take up under that resolution and investigate the subject relating to interstate and foreign commerce, under the direction of the able chairman of the committee, Judge ADAMSON, of Georgia. And so I am sure, gentlemen, if you will just hold on for a little while and stand here and vote for these resolutions as they come in, and as I know you will do for this one, we will give you an investigation of these subjects that the American people have asked for for so many years while you were in power, and which you failed to give to them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in order to still the impatience of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENBOOT], I beg to read to the House a resolution which I have to-day introduced:

Resolved, That in order to obtain full and complete information in regard to proposed amendments of "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed, the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized and directed to make a full investigation thereof, including all matters touched upon in House resolution No. 405 within the jurisdiction of said committee, and said committee is authorized as a whole, or by subcommittee, to sit during sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ experts, counsel, accountants, and clerical and other assistants.

The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpoenas during the sessions or recess of Congress.

[Applause.]

And, I think, under this resolution my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I can get busy and do any necessary investigating. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and myself?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has 10½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to use some of his time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this resolution is that it is a false pretense. It is an insult to the intelligence of this House. It is a pretended proclamation upon the part of the Democratic Party in this House that they will undertake an investigation of the so-called Money Trust, and it is at the same time a refusal to adopt the resolutions that they have already pending that would enable them to make such investigation.

Now, what is this resolution? It is a substitute for House resolution 411. House resolution 411 is this:

Whereas the Committee on Banking and Currency is vested with the power to propose to the House all legislation relating to banking and currency; and

Whereas said committee is desirous of securing full and complete information regarding the banking and currency conditions of the country for the purpose of determining what legislation is needed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ experts, counsel, accountants, and clerical and other assistants.

That is the original resolution. The substitute is the same exactly as the original resolution, with this exception:

Including all matters touched upon in House resolution No. 405 within the jurisdiction of said committee.

Well, of course, I do not need to argue to an intelligent House that this supplementary resolution changes in no respect the original resolution, and adds nothing to the jurisdiction of the committee. If this resolution be passed to-day the committee will be authorized to investigate matters relating to banking and currency and to nothing else. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, then, will that investigation of matters relating to banking and currency be an investigation of the so-called Money Trust?

Let us see. We can find that out by going to resolution 405. That resolution No. 405—I can not undertake to go through it entirely—calls for the investigation of the financial operations of railroad corporations in the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It proposes an investigation of the issue and sale of securities and stocks, the control of deposits in various banks of the country, and the banking resources of the country. It proposes an investigation of the financial power or money power controlling the security and commodity markets of the country. It proposes an investigation of the New York Stock Exchange. It proposes an investigation of the New York Clearing House Association.

These are the matters that are to be investigated in connection with the investigation of the Money Trust, and not one of them is included in the resolution now before the House, brought here for the express purpose of trying to fool the House, of trying to fool the people, of trying to make the people believe that you are engaged in an investigation of the so-called Money Trust when you have not the courage to report resolutions which would have authorized you to investigate the Money Trust. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen of the majority, you do not want to investigate the Money Trust. If you did want to, why did you not report the resolutions now pending, which have been pending before the Committee on Rules since December last? The first of these resolutions was introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH]. He proposes to investigate the combinations controlling money and credits, violations of the banking laws, combinations to control deposits and the bank reserves. And, not satisfied with that resolution, which was pending for many months in the Committee on Rules, he introduced a second resolution, which enlarged the scope of the original resolution and authorized investigations into the flotations of the Amalgamated Copper Co.'s stock, the rise and fall of the prices of the stocks of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and of the Reading Railroad Co.; investigations with respect to the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., the New York Stock Exchange, the New York Clearing House Association, and all that sort of thing.

Why did you not report that resolution? It indicates what you understand by the Money Trust. And while that resolution was pending before the Committee on Rules the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] introduced another resolution, from which I read a few moments ago.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DALZELL. No; I regret I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DALZELL. And in that resolution he proposed the creation of a committee of seven, to be selected from the Committee on Ways and Means, from the Committee on the Judiciary, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, from the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, and some outside Members. An investigation of the Money Trust, according to the gentleman from Texas, required the exercise of the jurisdiction of all these committees. It extended far beyond the functions or power of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Now, do I need to stand here and argue that the measure of an investigation of the so-called Money Trust is to be found in the resolution presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, which your caucus instructed you not to report? Why, the resolution before the House to-day has been denounced in the public press as a fraud by the peerless leader of the Democratic Party, William J. Bryan. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

But, more than that, it has been denounced in the public press by the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the author of the Henry resolution himself. [Applause on the Republican side.] Let me read his statement to you. In a signed article, published in the Washington Post on Sunday, February 3, of this present year, Mr. HENRY says, complaining of information which was given out to the effect that he wanted to be chairman of the investigating committee:

This inspired information was given to the public for the plain purpose of arousing the members of the Banking and Currency Committee against me.

Then he goes on to say:

The truth is that only one-third of the matters provided for in my resolution pertain to the duties and jurisdiction of that committee and an equal third each goes respectively to the Judiciary and Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees, should the facts and frauds be uncovered, which I have promised the American people will be done if we can have a real investigation and not a sham.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

These discoverable facts will belong with equal pertinency to the jurisdiction of these three committees when we unearth them. Then, why send my resolution to the Banking and Currency Committee? Why?

Then he goes on:

A careful reading of my resolution will demonstrate that if a real investigation can be had, facts will be uncovered and established that throw a flood of light on other propositions than a simple currency law. It will unearth conditions and a system that will show the American people not only how to legislate on the currency bill now pending, but the trust problem and interstate-commerce corporations and railways.

So, I repeat, this resolution is on its face a sham. It has been denounced as a sham by your great leader, Mr. Bryan. It has been denounced as a sham by the chairman of the Committee on Rules, Mr. HENRY of Texas, who introduced the resolution. The Henry resolution for a real investigation has been repudiated by a Democratic caucus. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I want to say, before I surrender the floor, that I do not believe there is any Money Trust. I should vote against a resolution to investigate the Money Trust—an attack on business interests which would result in nothing but sensation—and, unlike my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I shall vote against this resolution, first, because there is no necessity for it—the Monetary Commission has already made thorough investigation—and, secondly, because it is a humbug and a sham. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, the honorable minority leader [Mr. MANN] suggests that the people demanding this investigation are pursuing a trust phantom. There was a time when men and parties could make the defense that there were no trusts; but the campaign slogan of Mark Hanna has been repudiated and the people have at last found out for themselves that there are trusts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There was a time when men and parties could take an evasive position on public questions; but there is a change and a new order of things in politics to-day, and the people are demanding not only that their Representatives define their positions on measures, but they are holding over them the rule that he who is not for prompt legislation is against legislation. [Applause.]

The Money Trust question is broader than the jurisdiction of any one standing committee. A full and complete investigation of necessity involves more than the manipulation of money. It includes matters relating to industrial and commercial organization, in the production, transportation, and sale of commodities, and every branch of commerce and trade in which there is competition to be effected and restrained by the illegal use of finances. Such an investigation calls for a committee clothed with jurisdiction to comprehend the broad ramifications to which the illegal use of money is carried. The disadvantages of a division of jurisdiction is that it will be taken advantage of to halt the progress of any investigation undertaken whenever valuable information is about to be disclosed, and the jurisdiction of another committee will be urged temporarily, not only for delay, but to prolong the proceedings and finally to defeat the investigation altogether.

But the Democratic Party has seen fit to undertake the investigation by subdivisions and in parts rather than by a comprehensive proceeding embracing the whole question. If a full examination is made, and a complete disclosure of the facts relating to the use of money and credits in the creation of trusts and monopolies is obtained, and the same is followed with the initiation of proper legislation to correct the evils of which the country complains, the plan adopted will receive the approval of the public. But the people will not accept from the party an apology that the several committees could not agree on their respective jurisdictions, nor that the shifting pleas and defenses, going to the want of authority in the committee seeking to obtain the testimony of witnesses or to compel the production of books and papers, frustrated and prevented a full examination and thereby made a fruitful investigation impossible.

I take issue with the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that the original committee resolution, No. 411, gives ample power for an investigation and is broader than the Henry resolution, No. 405. We promised the people if we were given power we would investigate the trusts and combinations in restraint of trade, and would initiate legislation to restore competition and remove the barriers against individual enterprise and equal opportunity. With this pledge to the people still echoing from the campaign the people were given resolution 411, which neither refers to trusts nor contemplates legislation to restrict combinations in restraint of trade, and which provides only that the Committee on Banking and Currency shall sit, without assigning an object or purpose for its sittings. It empowered this committee to do nothing. It authorized this committee to investigate nothing, and upon its very face was directed at nothing. If this resolution had been passed, it could have been well and truly said, Blessed are they who expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed.

The demands upon us is not that we proceed against illegal combinations in restraint of trade generally or indirectly, or without aim or purpose. The Republican Party pursued that policy and was recalled from power for insincerity of purpose. The demand upon us is that we investigate monopolies especially, directly, and with the end in view of initiating legislation to restore competition and remove the barriers against equal opportunity and freedom of enterprise and trade. The Henry resolution provided for all this and was a good-faith compliance with our party pledges to the people.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have witnessed many remarkable performances in this House, but the most unusual, the most novel spectacle upon which my eyes ever fell, was the spectacle of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] inveighing against the Democratic Party because it is not radical and sincere enough in its war upon the trusts. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] forgotten how, when he was chairman of the Rules Committee, resolution after resolution was presented to him to investigate known manifest abuses, which are now undenied by Members on this side or the other side of the House, and every one of those resolutions went to its eternal tomb and was buried in silence?

Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] forgotten how, when a resolution was offered both before the Judiciary Committee and before the Rules Committee, asking for an investigation of the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation, that resolution was reported over the objection of the President himself, over the objection of the Attorney General, by the Judiciary Committee, Republicans and Democrats, without a dissenting voice, saying there should be an investigation, saying that light should be thrown upon this question, saying that the Executive Department should tell the people the whole truth about this affair, and how the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] refused to report a resolution investigating the affairs of that concern? Yet now he rebukes and reproaches the Democratic Party for lack of sincerity. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The test of this investigation will be the conduct of it, and I am confident that after this investigation is concluded by the able men in whose hands it is placed, results will speak louder than the empty clamor of those who condemn these men before they are heard, and who are willing to throw suspicion upon their motives before they have any opportunity to know what their action will be. When their empty criticisms are forgotten, their work will stand to the eternal glory of the men who made the investigation, and the honor and integrity and patriotism of the great dominant party that ordered the investigation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, a good many crocodile tears have been shed, on one side of this aisle at least, over the Democratic harmony that prevails to-day on this resolution. I want to except from that statement the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has in a perfectly plain and candid way expressed his approval of the action that the majority takes to-day and his concurrence therein.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the burden of complaint sung by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], when measured carefully and boiled down, means insurgent discontent at Democratic harmony. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] These gentlemen insist that the resolution that this House is asking to pass will not authorize a real investigation. I challenge the assertion. I question the sincerity of gentlemen who dare make such a statement on the floor of this House.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not now.

Mr. LENROOT. Then do not question the statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the gentleman later, if I have time. This House can confer upon no committee, regular or special, any broader power than it possesses itself; and if this House has not conferred upon this committee as broad a power as the House of Representatives itself possesses, then I stand confessed as a defeated champion in this cause.

But what is the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency? All legislation, the rule says, that relates to banking and currency conditions in this country. What power is conferred by this resolution that the gentlemen so foolishly denounce as insincere? The power to investigate banking and currency conditions in the United States of America? What broader power could we give our committee, what broader power would the law sustain if we undertook to give the committee broader power? If gentlemen object, as they do, because it is plain that the procedure will necessitate the segregation of the Henry resolution into three or four parts, I want to say to gentlemen in perfect frankness, in perfect sincerity, that I know that there are many gentlemen who objected to this disposition of the matter in question on that ground. But it does not seem to me that the objection is well taken, if both sides of the argument are carefully weighed. When we remember that if a select committee is appointed its work must be submitted to the standing committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, then the argument against unnecessary duplication of work is so strong that it ought not to be lightly disregarded or carelessly set aside. For that reason, unless there is some reason to question either the integrity or intelligence of the Banking and Currency Committee, I submit that the Banking and Currency Committee ought to conduct this investigation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to order the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 106, answered "present" 6, not voting 111, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:
Until further notice:

Mr. COX of Indiana with Mr. JACKSON.

Mr. SHEPARD with Mr. BATES.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. GUDGER with Mr. LOUD.

Mr. TOWNSEND with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask if Mr. DOUGHTON is recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. FRENCH. I voted "aye," and I wish to withdraw the vote, as I have a pair with the gentleman, and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

REPRINT OF BILLS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the reprint of two short bills, the supply of which is exhausted. They are H. R. 12810 and H. R. 12811.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent for the reprint of the bills which he has mentioned. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department may sit during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOSS], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department, asks unanimous consent that the committee may sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will say, if the gentleman will permit, I shall not object to this request, but if a few more committees are given authority to sit during the sessions of the House, and exercise that authority, I am going to break up the practice by asking for a quorum in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR SUNDAY.

The SPEAKER designated Mr. ROTHERMEL to act as Speaker pro tempore of the House on Sunday, February 25, 1912.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on account of the election of some new Members to the House, and the committees being filled, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and myself have agreed that it would be well to add a Democratic Member to the Committee on Indian Affairs and a Republican Member to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, so as to take care of these new Members, as they can not be taken care of otherwise. And to carry that out, I ask unanimous consent that the rules of the House be changed so there may be an additional Member appointed to the Committee on Indian Affairs from the Democratic side of the House and an additional Member to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands from the Republican side of the House, just for this Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the rules of the House be so modified as to add an additional Democratic Member to the Committee on Indian Affairs and an additional Republican Member to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to extend only during this Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention to object, but if the consent goes through the way the gentleman asks it, if the next Congress should adopt the rules of this Congress—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I asked that it apply only to this Congress.

Mr. MANN. I know it could only apply to this Congress, anyhow. But there would be the additional number in the next Congress. Why does not the gentleman just make the request and omit the reference to the rule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It takes a change of the rules, but I will comply with the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. To leave out the rule part of that request?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] if we can agree on the amount of time to be allowed for general debate.

Mr. HARDWICK rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to raise the question of consideration on the gentleman's motion.

Mr. SHERLEY. The question of consideration comes on the motion itself. The House can vote it either up or down.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], that two and one-half hours on a side would be satisfactory. We may not use that amount of time, but there have been several requests for time on this side. Possibly some Members may not use it all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would say to the gentleman, frankly, that I will not agree to five hours' debate. I would be willing to agree to two hours to a side.

Mr. GOOD. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he is willing on Saturday night, at 20 minutes after 5, to quit as soon as he gets his bill up under his motion?

Mr. SHERLEY. Frankly, I would state to the gentleman that if I consulted my own preference I would be willing to stop, but at the instance of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON], on that side of the House, I have agreed to yield time to him for the discussion of a subject in which he is interested. He is desirous of addressing the House on a matter of some interest to the membership, a matter that will shortly be taken up before one of the committees, and he asked that he might be permitted to speak to-night. I understand he will not take more than 20 minutes' time.

Mr. MANN. I would like to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] on that question. It is a rather interesting question. But, to be frank with the gentleman, I do not desire to stay here longer this evening, and I do not think anyone else will.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that 20 minutes will not be a long time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a moment's time of the gentleman from Kentucky in which to explain my purpose in desiring to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I had an arrangement with the gentleman from Kentucky, who is in charge of the fortification bill, for time since Friday, but this filibuster of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERRY] and this extended debate on the resolution to investigate the Money Trust has taken up the entire time of two days.

I shall now merely make announcement of important hearings on my bill (H. R. 18720) to establish a legislative reference bureau in the Library of Congress.

Hearings on this very important measure will begin next Monday before the House Library Committee, at which there will appear such leading university men as Prof. Roscoe Pound, of Harvard University, and Dean William Draper Lewis, of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, who have given this legislative agency scientific study; such leading chiefs of legislative reference bureaus as Dr. Charles McCarthy, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Ernest Bruncken, former legislative reference librarian of the State of California, who have had years of experience with its practical operation; such heads of bureaus and departments of government in this city as Hon. E. Dana Durand, Director of the Census; Hon. C. P. Neil, Commissioner of Labor; and Dr. Frederick A. Cleveland, chairman President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, who realize how effective this agency will be in making more available for our needs the vast stores of information that these bureaus and departments contain; the Librarian of Congress, who will explain how this bureau will focus the vast resources of that magnificent library, with its millions of volumes, magazines, and periodicals, upon the questions before us; the leaders of all political parties in this House, Speaker CHAMP CLARK, Hon. JAMES R. MANN, and Hon. VICTOR BERGER, who will explain our utter lack of present facilities for legislative efficiency. And I am very glad to say that at my request and upon the direct invitation of the committee the British Ambassador, the Right Hon. James Bryce, has consented, as a matter of courtesy to the committee and to me, to appear and explain how the British Parliament avails itself of a similar agency in the preparation of the substance and the form of the statutes of Great Britain.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin, for his own information, where this hearing is to be held on Monday morning?

Mr. NELSON. I am very glad to inform the Speaker, inasmuch as he has consented to appear in behalf of the measure, that the hearing will be held in the minority room in the House Office Building, beginning at 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will renew my motion and ask unanimous consent that the general debate last for four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and two hours to be controlled by myself. As I stated before, I do not expect to hold the committee for any considerable length of time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] if he will agree that this shall be the only thing to come up here to-night?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I do not expect to hold the committee for any length of time, but the limitation of time for general debate is a matter for the House to decide, and I am perfectly indifferent as to whether unanimous consent is given on that proposition or not.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am simply asking the gentleman a question for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 20111, the fortifications appropriation bill; and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. Is there objection to this request?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. SHERLEY was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore agreed to, adjourned until Sunday, February 25, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 25, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ROTHERMEL.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee for the spark of divinity which Thou hast implanted in the breast of man which lifts him above the brute creation, binds him indissolubly to Thee, insures the immortality of the soul, and points the way to eternal bliss; hence "in the night of death hope sees a star and listening love catches the rustle of wings." "We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial; we should count time by heart throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

We are met in memory of one who made his mark in the business world, served his country on the floor of this House, and has passed on to the larger life, leaving a void in the hearts of those who knew him best and will cherish his memory for what he was—a lover of men and ever ready to assist those who sought his aid and counsel. Comfort those, we beseech Thee, who mourn him, help them to copy his virtues, and especially be near to those who are near and dear in the bonds of kinship.

Prepare us all for the change that waits upon us, that we may go forward with brave and manly hearts.

We know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

Thus we believe, thus we trust in Thee, O God our heavenly Father, through Him who is the resurrection and the life. Amen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal.
Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members have leave to print for 10 days in connection with these ceremonies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 431.

Resolved, That in pursuance with the special order heretofore adopted the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a faithful and distinguished public servant, the House at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP was born in Green Township, Pike County, Pa., on March 28, 1847, and was consequently in the sixty-fifth year of his age at the time of his death. Like many men who have risen to prominence in the affairs of our country, his youth was spent in struggles and hardships through which was laid the foundation for his future. He was successful in business, not as some have been because they have risen upon the failures of others, but because of the strength of his own character, the keenness of his own perceptions, and the strictness of his integrity. He was a man of the highest honor. I can recall an instance within a year when he and some of his associates were considering the advisability of making a certain political move, when he said to his associates:

I know your purpose to be right—I am in hearty accord with it—but I have made some pledges to my people and I do not know whether or not they will view this act as being in violation of those pledges, and until I have consulted them and found what their viewpoint is relative to my pledges I can not go with you.

I cite that as an illustration of his strict construction of honorable action. To him was not given the gift of oratory. He could not sway the multitude with the elegance of his diction, the beauty of his rhetoric, the logical sequence of his conclusions from an accepted premise, or by the keenness of his repartee, but what is of more importance to mankind he knew how to work in a systematic and effective way to secure the objects he sought to attain.

To each man's life there comes a time supreme—
One day, one night, one morning, or one noon,
One rift through which sublime fulfillments gleam,
One freighted hour, one moment opportune,
One once when fate goes floating with the stream,
One time between too late too soon.
Ah, happy he who knowing how to wait
Knows also how to work and watch, and stand
On life's broad deck alert and at the prow,
To seize the passing moment big with fate
From opportunity's extended hand
When the great clock of destiny strikes now!

GEORGE W. KIPP was one of those men who stood on life's broad deck, alert and at the prow. He knew how to wait and work and watch with consummate patience to seize the passing moment big with fate from opportunity's extended hand, not for the selfish purpose of personal aggrandizement, but with purer object of promoting the public weal. Those who know the work of the House of Representatives and the enormous amount of detail that must be done in the committee rooms in perfecting measures for presentation to the House realize the importance of such men as Mr. KIPP in securing effective legislation. There his business training and his knowledge of men and affairs were invaluable.

None knew him but to love him,
None knew him but to praise.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, it is in the committee rooms of the House that we make the closest acquaintances and form the nearest friendships. I would have had perhaps only a speaking acquaintance with Hon. GEORGE W. KIPP, of Pennsylvania, save that in the Sixty-second Congress he became a member of the Committee on Agriculture. From the first he manifested great interest in the work and asked me a number of questions touching the scope and usefulness thereof.

A day or two before his untimely death I received a letter from him, and I have thought that perhaps this was the last business letter he wrote. He impressed me from the first as a plain, unpretentious, unassuming business man, generous to a degree, and full of the milk of human kindness.

It happened that I was one of the several Members of this House selected to meet his remains at Towanda, his home town in Pennsylvania. The impressive ceremonies, conducted in part by the fraternity of Masons, the solemn pageant winding its way to the last resting place near the banks of the Susquehanna, the sad mourners of every degree and walk in life, impressed a stranger like myself and caused me to inquire what were the sources of this man's influence and from whence came his power to invoke the reverence, confidence, and love of that people.

During the ceremonies at his funeral a striking impressive and pathetic prayer was offered by a minister of some church. That prayer revealed to me the secret of the man's life. I carried the keynote of the prayer in my mind for days and said to myself, GEORGE W. KIPP was strong with these people because he loved them and was frank in all of his dealings with them. One of our colleagues from Pennsylvania confirmed this judgment a few days ago, when he said to me, "GEORGE W. KIPP helped his people regardless of their politics. This was the source of his popularity."

Feeling that good taste required that I leave to those closer to him to tell of his life and character and services to his people, I thought it would be well to secure a copy of the prayer offered at his funeral. It is a reverential tribute to the dead and a touching expression of sympathy for the living.

PRAYER OFFERED AT THE FUNERAL SERVICES OF HON. G. W. KIPP, AUGUST 3, 1911, BY REV. J. M. JOHNSTON.

O Thou who driest the mourner's tear,
How dark this world would be
If, when deceived and wounded here,
We could not fly to Thee!

The friends who in our sunshine live,
When winter comes are flown;
And he who has but tears to give,
Must weep those tears alone.

But Thou wilt heal that broken heart,
Which, like the plants that throw
Their fragrance from the wounded part,
Breathes sweetness out of woe.

Oh who could bear life's stormy doom
Did not Thy wing of love
Come brightly wafting through the gloom,
Our peace branch from above?

Then sorrow, touched by Thee, grows bright
With more than rapture's ray,
As darkness shows us worlds of light
We never saw by day.

Yes, there are friends who when winter comes "are flown," but we thank Thee for the human friends who remain for such a time as this; and we feel that in this sorrow-stricken home they are in evidence, as is manifest in their expressions of sympathy, in their presence, in their floral tributes, in their tears, and in their prayers. But we also feel that after they have done the best that sincere and loving hearts can do, there is still the aching void which only Thou canst fill; hence in this hour of mystery and grief we turn to Thee.

We thank Thee for the life of this man, for the place he filled in society, in business, in politics, and in home. We thank Thee for the endearing home ties that bound him and his loved ones together. We thank Thee for the long and busy life he led, for his acknowledged business abilities, for the generous, benevolent, and human feelings which characterized him, that no one whom he could favor was turned empty away.

We thank Thee for the stand he took for civic righteousness and for the public-spirited man he was. We pray that these many good traits we may emulate and what faults there were we may bury in the sea of forgetfulness. We further ask that Thou wilt honor us with Thy blessing this day in these services.

We bespeak for the friends and neighbors whose presence and thoughtfulness have done much to alleviate our sorrows Thy friendly recognition. Give Thy blessing also to the men with whom in organizations, in social, in business, and in political life the deceased associated; write it on their hearts that they, too, must die.

Bless, O God, the Nation which we all so dearly love and for whose principles this man stood so firmly. Make it a Nation noted for righteousness, that it may be exalted. Bless our President, his Cabinet, those who make and execute our laws, and may these men in high places deal fairly with their constituents, their country, and their God. Bless this town and vicinity on which this great sorrow has fallen, and may the community rise to the high ideal this man had in view for it and to which end he planned and contributed.

God bless those who are so near to this man by the ties of kin and have been so suddenly touched by this dispensation of Providence; be strength to the brothers and sisters, the circle of which death has not invaded for many years; may they be made to feel their days, too, are numbered. Bless these dear little grandchildren; they may not realize their loss now, but who sooner or later will miss the kindnesses lavished upon them by a grandfather's love and indulgence. And especially would we bring in our arms of faith these the daughters of the deceased and lay them at Thy feet for Thy sympathy and help. They are indeed bereft; doubly so, as so recently their dear mother was taken; but, commensurate with their sorrow, be Thou their comfort and stay. In the absence of the earthly father, may they lean all the more on the everlasting arms of the heavenly Father.

Bless Thy servant in the message of admonition and consolation he will bring to us, and prepare our hearts to receive it. Go with us to the resting place of the dead, and on the return meet these sorrowing ones at the portal, and with Thine own hallowed presence fill the vacancy caused by the demise of this father. And to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost we will give thanks, praise, and ourselves forever. Amen.

There are two assets in life that men enjoy and through which they impress their fellows and win success. One is wealth; the other, friends. Our deceased colleague possessed both. A man possessing wealth without friends is poor indeed, while possessing good friends with little wealth he may be counted rich. When a youth I heard a man of large possessions say to a neighbor, "Make money and you will have friends." I lived to see this man count his friends on the fingers of one hand. He heaped up riches and lost his friends.

I do not know what estate our colleague left, but do know from what I saw and heard at Towanda that he died rich in friends.

In the hour of distress and misery the eye of every mortal turns to friendship; in the hour of gladness and conviviality, what is your want? It is friendship. When the heart overflows with gratitude or with any other sweet and sacred sentiment, what is the word to which it would give utterance? A friend.

Everything I observed and learned during my short stay in Towanda impressed me with the fact that a spirit of friendliness prevailed there. All party spirit seemed dead in the awful mystery we call death. The greater mystery of life I noted in strange faces and new scenery. Art and architecture gave an interest. A splendid county building, in front of which stood a statue on which was engraved emblems dedicated to truth and justice, attracted my attention. I examined the records and archives within.

Men whom I met in conflict 50 years ago welcomed me as a friend and brother. One high in authority spoke admiringly of Robert E. Lee even as I had heard Pennsylvanians speak in 1863. A week later I had the pleasure of sending him a life of Lee which he expressed a desire to read.

While it was a sad duty I was commissioned with my colleagues to perform, I was glad to meet the friends who had sent him here and learn that they trusted him because he was honest, loved him because he was faithful and true, and honored his memory because he was generous and benevolent and never turned empty away a worthy applicant for his favor.

It is the spirit in which we act that is the highest matter. It is the spirit of a man that gives him tone and character.

A spirit of friendliness was the leading trait in the character of Mr. KIPP. For the most part, it is the American spirit to-day—cultivated and encouraged through every available source it will save our civilization, neglected some Gibbon will write our decline and fall.

WHAT MIGHT BE DONE.

By Charles Mackay.

What might be done if men were wise—
What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
Would they unite
In love and right,
And cease their scorn of one another?

Oppression's heart might be imbued
With kindling drops of loving kindness;
And knowledge pour
From shore to shore
Light on the eyes of mental blindness.

All slavery, warfare, lies, and wrongs,
All vice and crime, might die together;
And wine and corn,
To each man born,
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The meanest wretch that ever trod,
The deepest sunk in guilt and sorrow,
Might stand erect
In self-respect
And share the teeming world to-morrow.

What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this, my suffering brother—
More than the tongue
E'er said or sung,
If men were wise and loved each other.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune upon entering Congress last April to find that the late GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, of Pennsylvania, and myself had many mutual friends. Representing adjoining districts, although living in different States, we found that we had many interests in common, and thus began an acquaintance which I had learned to value highly before he started on that western trip from which he never returned alive.

Mr. KIPP was preeminently a representative of the people. He had not the advantages of a college education, but he was a graduate of the school of experience, and he learned to so handle matters through this training that he was a very successful man in this world's affairs. He was an excellent type of an American. Of the advantages that came to him from environment he made the best of use. His services in both public and private life were considerable and proved that he was a fitting representative of the people. He was twice elected a Member of this House in a district normally opposed to him politically, demonstrating the worth in which he was held by the community in which he lived.

In his death the State of Pennsylvania has lost a representative worthy of her best traditions, the House of Representatives a man of sterling character and highest integrity, while we, his friends, have lost a valued companion and counselor.

He was faithful and earnest in the discharge of his official duties. He was disposed to be fair and independent in all important matters and rose to the full standard of a man. His career demonstrates what a man of energy and industry can accomplish and how he can climb the ladder in this favored land of ours.

It was my privilege to be one of the committee appointed by the Speaker to represent this House at the last sad rites said over our departed colleague. The services were largely attended by friends for miles around, not only from the counties of his immediate district, but adjoining ones, and the neighboring State of New York was well represented. The regret was deep and sincere, and the general expression was that he was an unusual man and that it had been a privilege to have known him as a friend.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is an undisputed fact that all men are born to die. The sacred pages of God's Book, the Holy Bible, declare that "it is appointed unto man once to die"; that "man that is born of a woman is of a few days and full of trouble; he cometh forth like a flower and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not." We need only look around us, on every hand, to see the work of death. Observation has taught us that even the long-lived and towering oak will eventually fall and decay. The sweet-smelling and many-colored flowers at our feet flourish for a time, then wither and die. One season in this changeable climate of ours will teach us that the life of everything in nature can be extinguished by one cold breath from the lungs of that unwelcome visitor, death. And so it is with the life of human kind. The hallowed graveyards on the hills and in the vales, the crowded cemeteries in the cities and in the towns, go to prove but one mournful truth, that "life is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, then vanisheth away." And it is to be observed in this day and generation that "pale death, with impartial footsteps, knocks alike at the poor man's hut and the palace of kings."

To-day we see a multitude of sorrowing friends follow the remains of a beloved one to the grave, and scarcely have the echoes of the funeral march that sounded his dirge died away till we see another and another and still another being borne to his last resting place.

There were two particular things in the life of GEORGE W. KIPP that impressed me. My acquaintance with him was not long. My office number is 356 and his was 354, and it gave me an opportunity to see something of his life. One thing that impressed me more than anything else, and which I know most impressed every other man who knew him, was his wonderful regard, his wonderful kindness, to the boys—to the little fellows. My son visited me during last summer, and Mr. KIPP was the one person more than myself who looked after that boy of mine. He among others was the one particular person who thought that a child amounted to something in this world. And whenever you can find a man who has some feeling, some regard, for a child, you find in him something that is a little bit bigger than you find in the ordinary man.

The other thing about Mr. KIPP which impressed me was his conception of responsibility in life. He thought that he was a man. He actually believed in himself, and the very fact that he did believe in himself was the very thing that made him great, and big, and strong, just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. UNDERHILL] has described him. That is the thing that amounted to something up in his congressional district; that is the thing that made him big there, and that will always make a man big wherever he happens to be. He was a man among men, and his reelection in a strong Republican district testifies that fact.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay my last tribute to the memory of my friend GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, who has solved the great mystery, who has been called to the bar of eternity to give the record of his life. And these few brief words of mine are the garlands of flowers that I place at his tomb. I first met GEORGE W. KIPP when sitting as a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee of the Sixtieth Congress. I found him to be my nearest neighbor, and his participation in the work of the committee discovered to me his hard common sense as well as the softer side of his nature, for he was always interested in forwarding the interests of those men, women, and children whom he styled "the Nation's wards." The acquaintance thus begun ripened into a friendship which I shall always cherish and which continued until his death. In the language of the phrase maker, he was essentially a man's man, and his society was always sought by a large company of his colleagues who had learned as I had to love him for his sterling qualities of mind and heart. I was proud of the fact known to many that I possessed in a great degree the affection and esteem of my dead friend, and because of this an intimacy grew up between us which I shall always preserve as one of the benefits I enjoyed as a Member of this House.

GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP came up from the soil. He was one of and always in intimate touch with the common people. He was educated in the great university of the common people—the public school. He was a self-made man. Compelled to make his own way in life, he started as a lumberman and mastered every detail of that business. He prospered, grew rich, and soon branched out into other fields of endeavor, and in each he was an unqualified success. Always a Democrat and always manifesting an interest in public affairs, he on more than one occasion was his party's standard bearer, and invariably led it to success despite the fact of his party being in the minority. In 1906 his Democratic neighbors nominated him for Congress, and he succeeded in defeating a strong and popular adversary, and I am glad to say his greatest majority came from his home county, strongly Republican, where he was best known. The presidential tide ran strong against the Democrats in Pennsylvania in 1908 and Mr. KIPP was defeated for his second term by a narrow majority. Renominated in 1910, it was my pleasure to spend a brief week campaigning on his behalf, and in going up and down his district I soon learned that his constituents knew and appreciated the rugged honesty and strong character of the Democratic candidate, and I was assured on every side by men of every shade of political opinion that my friend would once more receive at the hands of his neighbors a trust to execute in the Nation's capital as their representative. He was elected by a substantial majority, and was but fairly launched upon his second term when death beckoned his gaunt finger and he was gone.

Many men of many minds, of varied accomplishments, come into this House as Representatives, some of whom are preceded by the bubbles "reputation," "fame." Some come from high offices in their native States, some from strong positions in the business world. All play their part—pass on, some to greater reputations, others to oblivion. My dead friend came into this House as a business man of large experience, the possessor of a fortune honestly won. He was plain, unostentatious, absolutely without pretense. Unknown to him was the desire to bask in the spotlight of notoriety. He was desirous only of doing well and thoroughly the task that lay at hand, be it great or small, and in passing he left behind a reputation for that greatest of all good qualities—common sense. It would be folly to talk of him as brilliant or as eloquent, and none would sooner reject such fulsome praise than he. It was my privilege to know my friend in his comfortable home, in the beautiful little city of Towanda, tucked away in the Pennsylvania hills. He was a kind father and an indulgent and loving husband to a wife who was long an invalid. I spent several days with him in his native town, and could not help but note that he was known and admired by every man, woman, and child within its confines, and he was never too busy to exchange kindly greetings with the laborer upon the street, nor was it the fawning smile or fulsome speech of the politician, but the kindly, neighborly salute which bespoke a large and generous heart. He died suddenly when far from home. I was not permitted the sad privilege of attending his funeral, but I recall him now in my mind's eye when last I saw him, the picture of a man in full health as he came into my office one day last summer to say good-by, as he was starting then on what proved to be the journey from whence he never returned. Although past 60, he looked in the prime of life. I never saw him again. God rest his brave soul.

Green be the turf above thee,
Friend of my better days;
None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee but to praise.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I would do violence to my feelings and sentiments if I did not say a word in this place where we are gathered to pay our tribute to the memory of my distinguished predecessor.

I am at a loss for words with which to clothe my thoughts. Paradoxical though it may seem, we were drawn together by the laws of disassociation. We were of opposite political views and we came in close contact at no point, either in our business or political affairs, yet I knew him well and admired him greatly.

Many times since his decease, as I thought of him and of the influences of his life, I have wondered whether we are not placing a wrong emphasis upon what we call disagreements.

No longer is it safe to say that men traveling in opposite directions may not reach the same destination. In the material realm Galileo forced us to accept this apparently contradictory truth. Yet in the rush and stress of this life we give tardy recognition to the same principle when there are differences of opinion in the moral or political realm.

It is on occasions like this, where the prejudices and passions are stilled and our minds and hearts unite in sympathetic harmony, that we weigh things as they really are, and we find that after all our so-called differences, which too frequently stir the head and embitter the tongue, are merely the eastward or westward journeyings we elect to take, whereby we encompass the circle of honest effort to find that either way may bring us to a common goal.

I was curious to know and took great pains to ascertain, not in anticipation of this memorial gathering, but because I like to understand the real sources of the power underlying the successes of such a life and its activities, what were the personal factors which upon two occasions wrested the old Wilmot-Grow congressional district from its strongly tied party moorings and carried it into the harbor of the party to which he belonged.

I found that Mr. KIPP realized in his life the solution of the great problem of personal influence—sympathy—and yet he probably never gave a moment's thought to it; it was spontaneous, it was a part of the man himself, for there can be no counterfeit of this, it must be inwrought. He liked men.

The genuinely humanitarian spirit, outwardly manifested in the kindly handshake and sympathetic expression, was his. The bluff, but hearty, helpfulness with which he aided many a man over the last lift of the hill brought him a host of friends. As these kindly offices were without political thought or limitation the result was inevitable. There is more potency in a real handshake than in a great law. These men with whom he came in contact believed in the man; they relied upon his honesty of purpose, and because thereof they followed him, irrespective of any political differences.

GEORGE W. KIPP had great interest in mankind, and for them he had great purposes. He was a man of the people, desiring to serve the interests of the common people, and my last tribute to his memory is that he reached the goal of that ambition.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is futile to pay tribute to the dead, for we all know the answer to the query of the poet Gray:

Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flattery soothe the dull, cold ear of death?

And yet it is altogether fitting and proper, it seems to me, that we should pause in the day's occupation to lay upon the closed grave of one of our colleagues the wreaths of love and honor gathered from the garlands of memory, and in any meeting, Mr. Speaker, called to do honor to GEORGE W. KIPP I could not sit silent, however inadequate my tribute might be.

He was my lifelong friend, and before me my father claimed his friendship for many years. He was born in the district which I now have the honor to represent upon this floor, within 30 miles of my own home, for he first saw the light of day in Green Township, Pike County, Pa. There the old Kipp homestead has fallen to decay, but beside its ruins there still stands the old-fashioned stone chimney, which years and years ago crept up the outside of the house to the gabled roof, and which is to-day pointed out by the old neighbors of the family to strangers and travelers as a sort of monument to him who lived to be known as the county's foremost and favorite son.

And he was properly known as such, Mr. Speaker, for any man who would observe the humble surroundings of his birth and his early life must be struck with the contrast between what they presented and this scene where he spent his last days, here in the Capital of the Nation, in the most important parliamentary body on earth, where he represented a constituency as intelligent as any upon our American soil, and sat in a seat which had once been honored by the great David Wilmot, author of the Wilmot Proviso, and by Galusha A. Grow, a former Speaker of this House. That contrast illustrates a sum of human achievement in which any community might well take pride.

There, in Pike County, amid humble surroundings and with limited and restricted opportunities for intellectual advancement and education along any line, Mr. KIPP grew to manhood's estate. Recognizing the limitations of the neighborhood, with a laudable ambition to succeed in large endeavors, he soon moved where present opportunities seemed to be greater and for some years lived in Wayne County, where he was honored by his fellow citizens by being chosen to fill various important positions in the local government. But again opportunity beckoned and the way was opened for him to move elsewhere, and he finally became a citizen of the thriving town of Towanda, in Bradford County, Pa. There, Mr. Speaker, he spent the last 30 years of his life, and lived to be known as the first citizen of the place.

My observation has been that in country communities such as that, if a visitor would find the man who possesses in largest degree the confidence and trust of his fellow citizens he must look to the leading banking institution of the community and inquire for its head or its most influential member or officer. The success of a bank, especially in the country districts, depends entirely upon the character of the men who are in charge of the institution, and their reputation for honesty, fidelity, and integrity is the very best asset of any such bank. Mr. KIPP naturally moved forward to such a position in that community, and the institution of which he was for many years the chief and directing official acquired a reputation throughout all that section of the State largely because of the universal confidence and trust which were placed in him by the people of that entire community.

I have said that Mr. KIPP represented the same constituency that for years in the early days was represented here by two such great men as Wilmot and Grow. Mr. KIPP never reached the important place upon the stage of public life which was held by those, his distinguished predecessors. He was not a great man. He was not a great statesman. He laid no claim to being either. He made no false pretense for his work in public or private station. But he was a loyal, faithful public servant, ever mindful of his people's best interests, ever devoted to the principles of the political party to which he owed allegiance, and ever careful of the welfare of our common country.

It is undoubtedly true, Mr. Speaker, that some of the best work in this body has been done by men who have never been known as statesmen. The longer I live, the more I come in contact with men of affairs, the more I see of the workings of government, the more convinced I am that, after all, the man is the thing. There is no influence so potent in this House as the character of men. There is no engine for good or for ill which exerts anything like the influence upon public affairs in the legislative and executive departments of the Government as that force which we know as the "personal equation." We have seen many a good measure go down to defeat because it was managed or fathered by bad men, in whom others failed to have confidence. We have seen bad measures become laws because good men, in mistaken zeal, have taken them up and pushed them through to their final fruition. We have seen governments go wrong when bent upon proper quests because they were led by men of selfish designs; and the safety of our country in its future and the happiness and welfare of our children, the very salvation of the Republic, are more dependent upon the character of the men who are now being reared to manhood and are taking an interest in public affairs out in the country than upon the solution of the problems with which we are dealing here to-day. Our efforts here are but temporary and transitory, and will solve the problems which now beckon for solution with compelling force, only for a day, or a month, or a year. But back home, amongst the hills, throughout the length and breadth of the land, is being reared the citizenship which must permanently solve these problems in the future, and it will be dependent upon the character of that citizenship as to how they shall be solved and as to how our Republic shall go on to its destiny.

I have digressed thus far to comment upon what I conceive to be the paramount influence in this body in order to lead up to this statement, that in Mr. KIPP his people possessed a Representative who measured up to everything that could be expected of a man when he throws the weight of his personal influence into legislative matters in this Congress. He reached the standard of usefulness; he filled the true measure of conscientious, patriotic effort. His ideals were high, his purposes were noble, his plans absolutely unselfish and disinterested; and in his death not alone his people, but his State and his country, have lost a valued public servant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. AINLEY). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL] is recognized.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay a tribute of affection to the late GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, formerly a Representative from Pennsylvania. On July 26, 1911, it became my painful duty to announce to the House his sudden and unexpected death, which had occurred on Vancouver Island, in British Columbia, on the 24th. On January 19, by special order, the 25th day of February, 1912, was set apart for these memorial services.

Congressman KIPP was born in Pike County, Pa., March 28, 1847, where he continued to live with his parents until he reached his majority, working on the farm, and where he began the manufacturing of lumber. His life from the beginning was a strenuous one; his means of education were limited. I know of no school from which he graduated except the university of nature.

My personal acquaintance with him commenced with his services in the House of Representatives in December, 1907. I had known him prior thereto by reputation as one of the noble sons of the great State of Pennsylvania. He was known as one of the successful business men of that State, who was fair in all his dealings between man and man and who dearly loved the common people, whose respect and confidence he enjoyed throughout his entire life.

When I first became acquainted with him I was impressed with his genial good nature, his wonderful business capacity, combined with good common sense, and his honesty and sincerity of purpose. His keen sense of justice endeared him to the people far beyond the confines of the district which he had the honor to represent in the House. His reputation was State wide before he came to Congress, and he soon became prominent as a national figure.

I feel that I have lost a friend, and I know the Members of this House and the people of the country have lost a friend. My friendship with him became so pronounced that it almost ripened into inseparable companionship during the sessions of Congress. It may well be said of him he was "a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

He believed that the two great factors which rule the business world are capital and labor, and that labor is the more important of the two.

After his election to the Sixty-second Congress I asked him how he had overcome such an overwhelming Republican majority in his district, and he replied: "I have been in business in that part of the State for many years and employed a great many people, and I don't believe I could find one that voted against me. They have confidence in me and I had in them."

His love of justice, which he put into practice, endeared him to his fellow men.

He was just and true to labor, and always maintained that that is the only way to restore confidence between employer and employee.

As a legislator he was a success. He was proud of his constituents and attended to their wants in the minutest detail. He carefully guarded the interest of his State, and above all he loved his country and believed it was destined to become the greatest in the world, if the rights of the common people were properly guarded. He believed in the unwritten law of manifest destiny. He believed that in governments as in nature nothing is stationary, but that there is an onward movement in the course of evolution. In short, he was a wise, patriotic, and constructive statesman.

He was a devoted husband and often affectionately referred to his beloved wife, who had passed to the great beyond about a year before his death. He was an indulgent father. He was a public-spirited and progressive citizen. Of him it may be said: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROTHERMEL). In accordance with the resolutions heretofore adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Congressman KIPP, the House will stand adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, February 26, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

Monday, February 26, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

INTERSTATE TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to introduce a bill, which is an enlargement of the interstate trade commission bill which I introduced at the last session.

It provides, not only as that bill did, for the change of the Bureau of Corporations into an interstate trade commission with three commissioners, of whom the Commissioner of Corporations shall be one, with powers of visitation, examination, investigation, and publicity similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but also makes the commission an aid to the court in carrying out its decrees under the Sherman anti-trust law and in the dissolution and reorganization of condemned corporations. It also enables the commission to act upon its own initiative, or the complaint of any person, or at the request of the Attorney General in investigating any corporation charged with the violation of the act creating the commission or the antitrust act, and gives the condemned corporation 60 days within which to readjust itself to the requirements of the law. It expressly provides, however, that nothing in the bill shall interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing the antitrust act. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill (S. 5485) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

A bill (S. 5485) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be referred to and cited as the interstate trade commission act. Corporations a majority of whose voting securities is held or owned by any corporation subject to the terms of this act are referred to herein as subsidiaries of such holding or owning corporation.

SEC. 2. That on and after the — day of —, 1912, the Bureau of Corporations shall be separated from the Department of Commerce and Labor, and shall be thereafter known as the interstate trade commission, and all of the powers, duties, and funds belonging or pertaining to the Bureau of Corporations shall thereafter belong and pertain to the interstate trade commission. And all the officials and employees of said bureau shall be thereupon transferred to the interstate trade commission. The said commission shall also have a secretary, a chief clerk, and such other and additional employees as shall be provided by law.

SEC. 3. That the interstate trade commission shall consist of three members, of whom no more than one shall belong to the same political party. The Commissioner of Corporations holding the office on the said — day of —, 1912, shall be ex officio a member of the commission for the first three years of its existence, and shall also be chairman of the commission for the first year of its existence, and thereafter the chairman shall be selected annually by the commission from its membership; and the then Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall be the secretary of the commission for the first year of its existence, and thereafter the secretary shall be selected by the commission; and after the organization of the commission the titles and offices of Commissioner of Corporations and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations, respectively, shall cease to exist. The remaining two members of the commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the terms of such commissioners so first appointed shall be six and nine years, respectively, and shall be so designated by the President in making such appointments; and thereafter all the commissioners shall hold office for the term of nine years, and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member of said commission shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The secretary shall receive a salary of — thousand dollars a year.

SEC. 4. That every corporation heretofore or hereafter organized within the United States or doing business therein whose annual gross receipts, inclusive of the annual gross receipts of its subsidiaries, if any, exceed $5,000,000, and engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting corporations subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and excepting banking and trust companies, but including pipe-line companies, shall, within four months after this act takes effect, or, if organized or otherwise becoming subject to this act subsequent to such taking effect hereof, then within two months after so becoming subject to this act, furnish to the commission in writing statements showing such facts as to its organization, financial condition, and operations as may be prescribed by the commission to be made in pursuance of this act. Similar statements shall be made by its subsidiaries. Such statements shall be made as of such date as may be prescribed by the commission and shall be verified under oath by such officers of such corporation as may be prescribed by the said regulations.

SEC. 5. That all corporations subject to this act, and their respective subsidiaries, shall from time to time furnish to the commission such information, statement, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, and management at such time, to such degree and extent, and in such form as may be prescribed by the commission; and the commission at all reasonable times, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall have complete access to all records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers of such corporations, including the records of any of their executive or other committees. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporation subject to this act, or of any of its subsidiaries, to comply with the terms of this section or of section 4 within 60 days after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission requiring such compliance, shall constitute a misdemeanor, and upon conviction such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

SEC. 6. That the commission shall from time to time make public the information received under this act in such form and to such extent as shall be prescribed by the commission: Provided, however, That the commission shall, so far as possible, distinguish between information which is purely private and the publication of which can serve no public interest and such information as is not so private and is of importance to the public.

SEC. 7. That the district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure to comply with such order of the commission or alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of this act by any corporation subject thereto, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or injunction or other order enforcing such order of the commission or commanding such corporation to comply with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That the said commission may at any time, if in the opinion of the commission public necessity requires such action, order and require any corporation engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, except corporations subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and excepting banking and trust companies, but including pipe-line companies, to make such statements and give such information as is prescribed in sections 4 and 5 of this act, which information shall be published in accordance with the provisions of section 9 hereof. The commission may also obtain from any such corporation, through the powers granted in section 8 hereof, such information as shall enable said commission to determine whether such corporation is subject to the terms of this act. The decisions of the said commission made under the powers conferred upon it in this act shall be final, except as to matters involving the taking of private property without due process of law and involving the question whether the order is within the scope of the authority under which it purports to have been made.

SEC. 9. That in order to accomplish the purposes declared in sections 5 and 8 of this act the said commission shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations subject to this act as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said act to regulate commerce and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers, so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpoena and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said act to regulate commerce and by an act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplementary to said act to regulate commerce; and the act defining immunity, approved June 30, 1906, shall also apply to all persons who may be subpoenaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by sections 5 and 8 hereof.

SEC. 10. That the said commission shall, on or before the — day of — in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 11. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 12. That in case a final decree shall be issued against any corporation under the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, the court entering such decree or the Attorney General may intrust the enforcement of such decree and the prescribing of all necessary details thereunder to said commission, which shall have power to so enforce such decree and provide for all arrangements, transactions, and organizations necessary to carry out to the full extent the said decree: Provided, That such court may, in its discretion, refer to the commission its decree, with instructions to take such evidence, consider such facts, and report such findings as to method of dissolution and reorganization as the commission shall consider best fitted to completely carry out such decree, and report the same back to such court for its action.

SEC. 13. That the said commission may at any time, upon complaint of any person, corporation, or body, or upon its own initiative, or upon the request of the Attorney General, investigate any corporation engaged in interstate trade for the purpose of determining whether such corporation has been guilty of a violation of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of "An act to reduce taxation," etc., which became a law August 27, 1894, or of any of the provisions of this act, and may hold such hearings and take such evidence as it may deem necessary; and in case the commission shall find that such corporation has been guilty of a violation of the provisions of said acts or of this act it shall make a finding, stating the facts, and prescribing the acts, transactions, and readjustments necessary in order that said corporation may thereafter comply with the terms of said acts and of this act, and shall transmit a copy of the said finding in full to such corporation. If within 60 days after transmitting said finding, or such extension thereof as shall be given by the commission, the corporation shall not have complied with the terms of the finding, and shall not have performed the acts prescribed as necessary to make it comply with the said acts or with this act, the commission shall report the fact of noncompliance to the Attorney General, together with a copy of such finding, for his action under the said acts or of this act. But the commission may, if it deems it proper, report the facts to the Attorney General without calling upon such corporation for compliance with said acts or with this act.

Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing the provisions of the act to protect commerce, etc., approved July 2, 1890.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I also introduce a bill, which was drawn by Edgar H. Farrar, of New Orleans, late president of the American Bar Association, at the suggestion of the Interstate Commerce Committee, before which he recently appeared. This bill prescribes the conditions upon which State corporations may engage in interstate commerce. These prohibitions apply to holding companies, to corporations with interlocking directors, to corporations whose stocks or securities have been watered, to corporations which control an undue proportion of any business, and to corporations which seek to stifle competition by unfair practices.

This bill is on lines similar to those of the bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and other proposals before the committee looking to the reformation of the loose corporation laws of the States, by preventing corporations organized under them from engaging in interstate commerce unless the State charters or the organization of the companies under them conform to the conditions laid down by national law.

The looseness of the State corporation laws is most effectively exposed in the address of Mr. Farrar before the American Bar Association. It will be found, together with his very clear and comprehensive statement, in the recent hearing of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I ask that the bill be read in full.

The bill (S. 5486) to further protect commerce among the States and with foreign nations from unlawful combinations in restraint of trade and from monopolies by regulating the kinds of corporations and incorporated partnerships that may take part in such commerce was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

A bill (S. 5486) to further protect commerce among the States and with foreign nations from unlawful combinations in restraint of trade and from monopolies by regulating the kinds of corporations and incorporated partnerships that may take part in such commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act shall not apply to railroads, steamship or steamboat or other water-transportation companies, pipe-line companies, express companies, or banking corporations or trust companies, unless such corporations shall contain, in their charters, powers and faculties authorizing them to buy and to sell or trade in the objects and articles of commerce otherwise than for their own use and consumption.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall apply to every corporation or incorporated partnership, both hereinafter called organizations, engaged in whole or in part in commerce in its own behalf or as agents, factors, or commission merchants for others, whose capital stock shall equal $25,000 or whose capital stock, being less than $25,000, conducts a business whose annual gross receipts are $100,000, 10 per cent in amount of whose annual gross business in either case shall consist of transactions in commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or in both combined.

SEC. 3. That every organization, within the purview of this act, shall keep books, records, and accounts, so as to show clearly and intelligently all the business and transactions of the organization. A failure to keep such books, records, and accounts, or the willful concealment, or willful destruction of any material part of such books, records, and accounts, unless the same shall be more than 10 years old, shall debar such organization from the right to participate in commerce among the States or with foreign nations. The Bureau of Corporations shall have power to fix the kind and method of such bookkeeping and records.

SEC. 4. That every organization, by the very fact of engaging in commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or both combined, to the extent hereinabove specified, shall subject itself to the provisions of this act, and subject itself to the right of visitation by the United States, to be exercised by the Bureau of Corporations, either in its discretion or under the direction of the President of the United States, or by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or of the Attorney General of the United States, or of any committee of the Senate or of the House of Representatives of the United States. This right of visitation shall include the right to examine all the books, records, stock books, letters, papers, telegrams, and contracts of the organization, and the letters, papers, and contracts, etc., of the officers, directors, agents, or stockholders of the organization that pertain to the affairs, contracts, and business of the organization itself, and the right to examine under oath, in respect to the business or acts of the organization any officer, director, stockholder, agent, employee, or contractee of the organization. No person so examined under oath shall refuse to answer any question put to him by any authorized officer of said Bureau of Corporations on the ground that his answers might subject him to a criminal prosecution, but not such incriminating answers shall ever be used, directly or indirectly, in any criminal prosecution against the person answering, but such incriminating answers may be used against the organization itself or against any third person; nor shall the answering of such incriminating questions give the person answering any immunity from prosecution by the Government, if the Government can institute and conduct such prosecution on evidence other and distinct from said incriminating answers. This right of visitation if denied, hindered, or obstructed shall be enforced by summary rule, in the nature of a rule for contempt, taken in the name of the United States in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction over the organization, or the person to be examined and tried before a jury, and no writ of error or appeal shall be allowed from any verdict, judgment, or decree on such rule, except to the United States. No information of any kind or nature in respect to the business or affairs of any organization obtained by the Bureau of Corporations under this act shall be disclosed to any person except to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Attorney General, the President of the United States, or either of the Houses of the Congress of the United States upon its demand to that end, or to a grand or petit jury of the United States in a criminal or civil prosecution conducted by the United States.

Sec. 5. That the following organizations are hereby declared to be hostile to the public policy of the United States, and are hereby absolutely excluded from and prohibited from participation to any extent in commerce among the States or with foreign nations, to wit:

First. Any organization, popularly called a holding company, that is, organized to acquire and hold the stocks of one or more organizations engaged in commerce among the States or with foreign nations in substantially the same kind of business, or in kinds of business cognate to or auxiliary to, or ancillary to each other.

Second. Any organization any of whose stock is held, owned, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by any holding company, or by any other organization engaged in commerce among the States or with foreign nations in substantially the same kind or kinds of business.

Third. Any organization that holds, owns, or controls, directly or indirectly, any of the stock of any other organization engaged in commerce among the States or with foreign nations in substantially the same kind of business or businesses as its own business or businesses.

Fourth. Any organization which has issued or shall issue fictitious or watered securities, whether in the form of stocks, bonds, debentures, certificates, or of any other form or device whatever. Fictitious or watered securities are hereby declared to be securities, as above defined, issued, or assumed by the organization, without the actual receipt by the organization of money, or property, or franchises, or good will, or patents, or trade-marks, or labor, or service, which bear a fair and substantial ratio in their actual value to the par value of the securities issued therefor. Subject to the control of the courts, the Bureau of Corporations shall on the facts of each case determine what such fair and substantial ratio is, but in no case shall it be less than 75 per cent.

Fifth. Any organization formed for the conduct of any kind or kinds of business by the consolidation or amalgamation by purchase or otherwise of other organizations, or of the property or business of other organizations, or of the business or good will of individuals or firms, engaged in substantially the same kind or kinds of business, where at the time of the formation of such organization the aggregate of the business or businesses done in commerce between the States or with foreign nations, or in both combined, by the organizations, firms, or individuals transferring their business to the new organization, shall exceed 25 per cent of such kind or kinds of business annually done in the United States in such commerce.

Sixth. Any organization formed as provided in section 5, but not at the time of its formation coming within the purview of that section, which shall have increased its business in commerce among the States or with foreign nations by the subsequent acquisition of the business or property or good will of other corporations, firms, or individuals engaged in substantially the same kind of business or businesses in such commerce until its business or businesses annually done in such commerce shall exceed 25 per cent of such kind or kinds of business annually done in the United States in such commerce.

Seventh. Any organization formed as provided in section 5, but not at the time of its formation coming within the purview of that section, which shall have increased its business in commerce among the States or with foreign nations until its business or businesses in such commerce shall exceed 50 per cent of such kind or kinds of business annually done in the United States in such commerce.

Eighth. Any organization whose capital stock at the time of its organization, or whose capital stock and surplus established at the time of its organization, or by subsequent contributions of its stockholders, shall exceed 25 per cent of the sound actual capital of the organizations, individuals, and firms domiciled in the United States at that time engaged in substantially the same kind or kinds of businesses in commerce among the States or with foreign nations. The funds received by such a corporation from securities other than stock issued by it at the time of its organization, or within five years thereafter, shall be considered as part of its capital stock for the purposes of this act. This clause shall not apply to an organization formed to exploit a new industry or the manufacture and sale of a new article of commerce.

Ninth. Any organization, the majority of whose stock is owned or controlled by the same persons who own or control the majority of the stock in any other organization, engaged in commerce among the States or with foreign nations in substantially the same kind of business or businesses.

Tenth. Any organization which has the majority of its directors the same as the majority of the directors of any other organization engaged in commerce among the States or with foreign nations or in both in substantially the same kind of business or businesses.

Sec. 6. That any organization engaged or about to engage, as herein provided, in commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or in both, shall have the right to cause itself and its affairs to be examined by the Bureau of Corporations for the purpose of determining whether it has the power under section 5 to engage, or to continue to engage, in such commerce, and the decision of such bureau shall be prima facie correct, subject to the revision and control of the courts; and as long as the facts remain the same as they existed at the time of such examination, if they were then fully and truthfully disclosed to the Bureau of Corporations, the decision of the Bureau of Corporations in favor of such organization shall relieve such organization, its officers, agents, and employees from the fines and penalties herein imposed, but shall not relieve the organization from an injunction from prohibiting it from continuing to participate in commerce among the States or with foreign nations, or both.

Sec. 7. That if any organization within the purview of this act shall violate any of its provisions every officer, director, stockholder, employee, or agent of such organization responsible for such violation or participating therein shall be guilty of a misdemeanor of the highest grade, and shall on conviction be fined not less than $2,000 and not more than $25,000, and shall be imprisoned for not less than one and not more than five years. Where several of the officers, directors, stockholders, employees, or agents of a corporation shall be included in one indictment or information the right of severance in the trial of such indictment or information shall not exist, except on the demand of the United States. In all prosecutions under this act the organization which has violated its provisions shall be served with a copy of the indictment, and shall be considered a defendant in such action, and shall be permitted to appear and defend on its own account, but it shall not be called upon to pay the fines assessed against its officers, directors, stockholders, employees, or agents, unless they fail to pay the same and until there is a return of nulla bona on any execution under a judgment for fines imposed on such individual defendants, whereupon execution may issue for such fines against the organization, which on payment of such fines and costs shall be subrogated to the rights of the United States against such defendants.

Sec. 8. That this act may be enforced by injunction against the organization or by criminal proceedings against individuals, or by both, separately or simultaneously; and no action or prosecution under this act shall be barred, except by the lapse of five years from the date of the offense or from the date when knowledge of it came to an officer of the United States authorized to prosecute.

Sec. 9. That this act shall go into effect one year from the date when it shall become a law, in order that all corporations may adjust themselves to its provisions.

Sec. 10. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed, but this act shall not be construed as a repeal of section 1 of the act approved June 29, 1906, known as the Hepburn Act, nor of the act approved July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman antitrust law, but it shall be construed as in aid of and in furtherance of said acts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Cora B. Thomas her salary as clerk of Class 3, Treasury Department, for the year 1912 at $1,600 per annum, deducting therefrom any salary paid her during the year as a clerk at $600, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,900 for expenses at the International Radiotelegraphic Conference, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 for the construction of a septic tank and sewer main at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for the erection of a cottage for the use of the gardener at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 for the erection of a cottage for the use of the superintendent of the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500 for additions to the hospital and office at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for general repairs and improvements at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., from $3,000 to $6,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to construct one or more demonstration plants on or near the west line of the State of Kansas, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for the erection of a school building for the post at Leavenworth, Kans., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for cooperation by the Forest Service with the University of Washington for the discovery of valuable products by distillation of woods, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase lands for a school site to promote the well-being and civilization of the Indians residing among the Kalispel Indians, in Pend d'Oreille County, Wash., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the acquisition of a site near the town of Pembroke, N. C., for a school for the Indians of Robeson County, N. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE STEEL SCHEDULE.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS BY JUSTICE STAFFORD (S. DOC. NO. 344).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I send to the desk a copy of an address delivered by Justice Wendell Phillips Stafford of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia before the New York County Lawyers' Association at its annual banquet, February 17, 1912, on the subject of "The new despotism." I move that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

STANDARD OF LIVING AMONG COTTON-MILL FAMILIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article taken from the Washington Herald of the 24th instant, and ask the Secretary to read the head lines and the paragraph marked; and I also ask that the remainder of the article be published in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington (D. C.) Herald, February 24, 1912.]

"SOUTHERN MILLS BAD AS PRISONS" (BUREAU OF LABOR REPORT)—FAMILIES ILL FED, POORLY CLAD, AND IGNORED BY EVERY CLASS OF SOCIETY—CHILDREN ALL DRUGS.

TWENTY-ONE HOMES DESCRIBED.

The bureau selected 21 typical southern cotton-mill families, 10 of them living in or near Atlanta, 6 just outside of Greensboro, N. C., and 5 living at Burlington, N. C., and the report states that a comparison of the menus of the families studied with the dietary of the Federal prison at Atlanta shows that for breakfast and dinner the quantity and quality of food of the families living fairly well is not far different from the prison diet. They have a little more variety perhaps.

The remainder of the article is as follows:

The Bureau of Labor completed and made public yesterday a report on southern cotton-mill workers, which is likely to arouse the southern Congressmen considerably. In recent debates in Congress the Congressmen from southern States seemed sensitive on the subject of southern woman and child labor, and the report made public tells in a striking way the decidedly dispirited conditions under which southern cotton-mill workers live, of scanty pay, scanty food, crowded homes, company stores, and of but little hope for the future.

Taking the result of more than a hundred families studied in the southern cotton mills, the report says:

"The minimum standard is a standard of living so low that one would expect few families to live on it."

Of their social status the report says:

"In the first place, they are looked down upon by the other people of the South. There is no attempt to make them a part of the community into which they have recently come. The old residents know little about them and care less. In the second place, certain conditions of the new industrial life forces this isolation. The whole family—men, women, and children—are engaged in the same industry in which every other family in their community is engaged."

The report says that with few exceptions they live in houses owned by the mill company and in many cases buy their provisions from the company store.

"In other industries," adds the report, "the father may feel that he can never hope for anything more for himself, but he can at least plan and struggle for a better life for his children. Here the mill demands the children as well as the fathers."

The report says the so-called normal family—father, with wife and children depending upon him for support—is not found among the 21 typical southern cotton mills families studied, and that most of the families, even the poorest, were supported by the earnings of several wage earners and in addition the majority had the benefit of an income from boarders. The average number of wage earners per family for the 21 families was 3.6.

PORK THEIR MAINSTAY.

"The menus which appear with the family studies show better than any description the character of the food eaten by the cotton-mill operators," says the report. "It will be seen that corn bread, biscuit, pork, and coffee form a large part of the diet of all families. No tea is used, and one family had a substitute for coffee. When pork is mentioned without qualification it means fat pork, dry salted. This kind of meat contains very little lean. Other kinds of pork are always specified."

Supper with most of the families is a light meal. Frequently it is nothing more than what is left from dinner, warmed over or eaten cold.

In many other cases it is bread, meat (fatback), and coffee. Breakfast consists of coffee, bread, sirup, and pork in some form."

MOTHER IN DISCARDED GARB.

The report shows that the earning of a family where five were employed in the mill was something between $800 and $900 a year, and that the average amount spent by the father of the family on his clothing was $38.97.

The mother, it is stated, spent less for her clothing than did the older daughters, and that in some instances the amount spent by them for clothing was wholly inadequate. In one instance one mother reported as clothing for the year "slippers, 98 cents," she wearing the clothing that her daughters had discarded. The average paid by any mother for her clothing for the year was $14.92. In the majority of instances, it is stated, the families end the year slightly in debt.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, after reading that statement in the Washington Herald, my first impulse was to ask for an investigating committee on the part of the Senate to inquire whether or not those statements are true. I knew they were misleading and that they were not true. I went to see the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whom I have always found to be a splendid gentleman, and I knew, together with his great ability, he was a man of justice and fairness. He called in the Commissioner of Labor, and, in response to what occurred at our conference, the commissioner has written me a letter, which I ask to have read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter, as requested by the Senator from North Carolina.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF LABOR,
Washington, February 24, 1912.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: Referring to our conversation this morning in Secretary Nagel's office concerning the article appearing in the morning paper in which a Bureau of Labor report is quoted as saying "Southern mills bad as prisons," and to your request that I write you in regard to that statement what I said to you in the conversation, I beg to say that no such statement appears in the volume to which the article in question clearly refers, nor any statement that would justify such a sentence.

Other than the data presented in the volume itself, no statement has been given out by me nor, so far as I can learn, by anyone in the Bureau of Labor in any way dealing with this volume.

The study itself represents an investigation of what standard of living the earnings of cotton-mill operatives permit them to maintain. A dietary standard, arrived at through the studies of the Federal Department of Agriculture, was taken as a basis of comparison. This dietary did not contain sufficient details for accurate comparison. It was found, however, that the dietary of the Federal prison at Atlanta corresponded very closely in its totals with the food requirements of the Agricultural Department standard, and, in addition, it furnished all the items in detail upon which the totals were based. This was taken as a minimum food standard for an adult male in full vigor at moderate muscular work. Allowances were then made, upon a basis arrived at by the Department of Agriculture, for age and sex, and the food requirements thus deduced were taken as a minimum standard. The actual standards of living found amongst typical cotton-mill families in several southern cities and in Fall River, Mass., were then compared with this minimum standard, and also with a higher standard, which was given as a "fair" standard as actually found amongst the families studied.

The study does show that in a considerable percentage of the cases studied the individual families were not able, through the combined income of the wage-earning members, to maintain a standard of living equal to the minimum standard in which the food requirements were represented by the dietary of the Federal penitentiary.

You were given a copy of the report in question this morning and can see by reading it what basis there is for the headlines to which you took exception and for which neither myself nor anyone connected with this bureau is in the slightest degree responsible.

I am, respectfully, yours,

CHAS. P. NEILL, Commissioner.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, why he should have compared these free-born American citizens who work in the cotton mills with penitentiary convicts I do not know. Such a comparison is odious and will enable some of these fanatical people to go up and down this country and charge that these cotton-mill hands are treated like convicts. And without the full report and the truth it would astonish and outrage the public. I remind the Senate that the penitentiary referred to is a Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, and that the prisoners are fed out of the bountiful funds of the Treasury of the United States. I want to read just two menus of two days of the penitentiary to show that those convicts live about as well as the ordinary man in this country. I know it to be a fact that no later than yesterday I was told by a distinguished lawyer from my State that when a man is convicted in a Federal court for a felony he always requests to be sent to the penitentiary at Atlanta rather than to jail. The following are some of the daily menus these convicts had set before them:

SUNDAY.

Breakfast: Oatmeal, milk, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Beef, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, bread, butter, coffee.
Supper: Bread, butter, coffee.

MONDAY.

Breakfast: Wieners, grits, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Pork and beans, raw onions, bread, water.
Supper: Sweet potatoes, bread, butter, coffee.

TUESDAY.

Breakfast: Potatoes, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Beef, collards, bread, water.
Supper: Prunes, bread, butter, coffee.

WEDNESDAY.

Breakfast: Hash, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Soup, sweet potatoes, bread, water.
Supper: Pie, bread, butter, tea.

THURSDAY.

Breakfast: Grits, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Fresh pork, sweet potatoes, collards, bread, water.
Supper: Crackling bread, sirup, coffee.

FRIDAY.

Breakfast: Beef, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Fish, sweet potatoes, bread, water.
Supper: Sauce, bread, butter, coffee.

SATURDAY.

Breakfast: Liver, bread, butter, coffee.
Dinner: Stew, bread, water.
Supper: Graham cookies, coffee.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] suggests to me that he does not suppose that some Senators know what "crackling bread" is, but some of us do, and it is pretty good food.

I have gone indiscriminately through this report, which is Volume XVI of the report of the bureau. On page 26 it is stated:

Families 1 to 8 live in Atlanta, Ga.; 12 to 15 in Greensboro, N. C.; and 17 to 21 at the country mill near Burlington.

Now, I ask the Senate to listen and see whether the commission was justified in drawing that comparison when I read the menu of family No. 11 at Greensboro, N. C., and others at Burlington, N. C.:

FAMILY NO. 11.

This family has a cow which furnishes them with plenty of milk and butter, and enables them sometimes to increase their income by selling milk to their neighbors.

The membership of the family and the age, occupation, and earnings of the members are shown in the following table:

Membership and income of family No. 11, 1908.

¹ Deceased.² Board for 4 months.

The eldest girl was married during the year, but she came home to keep house for her father. Her husband pays board to the family. The 15 and 13 year old boys attended school for a part of the year. The 16-year-old boy had pneumonia and was unable to work for three months.

The family occupies a four-room house and pays $3 per month rent. They have none but the most necessary furniture, and no carpets, curtains, or rugs. Their chief diversion is going to preaching and Sunday school.

The annual expenditures of the family are as follows:

Expenditures of family No. 11, 1908.

No details for clothing purchased for each member of the family are given, but the items for clothing included in the store account show an expenditure of $60.66 for 24 weeks; from this an estimate was made for the year. It was learned from the family that each member wore out 4 pairs of shoes during the year. For approximately one-half of the year 17 pairs of shoes were bought for the 8 members in the family, the total expenditure for which was $33.05, a little more than half of the total outlay for clothing. The father mends all of the shoes, buying the leather and nails at the company store.

All minor illnesses are treated by the family, as can be seen from the expenditure for medicine in the analysis of the account.

The average value of food consumed per week per man unit (including milk and butter from cow) for the year covered was $1.19. Following is the menu of this family for three days:

MENU OF FAMILY NO. 11 FOR 3 DAYS.

APRIL 13.

Breakfast: Eggs, coffee (with sugar and milk), biscuit, butter.
Dinner: Pork and beans, corn bread, biscuit, onions, coffee, milk, butter.
Supper: Sausage, biscuit, butter, milk.

Breakfast: Eggs, fried shoulder, coffee (with sugar and milk), biscuit, butter.
Dinner: Liver and onions, cheese, sweet-potato pie, corn bread, biscuit, coffee, milk, butter.
This family did practically all of their trading at the company store and a complete itemized account for 24 weeks was obtained. This includes their expenditures for food, clothing, light, tobacco, medicine, sundries, candy, and gum.

Do not your mouths water and do you not long for the good, old-fashioned home cooking, even of these poor cotton-mill families? That is a family whose living he compares with the penitentiary convicts of this country. What is the Government going to do about it? Do you propose to feed these people? Do you propose to clothe them? Do you propose to give them better wages? Now I will read from the report of a family living at Burlington, N. C.:

FAMILY NO. 16.

The father in this family is an itinerant preacher. The family represents a standard of living very high among cotton-mill workers. The following gives the membership of the family, with the age, occupations, and earnings of the members:

¹ Board and lodging for 6 months.

Income from milk and butter amounted to $20, making a total cash income of $961.96. The family also consumed garden vegetables of their own raising valued at $20, and they keep a cow.

The family live in a 6-room house, for which they pay $5 per month rent. The house is exceedingly well cared for and well furnished. There are carpets on the floors of two rooms. They have an organ, center table, pictures, rocking chairs, high bedsteads, and lace curtains. Everything indicates a high degree of comfort. The two older children are allowed to keep their wages, but are charged for their board. They buy their own clothes and do with their money as they see fit. The 14-year-old boy came in from school while a part of the information for the study was being obtained. His clothes fitted well and were in good taste, and he wore a white negligee shirt with standing linen collar, a necktie, and gloves. He appeared bright and intelligent.

The diversions and amusements of the family are going to church, church sociables, parties, entertainments, and picnics.

The following shows the expenditures of the family during the year:

Nothing appears to have been spent on drinks or tobacco, but a large amount was given to the church and charity.

On page 123 is the following statement as to family No. 20:

FAMILY NO. 20.

This family consists of the father, mother, and six children. The following table shows the membership of the family, and the age, occupation, and earnings of the different members:

The family also had a cash income from milk and butter sold of $5.20, making the total income $705.61. They kept a cow and also consumed pork of their own raising valued at $90 and garden vegetables valued at $7.

The family occupy a four-room house and pay $2.60 per month rent. The house is neat and clean and the mother appeared to be an intelligent woman and a good manager. One room was used as the spare bedroom. It was furnished with a bed and bedding, washstand, dresser, table, chairs, a few pictures, window shades, and curtains. The bed was covered with a spread and pillow shams. The other rooms had the usual beds and bedding, a sewing machine, tables, and lamps. The kitchen, which is also the dining room, was furnished with table and chairs, a new six-hole range, and a good supply of cooking utensils.

The family had considerable sickness during the year. The husband lost nine weeks because of illness from malarial fever. All of the children had the measles. The amusements are simple. The family go to church and Sunday school, but this is only about once in four weeks, for there is no church at the mill. About once a month there is preaching in a schoolhouse which is some distance away.

The annual expenditures are as follows:

Expenditures of family No. 20, 1908.

The family have saved practically nothing. The mother said that they would save up a little money and then they would find something they wanted, and it would be spent for that. She gave the instance of buying their stove. She said that at that time they had saved $40. They went to town and spent it all for the stove, some furniture, and other things they needed.

The following, taken from page 129 of the report prepared under the direction of the Commissioner of Labor, gives the menu for one week of "Family No. 21," residing at Burlington, N. C.:

Now I take the report on a family in Fall River, Mass.; they are having a strike to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, the strike is at Lawrence.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; it is Lawrence; but I believe Fall River is a cotton-mill town, is it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. And there are 27 different languages spoken there by the operatives, if the papers tell the truth about it.

FAMILY NO. 103.

This family is Portuguese. They came from the Azores and had been in this country seven years. The children can speak English, but the parents can not. The family consists of the father, mother, and four children. The table following shows the age, occupation, and earnings of the different members:

Membership and income of family No. 103, 1908-9.

Relationship.	Sex.	Age.	Occupation.	Industry.	Earnings during year.	Amount paid to family during year.
Father.....	M.	44	Sweeper.....	Cotton	$203.22	$203.22

Second child.....	F.	17	Spinner.....	do.	235.60	235.60
Third child.....	M.	11	At school.....
Fourth child.....	F.	3	At home.....
Total.....						$29.15

The father's earnings are estimated because his name could not be identified on the pay roll of the company for which he worked.

They live on the first floor of a tenement in which there are eight families. They occupy four rooms, one of which is used for kitchen, dining room, and sitting room. The other three are used for sleeping rooms. The kitchen stove furnishes the heat for all the rooms in the winter. The house is very dirty and is poorly taken care of. The furnishings consist of absolute necessities only, such as table, chairs, stove, and beds.

The mother and younger children are poorly clothed and very dirty. The mother had typhoid fever during the year and a baby died of pneumonia. The health of the other members of the family was good.

The diversions of the family are simple—street car rides and moving-picture shows occasionally for the older members, and church.

The annual expenditures are as follows:

Expenditures of family No. 103, 1908-9.

Food.....	$383.24
Rent.....	84.00
Clothing.....	77.84
Fuel.....	28.00

Total.....	714.56

The difference between the expenses for the year and the income shows that there may have been some savings. The mother said, however, that they had not saved any money. It may be that she was not telling the truth, though the grocery book showed that they were in debt to the store $25.81.

The family lived very poorly and it would seem that they spent as little money as they could. The underclothing for most of the children and nearly all of the clothes for the youngest child are made by the mother from the flour sacks in which she buys her flour.

The average value of food consumed per week per man unit for the year covered was $1.60.

The menu for two days—May 23 and 24, 1909—was obtained and is as follows:

SUNDAY.

Breakfast: Pork steak, bread, coffee, condensed milk.
Dinner: Soup (made of meat, potatoes, cabbage, and bologna), bread, coffee, condensed milk.
Supper: Soup left from dinner.

MONDAY.

Breakfast: Bread, coffee, condensed milk, soup from day before.
Dinner: Bread, coffee, condensed milk.
Supper: Soup from the day before.
The soup which entered so largely into the diet was made in a large iron pot. It is the custom to make enough to last several days, and to replenish it whenever the pot becomes empty. All kinds of meats and vegetables are put into it. The bread is a very soggy composition made of flour and corn meal. As the price of flour goes up, more corn meal and less flour is used in making it. On one of the visits to the family for information the oldest boy came home from work for his dinner. He sat down to the table, which was covered with oilcloth, and his dinner consisted of bread and coffee.

Now, Mr. President, I wish the country could read this report and see how these families live. I want to show to the country—and it can be shown from this report—that the North Carolina cotton-mill operatives live as well as any laboring people in the world, and yet the Commissioner of Labor in the Department of Commerce and Labor sends out to the country, not the report as put in the papers, because that is exaggerated and untrue, but he does compare their method of living with that of the convicts in the penitentiaries of this country—these good people who live in my State and in Atlanta, Ga., and in Massachusetts. If the Senator from Georgia would read it he would see that the mill operatives in his State live just as well as do those in North Carolina. They are a happy people; they are a good people; they are American citizens; and I protest against this great Government of ours, to which they pay taxes—

Mr. TILLMAN. And they speak the English language, too.

Mr. OVERMAN. And they speak the English language. I protest against their being slandered in the way they have been by a great department of this Government. In passing, I want to say that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor told me that he did not recommend the establishment of a new bureau to gather such information as this, but reported against it; and yet the Senate has passed a bill establishing a bureau to get just such stuff as this, which it has been stated costs the Government the immense sum of $300,000. I do not know what the purpose of making such a report is. Mr. President, why men should be guilty of such conduct, unless it is to create prejudice against as glorious a section as there is in this country and against as fine a people as live, I do not know. When he says that the people of the South look down upon the mill operatives, I deny it. They sympathize, encourage, and help them in every way possible under the circumstances of their living and environment. They build them schools, churches, and in some instances club houses, gymnasiums, reading rooms, and places of amusement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the men who are sent out on these errands of supposed philanthropy did not find this sort of material in their minds, there would not be any use for them in this bureau.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. If they should go out and report that the people employed in the mills in North Carolina, in Massachusetts, and in New Hampshire as well, are earning fair wages and living in a comfortable way, we would not make appropriations of four or five hundred thousand dollars for this bureau to gather information of this kind. It would come to an end. So, to perpetuate their own salaries, it is rather important that these men should find just this kind of thing that is being reported here, which looks to me to be utterly scandalous, and something that ought to be stopped in some way if we can stop it.

Mr. OVERMAN. And furthermore—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. I read from this report to show that the conclusions of the report are wrong, and that these people live as well and are clothed as well as any people in the United States similarly situated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. OVERMAN. I again say that some of these menus mentioned in this document are as good as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], or I have on our tables in our humble homes in our States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if that be true—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. If it be true that this report discloses that these people are living in the luxurious manner suggested by the Senator, what is the fault with reference to the report?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why do you want to spend a million dollars to get out such reports as this?

Mr. BORAH. The expenditure has already been made; but, as I understand, now the Senator is objecting to something that is in the report.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am objecting to the commissioner's conclusions, based upon the statistics for 21 families, Nos. 1 to 11 living in Atlanta, 12 to 21 in Greensboro and Burlington, N. C., and a certain number in Massachusetts. I am objecting to his conclusions, and from what I have shown here from the menus of those people the conclusions are misleading and wrong.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And reading from his own report.

Mr. OVERMAN. And reading from his own report.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] gave notice—

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to say that the Senator from Iowa is obliged to leave the city at 40 minutes past 3 o'clock, and if he could be allowed to make his speech now, I know that he would greatly appreciate the courtesy.

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa very gladly. I thank him for giving me this much of his time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, it is that morning business be suspended until the Senator from Iowa shall have concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the Senator from Iowa be permitted to proceed at this time, morning business meanwhile being suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

PROPOSED PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate that I may consider for a very brief time the general subject of pension legislation. Upon this occasion I do not intend to discuss in detail the relative merits of the several bills and the various suggestions that have been debated before the committee. I pause only long enough to say that the most liberal of them, if enacted by Congress and approved by the President, will still leave the people of the United States under an unpaid and unpayable obligation to the Union soldiers of the Civil War, so great that it will only be recognized in that far-off day when the value of the Union which they preserved is more fully appreciated and more completely understood than it is possible to appreciate it or understand it now. At this moment I am speaking chiefly in the hope that I can hasten whatever action we are to take. It seems to me that the highest considerations which can move a legislative assembly command us to do whatever we intend to do immediately. Whatever enlargement of pensions we are willing to grant we ought to grant at once. Whatever debate is to ensue ought to begin now and be continued without cessation until we reach the end. What stands in the way? Nothing. The sessions of the Senate have been, and still are, well-nigh barren of important matters, and there can be no sufficient reason for not giving a few hours to the men who, loving their country, imperiled their lives for it and for us through four years of march and camp and battle. We convene at 2, adjourn an hour or two or three later, and meet again next day at 2. We are comfortable, have plenty to eat, enough to wear, and the day for us goes quickly and happily by; but on each of these days in which we have done little and suffered none two or three companies of these Union veterans die and enter into their reward upon the other shore. Some of them, indeed many of them, are dying in want and misery. If we are going to do something for these heroes let us, for the sake of humanity, do it so that they may die in peace and carry into the life beyond the recollection that their country was a grateful country and did what it could to make their old age comfortable and happy.

Moreover, of the half million or more who still bless us with their presence there are many, very many, who are living in poverty and distress—a poverty and distress which in a few instances may be justly attributed to idleness or improvidence or incompetence, but which in by far the greater number are the direct or indirect results of disabilities which were fastened upon them somewhere and somehow as they struggled along the weary way that lies between Sumter and Appomattox. If we intend to ease their burdens a little, if we intend to lift a little the hard hand of penury, for the sake of justice let us do it quickly.

I have heard and read much about the character of the obligation the country owes to these old men. I have heard it asserted with much emphasis that we owe them nothing at all. There are some who look upon these pensions as a charity, some as the payment of a debt of gratitude. To me all this is vain speculation. It is more—it is profanation. Our relation to these old soldiers defies classification or analysis. It is too high, too holy, too sacred to find expression in the language of commerce or even of sentiment. If you will tell me what impels a civilized man whose life or honor has been saved by another, who has risked his own life to save it, to feed that other when he is hungry, to give him water when he is thirsty, and to clothe him when he is naked, and to feel in doing these things an exaltation of spirit experienced in no other act of life, you will at the same time tell me why the United States ought to make the last days of these brave fighters for the Union as restful and as content as human help can make them.

There has been much conflict of opinion as to whether we ought to expend in pensions, twenty millions, forty millions, or seventy millions more than we are now spending, and the merits of these bills with some people seem to rest upon the extent to which they go in an increase in the annual expenses of the Nation. I have not looked upon the subject from that standpoint. We are able to do what we ought to do, whether in doing it we add to our appropriations twenty millions, forty millions, or seventy millions. The inquiry always ought to be, What amount is necessary to drive want and misery away from these old men during the remaining years of their lives? The greatest allowance that has been suggested will not give the beneficiaries of the pension system the least luxury and will barely suffice to maintain them with their own incomes in the way that people of the most moderate means must live.

Why, then, should we hesitate to do our duty and to respond to the most creditable and patriotic sentiments that are known to human nature? There are some of these soldiers who need no assistance. It may be that there are some who are unworthy of recognition, but there is no practicable way of separating those who are in the enjoyment of good incomes from those who are not, nor is there any practicable way of distinguishing the few who are unworthy from the many who are worthy. Therefore what we do we must do for all, and it would be a crime against the most laudable instincts of civilized man to refuse help to the needy because there are some who are not needy, or to refuse to assist the good because some who are not good will share the benefaction.

I am not one of those who feel that this Government is powerless to do that which its patriotic citizenship knows that it ought to do, even though the expenses of the Government are substantially enhanced. I believe in economy, but to me economy does not mean the abdication of duty in order to reduce expenses. It means that every dollar which we appropriate shall be appropriated for an honest and proper purpose; that is to say, in order to carry out the policies which the Government ought to pursue. It means that every dollar, when appropriated, shall be efficiently expended, and within human limitations shall accomplish all that a dollar can accomplish in the affairs of men.

I am not in favor of omitting any appropriation for Government needs in order that we may increase pensions, but I am in favor of adding to our revenue whatever amount we find it necessary to add, to the end that the Government can perform in the most efficient way all the functions which it ought to assume and discharge. If I believed that to increase pensions or to add to the expenditures of any other field of governmental activity would, as a consequence, require us to still further tax the consumption of the people, and especially of poor people, I would hesitate long before giving my assent to any increase in appropriations. There is a way, however, in which the Government can add to its revenue and do justice to all its citizens. The time has come when the wealth of the country must bear a larger proportion of the taxes of the country than it now bears. Putting aside the revenue from the postal service, the three-quarters of a billion dollars which we annually collect to sustain the Government is substantially all laid upon the consumption of the people.

Wealth has multiplied enormously. It has not only multiplied almost beyond the power of intelligent comprehension, but the process of concentration is the most alarming feature of modern times. There is a way to tax this wealth reasonably and fairly, so that the hand of the Government will take from no man a farthing that he needs for his own subsistence. There is a way to tax it so that not only will the poor be untouched, but the rich from whom the contribution is enforced will be better citizens for the contribution which they make. The way is open to us. No constitutional amendment is necessary to authorize Congress to act. These rich and powerful persons and corporations owe their fortunes and their incomes, vast as they are, to the soldiers whose valor and patriotism preserved the Union in its hour of peril. They are the direct beneficiaries of the struggle and hardships, the consequences of which we now desire to alleviate. Commerce has been profitable beyond the dreams of avarice, and it has been profitable largely because the Union was saved, and the Union was saved because these men, whose last days are clouded with suffering, were willing to fight for it and to die for it. It is divine justice to now require the wealth of the country to recognize its obligation to the men whose heroic efforts made a great and prosperous country possible. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Applause in the galleries must cease and must not be repeated.

INQUIRY CONCERNING APACHE INDIANS.

Mr. HEYBURN. On February 21 I submitted a resolution which went to the table. It appears that there was one sheet missing. I withdraw Senate resolution 228, and introduce a new resolution covering the subject, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 232) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with the following information:

First. How many Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war at the Fort Sill (Okla.) Reservation.

Second. How many of said Indians are males and how many are females.

Third. How many of said male Indians are under 40 years of age.

Fourth. How many of said Indians are known, at any time prior to their capture, to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States or to have committed acts of violence against citizens or residents of the United States.

Fifth. The names, ages, present condition of health, and general conduct of the Indians coming under the terms of the last paragraph.

Sixth. The military necessity, if any, for continuing to hold said Apache Indians as prisoners of war.

Seventh. By what authority the said Apache Indians are now held as prisoners of war, and, particularly, by what authority those of said Indians who were born in captivity and who have come of age while still in captivity are so held.

MINIDOKA RECLAMATION PROJECT IN IDAHO.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 233), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the number of homestead settlers upon the Minidoka reclamation project in Idaho, stating separately those who have made payment under the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of the act of Congress of June 17, 1902, being an act providing for appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands, and those who have not made payment or are in default in making payments, stating the names of those who are in default, together with the amounts and the reasons for such default.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 234), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized during the Sixty-second Congress to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ stenographers from time to time to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, and to have the testimony and proceedings of such hearings printed for the use of the committee. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee and subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on the 15th instant, approved and signed the following act:

S. 4109. An act to restore the name of Oregon Avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

REPORT OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the twelfth annual report of the Philippine Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 26, 1912.

DAM ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, GA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4551) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Savannah River at or near the mouth of Stevens Creek, between the counties of Edgefield, S. C., and Columbia, Ga.," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. MARTIN of Virginia conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE WOOL SCHEDULE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 32) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 additional copies of House Document No. 342, being the message of the President of the United States transmitting a report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K of the tariff law, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 8,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. REED. I ask that the resolution I offered be read now for the information of the Senate, and that it be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table, subject to my call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 230), as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States, on the 22d day of January, 1912, appointed Cornelius P. Swain United States marshal for the State of Delaware, and sent said appointment to the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and said appointment was in due course referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate for proper action in the premises; and

Whereas certain prominent citizens of the State of Delaware caused it to be made known to said committee that they desired to protest against the confirmation of the appointment of the said Swain, upon the ground that he was an unfit person to hold the office of United States marshal for the said State of Delaware; and

Whereas the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate of the United States designated two of its members, viz, Senators SUTHERLAND and OVERMAN, to act as a subcommittee, authorized to investigate the grounds and reasons for said protest; and

Whereas on the 2d and 9th days of February, 1912, there appeared before said subcommittee Hon. Willard Saulsbury, of Wilmington, Del., representing certain objectors to the confirmation of the appointment of the said Cornelius P. Swain, and there also appeared the said Cornelius P. Swain in person and by his counsel, Daniel O. Hastings, Esq.; and

Whereas said objectors, before said subcommittee, in substance and effect charged:

1. That the said Cornelius P. Swain was unfit to occupy any place connected with or near the courts of the United States for the district of Delaware, because the said Cornelius P. Swain bore the common and general reputation of a persistent violator of the criminal provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware intended to secure purity of elections;

2. That the said Cornelius P. Swain had notoriously been a vote buyer in the second representative district of Sussex County (New Fork Hundred) for many years;

3. That the said Cornelius P. Swain had procured and carried large sums of money into said precinct for the purpose of corrupting the voters of said district, and in the year 1908 was the assistant cashier of the corruption fund, and in substance charged that all of the above facts were notorious; and

Whereas the testimony of certain witnesses produced before said subcommittee and certain affidavits there read in evidence tended to prove:

(a) That at the election held in the State of Delaware in the year 1904 members of the legislature were being selected who would thereafter have the right to elect a United States Senator, and who did, in fact, elect the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT Senator from the State of Delaware;

(b) That shortly prior to said election a large sum of money, to wit, a sum in excess of $25,000, and claimed to be in excess of $58,000, was contributed by the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT;

(c) That said sum of money was distributed among various corrupt agents working in the interest of the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT;

(d) That said distribution took place in the office of the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT, and with his knowledge;

(e) That $3,000 of the money so contributed was in the office of the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT delivered to be used for the purpose of corrupting the voters of the second representative district of Sussex County, Del., and was in fact so used under the direction of the said Cornelius P. Swain, and it was admitted by the attorney representing said Swain that said $3,000 was so received by him; and

Whereas the evidence tended further to show that not only at the election held in the year 1904, but in the elections held in the years 1906, 1908, and 1910 similar corrupt practices were employed, and said evidence tended further to show that said corrupt practices did affect the election of the members of the legislature who in the year 1911 reelected the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT to a seat in this body; and

Whereas said subcommittee construed its duties to be confined to an investigation of the corrupt practices with which the said Cornelius P. Swain could be shown to be directly connected, and did not therefore investigate generally into the conditions surrounding said election, so that there has, in fact, been no investigation of the connection of the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT with said alleged corrupt practices, except in so far as the same was made to appear as an incident to the investigation of the said Swain; and

Whereas the said Cornelius P. Swain was appointed to said office at the request of the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT, notwithstanding the evidence tends to show his corrupt practices and general reputation as an election corruptionist: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized and directed to investigate and to report to the Senate, whether, in fact, corrupt methods and practices were employed by the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT to secure the election of members of the legislature, who thereafter elected him to a seat in this body; whether said corrupt practices related to the general election of 1904, or the general election of 1910, or to his election by the members of the legislature selected at said elections; and whether the said HENRY ALGERNON DU PONT is a proper person to retain his seat, or ought to retain his seat, in this body as a Senator from the State of Delaware.

Said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit during the sessions or the recess of the Senate; to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation aforesaid; to employ stenographers; to send for persons and papers; and to administer oaths. The expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or chairman of the subcommittee.

Said committee is requested to proceed with said investigation with all reasonable speed and to report its findings, together with the evidence, at the earliest possible date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be printed and lie upon the table subject to call.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask why, under the regular order of proceeding, the resolution does not go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the resolution be printed and lie on the table subject to call, intending to speak upon it prior to reference, as the Chair understood.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not believe that menaces against a man's character, such as we gather from the reading of the resolution, ought to lie on the table or be subject to any man's call. When the integrity of the right to hold the office of Senator is challenged in this body it is everybody's business, and the party challenged has some rights. He has the right to prompt action, and every other Senator has the same right. I do not believe there is any rule under which the resolution can lie on the table subject to call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is quite unnecessary to move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, because that is where it would naturally go.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can not hear what the Senator is saying.

Mr. REED. I will try to make the Senator from Idaho hear. I asked to have the resolution lie on the table temporarily, because I desire to make some remarks upon it. I was not prepared to make those remarks to-day, but I intended to give notice that on day after to-morrow, at such hour as would be convenient, I would desire to address the Senate upon this resolution. My understanding is that a resolution lying upon the table and subject to call is subject to the call of any Senator, and that therefore there will be no delay worked, no hardship imposed, by virtue of the fact that this resolution does not immediately go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. REED. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. HEYBURN. A question of this kind can not, under the rules of the Senate, be discussed except upon the report of a committee, because the rules of the Senate provide that no personal reference shall be made to a Member of the Senate, except upon the report of a committee.

It is only proper after a committee of the Senate has reported to discuss upon this floor the character or personal acts of any Member of this body. This does not come within the rule of resolutions that may lie on the table to be discussed. That can not be done until after it has been reported upon. It was a wise provision, and it should be respected. I have asked for a reference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, to what rule does the Senator refer as the basis for his statement?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have objected to it.

Mr. REED. I made the inquiry as to what rule the Senator stood upon.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let my objection be stated. My objection is to the resolution lying on the table. My objection is to the request, because I say it must go to a committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the Senator's attention to section 2 of Rule XIX, which I think is clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read paragraph 2 of Rule XIX.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XIX.

2. No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am entirely familiar with that rule, although I have not had the extensive experience in this body that the Senator from Idaho and other Senators have had. I understand, I think, what that rule means. That rule is intended to place a limitation in debate upon the remarks of Senators, so that they shall not get into personal controversy and make personal reflections upon other Senators. This is not that kind of a question. This is a question which challenges the right of a man to sit in this body as a Senator. It raises a question not personal in its nature, but of the highest public importance and the highest public character—

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. When I conclude my sentence. And although it may concern an individual, it is not a personal matter in the sense that the language of the rule was intended to be employed.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I suggest that the resolution, as I heard it read, in express terms charges a Member of this body with being guilty of bribery and corruption?

Mr. REED. The Senator heard the resolution, and it will speak for itself with some clearness. It is a resolution similar in its nature to other resolutions. There is a preamble to it, based upon testimony that was given in this investigation.

I say again that the rule which was read has no application to a matter of this kind. The rule that was read was intended to apply to personal remarks between Senators reflecting upon each other and not to the investigation of public matters.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that I desire that this matter shall be investigated in the right way, that it shall be investigated calmly and judicially and properly; but before the Senate votes upon the question whether it will pass the resolution it is proper that the Senate should be advised as to whether there are any reasonable grounds upon which to base it, and those reasonable grounds I had intended, with the permission of the Senate, to present within the next two days of time.

I will not submit, unless compelled to do so, to any rule, which undertakes to say that in a matter of this importance and of this character no word can be uttered upon the floor of the Senate until a committee has seen fit to make its report. That sort of construction is not consistent with the previous record in the Senate. When the resolution was offered to reinvestigate the question of the election of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] it was a matter of debate here for two days, and the debate went unchallenged, and properly went unchallenged.

There have been disclosures made, Mr. President, in the taking of this testimony of such a character that the Members of the Senate ought to know what they are, and they ought to know before they cast their votes upon this matter.

Whether the resolution goes to the committee under the objection of the Senator from Idaho against its lying on the table or not, I shall insist upon my right to speak upon this question and to lay these matters before the Senate. I do not think that friends of the Senator from Delaware will gain anything by an attempt to shut off freedom of speech and debate in regard to this matter.

I renew my request that the resolution may lie on the table until the day after to-morrow, at which time I desire to submit some remarks.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Senator from Idaho moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. REED. I move a substitute. The Senator has not had the floor. I make the motion direct—that the resolution lie on the table subject to call for two days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to refer is not an amendable motion.

Mr. REED. But the Senator from Idaho did not have the floor. I had the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho had made the motion some little time ago, when he did have the floor.

Mr. REED. Not as I recollect it. I move as a substitute that the resolution be laid upon the table for two days' time, subject to call.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not in order.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate should dispose of this proposition. Here is a motion to lay on the table, which is not a debatable subject. It can not be considered as an amendment to the motion made by the Senator from Idaho, but it is a preferential motion and should be disposed of first.

Mr. STONE. May I make an inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator certainly can.

Mr. STONE. The motion is to lay what on the table?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay upon the table the resolution which he has submitted.

Mr. LODGE. But under the rule, Mr. President, that is a motion of final disposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what it is.

Mr. LODGE. The other is a request that the resolution lie on the table subject to the call of a Senator. That is merely a request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request has been disposed of. That required unanimous consent. Following that request, the Senator from Idaho moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the Senator from Missouri moved to lay it on the table subject to call.

Mr. LODGE. Subject to call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not a preferential motion.

Mr. REED. That is the motion I made.

Mr. LODGE. That is not a possible motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order.

Mr. STONE. I ask a question for information. I speak hesitatingly, for it occurred before I came into the Chamber this afternoon, and I know only what I have been told about it, but I should like to inquire of the Chair if it be a fact that when my colleague offered his resolution soon after the Senate assembled he made a request that it lie upon the table, and that that request by announcement of the Chair was acceded to by the Senate without objection.

Mr. LODGE. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has been misinformed as to the facts. When the Senator from Missouri first presented his resolution, soon after the Senate convened, it was announced to the Senator from Missouri that the Senate had not reached the order of the presentation of resolutions. So the resolution was laid on the desk informally until the order of Senate resolutions was reached. Then, some little time later—possibly an hour or more—the Senator offered his resolution with the request as stated by the Senator from Missouri, to which request the Senator from Idaho objected and at once made his motion that it be referred to a standing committee. Before that motion was put the Senator from Missouri discussed it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if I may have the indulgence of the Chair and of the Senate for a very few minutes, before the Chair rules and before the matter is disposed of, I should like to say a word.

Without reference to the wisdom or the unwisdom or the advisability of this proposed proceeding, it seems to me that the Senate ought to proceed in one case as it proceeds in all cases. I see no reason for an exceptional proceeding in this instance. If by a vote of the Senate this resolution is referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, it can be but for one purpose, and that purpose must be from hope or expectation of shutting off debate, of depriving the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] of the opportunity of speaking to the resolution, as he has announced his intention of doing. As he says, I well recall, and as every Senator sitting in this body at that time must recall, the circumstance, when it was proposed on the resolution of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to reopen the so-called Lorimer case, that it was debated here at considerable length before it went to any committee. The question was what kind of committee should be appointed or to what committee the subject should be referred for investigation. I see no reason for departing from the practice of the Senate. But, after all, Mr. President, if the purpose is to deny to a Senator the right to speak, to say what he has a right to say on the floor of the Senate, it is, thank Heaven, a pretty hard thing to deprive him of that right by any kind of parliamentary legerdemain. He will find the opportunity to do it, and so nothing is gained.

I am not speaking now of the merits of the proposition to make this investigation; I am not referring to that. I am referring simply to this proceeding now that seeks to deprive my colleague of the right to say what he thinks he ought to say in respect to this resolution. If he speaks out of order, improperly, in violation of the rules of the Senate, he can be called to account here; but to undertake to deny him the right to speak at all is something that the Senate, in my judgment, ought not to attempt to do.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I call the attention of the Chair to subdivision 5 of Rule XIV, which reads as follows:

5. All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

As the Senator from Idaho interposed his objection, the effect of that was to remove the resolution from the consideration of the Senate for this day. No motion could be made with reference to it, either to refer it or to lay it upon the table, or otherwise dispose of it. I submit that that disposed of it until to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is reasonably well understood that this is to be a session devoted to playing politics.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, would I still be within my rights if I asked for a ruling by the Chair before this matter is disposed of, because if the point of order is well taken it cuts off debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from New Hampshire desires to discuss the point of order, the Chair certainly would not refuse to hear him.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I so understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not intend to discuss the point of order that was raised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order raised by the Senator from Arkansas is well taken, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that being the case, I will withhold what I intended to say until the resolution appears again.

REPRINT OF JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that a reprint of the judicial code shall be ordered by the Senate. Copies of that publication have been exhausted and there are numerous calls for it. I would really like to ask that a very much larger number might be printed than can be printed under the rule, and as the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing is on the floor perhaps he will help me to have a larger number printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing I have ordered all the copies of the codes printed that it is possible to print under the law. I ask the Senator if he desires the reprint for the use of the Senate only or for the House of Representatives as well?

Mr. BAILEY. My request contemplated copies only for the use of the Senate, assuming that the House, if it so desired, would order it printed; but if the Senator from Utah has already this reprint in progress—

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I have already had the Committee on Printing to order as many copies printed as the law will allow me to do as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. I will therefore suggest to the Senator that in his request he name the number to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood there was a limitation upon the cost.

Mr. SMOOT. There is.

Mr. BAILEY. And without knowing what the cost would be I did not think it was safe to name the number.

Mr. SMOOT. That is so.

Mr. BAILEY. The chairman of the committee suggests that it would be possible for us to print 3,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask, for information, is that the judiciary code?

Mr. BAILEY. It is.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I can throw a little light on the matter. The code is being annotated. Senators will observe that they just put bodily in the references of the old Revised Statutes, and with the division and subdivision under the reorganization of those sections the references are utterly without application. I am now having that reannotated and conformed to the present form of the code, and I think it would be a misfortune to print it as it is.

Mr. BAILEY. It undoubtedly would be a waste of public money to reprint it, as the Senator from Idaho is having the better arrangement made.

Mr. HEYBURN. In this connection I will say to the Senator that I should like to have some cooperation to devise a method of paying for it. It is being done now at my own expense. There is no fund out of which that work can be paid for, inasmuch as the committee has lapsed by reason of the failure of the other House to provide for that end of the joint committee. There is no fund against which to draw for this work. I simply entered into an arrangement with a competent person to work in cooperation with me to do that without any prospect of pay, but there should be some prospect of it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Idaho will find no difficulty when he brings that work into the Senate to have it printed. If he will bring with it a resolution to pay for the fair value of the services performed, the Senate will make no objection to it, because it is a work that ought to be done. I withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas withdraws his request.

PROPOSED PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if permissible, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions when it is his intention to call up the general pension bill, and also when it is his intention to call up the various omnibus pension bills now on the calendar?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it had been my hope and expectation to have disposed of the private pension bills to-day. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] indicated to me some time ago his desire to speak to the private pension bills, and asked me to delay action upon them until he could be prepared to express his views upon them generally. I have from day to day allowed them to go over with that understanding. I had also from recent talks with the Senator from Georgia assumed that he would be able to take the matter up at the beginning of this week, but he sends up word to-day that he is not well, and therefore, during his absence and while he is unwell, I certainly do not wish to press the bills for consideration. I only desire to say that if the junior Senator from Georgia shall be able to speak to them in the early part of the week, I shall ask the Senate not only to take up and dispose of the private pension bills, but I shall ask, as soon as he is able, as he has indicated his desire possibly to oppose the general pension bill, that that bill also be taken up for consideration at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply desire to state, in order that the matter may be definitely presented, that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] is confined at home by illness at this time. He is not simply indisposed, but is not able to be in the Senate on account of personal illness.

LAWRENCE (MASS.) LABOR STRIKE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 231), as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to obtain and report to the Senate, through the Bureau of Labor, full information concerning the condition of the mill workers in Lawrence, Mass., and especially those now engaged in strike—their wages and conditions of living; also what approximate percentage of these employees are subjects of foreign countries and of what foreign countries; also what action has been taken by the local authorities at Lawrence to forcibly interfere with the free passage of said aliens or others from the city of Lawrence and State of Massachusetts to other States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to the present consideration of the resolution. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to say, in connection with the resolution, that a condition has arisen, growing out of this strike in the city of Lawrence, which immediately involves the responsibility of the Federal Government. The local authorities have absolutely failed in the function, which they are obliged to perform, of guaranteeing the people who are involved in this strike the privileges and immunities of the Constitution of the United States.

A large number of these people are citizens of foreign countries. The fact that those people have been denied the privilege of free travel and free passage from one State to another State raises a situation which may at any moment become an international question, and with respect to which a foreign country can deal only with the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Washington permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the Senator to say that the local authorities have shown themselves incapable of dealing with the situation. I desire to ask if the executive of that State—I believe the legislature is not in session—

Mr. LODGE. It is in session.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in session.

Mr. BAILEY. I am told by the Senator from Massachusetts that it is in session. Then I desire to ask the Senator from Washington if the Legislature of Massachusetts has asked Federal assistance in dealing with the situation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not understand that the legislature has asked for Federal assistance, and this resolution does not intend or provide that the Federal Government shall supplant the authorities of Massachusetts. It calls for information as to the percentage of aliens, whether or not these people are aliens, and as to what has been done, what action has been taken by the local authorities representing the government of Massachusetts in prohibiting them from passing from one State to another—from the State of Massachusetts into another State.

Mr. BAILEY. I was attracted more by the Senator's argument upon which he seeks to support the resolution than by the language of the resolution itself. I thought it rather a novel doctrine to be advanced that, without any request from the legislature, if it is in session, or if it is not in session, without any request from the governor, the Federal Government shall take notice of the fact that the local authorities are unable to deal with a violent situation in Massachusetts, for at last it could be nothing more, according to the Senator's statement, than a scene of domestic violence; and if the State of Massachusetts chooses to suffer under that condition without an appeal through her constituted authorities to the General Government, I think we have no jurisdiction over it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose a moment ago to say that Massachusetts seems to be taking care of this matter in a perfectly competent way. The governor has intervened; the legislature is now in session; and it occurs to me that if Congress is to take cognizance of every strike that occurs in this country, and if an appeal is to be made to the Government of the United States to take a hand in such controversies, we are getting on rather dangerous ground.

Of course, the resolution goes over, and I presume it will be debated to-morrow; and when it is debated some of us will have a word to say on the subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to ask unanimous consent—

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator from Washington a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. The question I desire to ask is whether any foreign government has made any complaint to the Government of the United States of the denial of treaty rights to any of the people who are concerned in Lawrence?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not that I know of.

Mr. ROOT. If so, what government and under what treaties?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not aware of any application made by a foreign government for action by the United States.

This is the situation which exists in Lawrence: The authorities are absolutely ignoring the privileges to which the residents of Lawrence are entitled as residents of the United States; some of them are citizens of the United States. They have been prevented from leaving the city of Lawrence with the intention of going outside of the State of Massachusetts and into another State. There is no pretense on the part of the local authorities that these people were violating any law. There is no charge against them of having committed any crime. But large numbers of them, by military force, apparently without any authority except that of the commander of the militia and the chief of police of the city, have been seized and violently handled, put into patrol wagons, incarcerated in jails, because they were attempting to get on a train and leave the State of Massachusetts.

Of course the jurisdiction of the United States is involved. That jurisdiction is usually exercised through the courts. It may be inquired into by the Department of Justice. Various situations may arise which may call for congressional action.

I do not know that any foreign government has taken cognizance of this situation up to the present time. I do not know that the authorities of the State of Massachusetts have considered the question of appealing to the United States Government. But when an unprecedented situation arises—not, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, like any of the frequent strikes which have taken place, but under conditions which never existed before in the case of any strike in the United States—when the hand of the military authorities, without even going through the form of declaring martial law, is put in the place of the guaranties of the Constitution, so far as personal rights are concerned, it seems to me perfectly pertinent and appropriate for the Senate of the United States to call for particular information on that subject from one of the bureaus of the executive department which is equipped with the machinery to get that information.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an impression that if the Senator from Washington had taken a little more time and deliberation to inquire into the facts in this case he would not treat this question as broadly as he does. I do not believe that the authorities of Massachusetts have done violence to the Constitution of the United States or have deprived anybody of his constitutional or legal rights; but that will appear in due time.

The Senator from Washington is altogether too impetuous in this matter. He wants to take care of the citizens of foreign governments without being asked to do so, and he wants to impeach the integrity of a sovereign State, and he is doing it upon inadequate information. I think if the Senator will possess his soul in patience a few days longer the authorities of Massachusetts will vindicate what they have done. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not impatient, and I am perfectly willing to assume the responsibility for my action upon the information which I already have. I have some particular information which I think is sufficient to substantiate the statements I have made as to the conditions existing there, and I can not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that only foreign Governments are interested in this fight, or that only the people residing in the city of Lawrence are interested in this question. The Constitution of the United States can not be held to apply to some people in our land and not to others. It has to work as to all alike or it will not work at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not say that only citizens of foreign Governments are involved in this matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator to say that I was undertaking to interfere on behalf of foreign countries. I am not undertaking to interfere on behalf of foreign countries. I am not undertaking to interfere on behalf of the citizens of Lawrence or the State of Massachusetts. I consider that every citizen of the United States who has any regard for American institutions and for the American Constitution, which we hear so much about these days, is deeply interested in this question. It is simply a matter of substituting the irresponsible rule of a temporary local autocrat for the law. That is the situation which exists there to-day, and as to which this resolution calls for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that some of the people who have been making a good deal of trouble in the city of Lawrence, and for whose constitutional rights the Senator from Washington is appealing, are in jail at the present time, and properly so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A great many of them are in jail, and they are in jail without having committed any offense against the laws of the United States. They are in jail without being charged with any offense against the laws of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Have they committed any offense against the laws of the State?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have committed no offense against the laws of the city or of the State.

Mr. BAILEY. Then a writ of habeas corpus will release them from imprisonment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has not.

Mr. BAILEY. Has it been sued out?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think these people are capable of suing out a writ of habeas corpus. I doubt if they have the ability to employ a lawyer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do you refer to Mr. Ettor?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was not referring to Mr. Ettor.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not be willing to impeach the authorities of Massachusetts and its people like that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would. I am willing to impeach the authorities in that part of the State. I suppose ultimately these people will find a means to assert their rights. At present they are in jail, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, and they are in jail because they undertook to send a portion of their families from Massachusetts to Pennsylvania. That is the offense for which they are in jail, and the only offense.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not say those people are in jail. They are not the ones I had reference to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator referred to Mr. Ettor. I am not referring to Mr. Ettor.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator's statement is rather interesting, if he is well informed. I must confess that I am utterly unable to believe that there is a statute in the State of Massachusetts which allows the imprisonment of a man because he chooses to send a part of his family to some other State; and if that is the offense for which these people are imprisoned, then, there being no law of that kind on the books, as I am compelled to believe, in the absence of special knowledge to the contrary, obviously this imprisonment is unlawful; and if any man in Massachusetts, without taking the time to come down to Washington and lay the matter before a Senator from another State, would go to the governor of that Commonwealth, who, I understand, is a great friend of the people, especially of the oppressed and the downtrodden, I am sure he would employ counsel. He would order the attorney general for the State, if necessary, to institute habeas corpus proceedings to release these people from such an unlawful and outrageous imprisonment.

I am curious to hear what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is going to say about the manner in which they execute the laws in his State.

Mr. LODGE. The exact facts have not been stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator. I am perfectly willing to wait until he shall have concluded.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator desires to interrupt me, to have him proceed. I am not quite through, however.

Mr. LODGE. I will wait until the Senator is through, and then I will say what I have to say.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to say in conclusion, however unwilling the Senator from Texas is to believe that people can be imprisoned because they are attempting to send a portion of their families out of the State, nevertheless that is the condition existing in Lawrence at this time. Of course, there is no statute prohibiting their going. Consequently the imprisonment is invalid and unlawful. It is simply a forcible imprisonment. It is the substitution of military force for the civil law.

This resolution simply calls for information upon the subject. A number of women, with their children, went to the train for the purpose of putting those children in the care of certain friends, to send them into another State. They were confronted by a cordon of police. The police were backed up by a cordon of militia. They were seized, screaming and resisting, and by force carried by the military authorities from the depot to the jail and incarcerated there.

Then, after having taken their children from them, the parents were charged with neglecting their children. The children were incarcerated in a house of detention for the destitute and poor, after they had been seized, taken from parents who were attempting to provide and were providing means for their care and support.

The resolution calls for no action on the part of the Federal Government. It calls for information.

Mr. BAILEY. One more question, and then I will not interrupt the Senator further. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the legislature of that State is now in session.

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. And I assume, therefore, that the executive of that State is in his office.

Mr. LODGE. He is.

Mr. BAILEY. I repeat, it is impossible for me to believe that a condition such as the Senator describes could exist in that ancient and honorable Commonwealth without there being a man in the legislature to raise his voice against it—I understand the majority there are Republicans—

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. And without the Democratic governor of that Commonwealth making a protest. But even if the Senator from Washington is right in what he says, which discloses a deplorable condition, it is still a Massachusetts condition with which we have nothing to do. But I hardly think such a condition could exist in any American Commonwealth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to read very briefly from the report of the Bureau of Labor, which was referred to a moment ago by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], relating to conditions of people not in Lawrence, but in other mill towns similarly situated. The mills in Lawrence are woolen mills. But the conditions under which labor is employed are similar:

The history of the cotton industry in Fall River is the same as that in other New England towns. In the beginning the employees were all Americans. These were replaced by the English and Irish immigrants. The English and Irish have been in a large measure replaced by the French Canadians, and now the French Canadians are being replaced by the Italians, Poles, and Portuguese. In each case the story has been the same. The newcomers, filling at first the positions demanding unskilled labor, gradually work their way into the more skilled positions until they dominate the whole industry.

Each succeeding race has come in with a standard of living lower than the prevailing one. This is graphically represented in Fall River. The workers of the different races live in different sections and quarters of the city. The standard of living that prevails among them can be told by even a cursory visit to the different sections. The Americans are so few as to be practically eliminated. The English and Irish no longer constitute distinct communities. The French Canadians are in communities and still dominate the occupations demanding skill, although many Italians, Poles, and Portuguese are now found among the weavers.

As the various newcomers rise in the industrial scale, their standard of living will no doubt gradually rise also. The test of their present condition is not whether their income permits them to live as well as they now desire, but whether it appears to offer any possibility of their gradual attainment of the standard set by the older races in the industry.

Mr. BAILEY. All this happened under the Republican protective tariff.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3812) to regulate public utilities in the District of Columbia and to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duties and powers of a public-utilities commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the situation in the city of Lawrence is one of very great seriousness, and it is a very severe misfortune both to the State and to the community in which the strike has occurred.

The point to which the Senator from Washington refers is in relation to the removal of children. Early in the strike a large number of children were sent from Lawrence to the city of New York, where they were made the subjects of a great Socialist demonstration, and it was supposed that they were sent there for that purpose. They have now begun to send children again to other points in the country. The local authorities, for reasons unknown to me, have taken what seems to me the extraordinary step of interfering with the dispatch of these children from the city. There was an attempt, as I am informed, to send the children to Philadelphia or elsewhere. Why the authorities have stopped it I do not know. As I said, it seems to me an extraordinary step. It is done, I think, under the statute in regard to abandoned children, which makes provision for the public care of children abandoned by their parents. If arrests have been made they have been made, I suppose, under the statute which provides for dealing with parents who neglect their children.

The State government is in full operation. The governor, the legislature, and the attorney general are, I believe, entirely competent to deal with the situation in Lawrence.

It is a very grievous situation, as I have said, but I do not know why this particular step has been taken. I should be glad to learn what the reasons of the local authorities were for taking that step, and on that I have no information. But it seems to me that the State is perfectly able to deal with the situation. There is no reason that I know of to suppose that the State is not able to deal with it. If wrong is being done in the treatment of these people, the governor and the State authorities can stop it in a moment. The wrong, if it has been done, has been done simply by the local police.

I think, Mr. President, in justice to the State, the State might be allowed to deal with this situation until it is apparent that it requires the interference of the United States Government. Reference has been made to the guaranty of a republican form of government, but Mr. President, there is no suggestion whatever of anything of that sort. There is no disorder with which the State has not been able to cope. Order has been maintained there by the usual authorities. The question is solely the one I have pointed out—that of the dispatch of these children to other cities and to other States. As I said, I can not explain why that step has been taken by the local authorities, but nothing should be done until all facts are known, and I see nothing that warrants action by the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. The parents remaining behind.

Mr. LODGE. The parents of the children remaining behind, of course.

Mr. President, I have no objection in the world to having the Commissioner of Labor, if it is desired, make a report upon labor conditions. I have no desire to conceal anything there or have anything concealed. If there is wrong I want to have it brought out and brought to the light, and I have no objection to the Commissioner of Labor doing it, but he has no right to interfere or to investigate the State authorities. I think that on every ground we should refrain from calling on the United States to interfere in a State where the legislature is in session and the governor is active, and when no representation on the matter has been made to the executive authorities or to the Senators or the Representatives from the State.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask a question? Is there any pretense that the State of Massachusetts or the local authorities can not maintain order, or at any rate do they confess that they can not?

Mr. LODGE. Not the slightest. The whole question is the removal or the dispatch of these children by their parents to other cities outside the Commonwealth, and in one case to a town in Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the ground upon which it is urged that the Federal Government should interpose itself in this affair?

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand precisely what the ground is on which the Federal Government is asked to interpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER obtained the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The course of this discussion leads me to believe that I have misunderstood the resolution or else other Senators have done so. I wish to be corrected if I am in error. As I understand the resolution, it does not contemplate in any degree any interference whatever with the situation in the State of Massachusetts either with the functions that we would expect the legislature or the governor to exercise, but it simply provides for an inquiry into the conditions there and a report of those conditions to the Senate. If that be true, I fail to see where there is anything improper in the resolution. The situation is certainly an extraordinary one. The conditions of labor in a great manufacturing industry are of interest to the Senate, and information of that kind will be of value to the Senate whether it contemplates any interference in the situation in Massachusetts or not. So much was said about the imminent danger of interfering with the strong arm of the Government there that I thought possibly I was mistaken as to the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from South Dakota has very accurately stated the purpose of the resolution. Both the Senator from Massachusetts and myself may be mistaken as to the exact particulars of the situation, but I think we are agreed as to the general features of it, and that situation is not that the governor of Massachusetts or the legislature of Massachusetts have failed to take notice of the situation existing in Lawrence, but that through the governor they are participating in that situation. It is not simply the local police. The militia of the State are there. They have their ball cartridges and their fixed bayonets. It is true that in a sense by that means they are preserving order, if Senators consider that that is the kind of order that our Government was formed to maintain. There is no disorder in a number of families going to a railroad train, a common carrier, for the purpose of getting on board a train to travel to another State. But I say that when they are confronted by a cordon of police, backed up by militia whose colonel has set himself up apparently as the autocrat of the situation, the presumption is that he is acting under the authority of the governor of the State. In restraining these women and forcibly carrying them away they are creating a state of disorder. If there is disorder there, it is created by the authorities of the State. Nobody cares anything for order that is maintained by force at the point of the bayonet unless it is under the authority of the law. That is the situation which exists in Lawrence.

Now, as to the seriousness of it, allow me to say a word. It is very readily understood what the result will be if that policy can be maintained.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has just been describing the matter of the children. I hold in my hand a telegram which has just come from John Golden, who is general president of the United Textile Workers of America, addressed to Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON, chairman of the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives. I did not attempt to go into details about the removal of the children, because I did not know; but I think his telegram will at least convince the Senate that there is more than one aspect to the case. It says:

FALL RIVER, MASS., February 25, 1912.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,
Chairman Committee on Labor, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: In answer to your telegram asking for information relative to the taking away of little children from the city of Lawrence, Mass., permit me to say that organized labor placed its stamp of disapproval upon this inhuman act immediately it became known, being firmly convinced from the beginning it was nothing more nor less than a diabolical scheme on the part of the officers of the Industrial Workers of the World to raise funds for the further propagation of their unholy war of class hatred and social revolution.

Many of these children do not belong to parents who are on strike and many others have been secured either by intimidating the parents or by the grossest misrepresentation. The large sum of money spent in sending these little children long distances from home could be put to far better use by sharing it among needy families, leaving the children to their mother's care. No mother with a spark of parental love wants to part with her offspring, if she can help it. Unacquainted with our American customs, unable to speak our language, they fall an easy prey to the unprincipled tactics of such men as Haywood, Tantom, and others of like character, who, finding it impossible to carry out their evil designs and wrought up to the pitch of desperation as they realize the impending collapse of their efforts to prevent an amicable settlement of the dispute in Lawrence, do not hesitate to use little children even to extent of tearing them away from their parents.

If any unnecessary violence was used by the officers of the law in preventing these children from being taken away a searching investigation should be made and the offenders punished. If any constitutional law has been violated our courts must decide that question, and decide quickly; but in the final analysis the real ones who deserve to be punished are those who made such an occurrence as the one in the city of Lawrence last Saturday possible and who, when the clash came, sneaked into the train or around a street corner, leaving the mothers and their little ones to their own fate.

JOHN GOLDEN,

General President United Textile Workers of America.

I read that, Mr. President, simply to show that there is another side of this question and that the Senate knowing as little as it does ought not to undertake to pass upon it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the resolution introduced does not ask the Senate to pass upon it, but for the very reason of knowing as little about it as it does it seeks means of obtaining information. It makes no difference, Mr. President, whether the assumption—

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator—

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment. Whether the autocratic authority to seize people and carry them away by violence when they are not violating any law is concurred in by Mr. Golden, who has written the telegram which the Senator has just read, or whether it is the sole act of the local authorities of Massachusetts, in either case it is a violation of every principle of our laws and institutions and the rights of the citizens of this country.

The fact that Mr. Golden casts some aspersion upon some unknown persons—I do not know and I do not care who they are—because he says they went around and got on board trains and went away and left these women and children to face the situation by themselves indicates the character of that telegram. What does he mean by that? That the people he refers to ought to have stayed there with the women and children and faced the militia and police and fought out the situation?

Mr. LODGE. What he means is that the agitators he refers to by name—Haywood, Tantom, and others—got all these children together with a view of deporting them somewhere. Then when they found they were not going to be allowed to do it they sneaked off and left the mothers and children.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was a horrible situation to leave them in under the circumstances, but I scarcely see how these people could have combatted with the police. I do not know what would have come from an attempt on their part to fight with the police and militia. That indicates the evil of this situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Senator to refer, and it seemed to me in a rather contemptuous tone, to the fact that the State authorities had made themselves autocrats of the situation there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not mean all the State authorities; I mean those who are in charge of the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator to say that a colonel in command of the troops had rendered himself an autocrat.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that this seemingly was with the approval of the governor of the State of Massachusetts and the authorities of the State of Massachusetts. I understand that that constitutes the gravamen of his complaint. I want to ask him if Massachusetts is not constitutionally the autocrat of the situation, and ought not to remain the autocrat of the situation? Now, the Senator has just said—

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has asked his question. Now allow me to answer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say that the State of Massachusetts, assuming to be an autocrat in defiance of the Constitution of the United States, it ought not to be allowed to remain in that position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, Mr. President, the Senator tells me that the State of Massachusetts ought not to remain an autocrat in defiance of the Constitution of the United States, and to that I subscribe. No State has the right to do that, and nobody has contended since Calhoun urged nullification that any State had the right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the Senator ought to have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the Senator this question: In what respect have the authorities of the State of Massachusetts, through this colonel receiving the approbation of the Massachusetts authorities, violated the Constitution of the United States, and why, therefore, can we as a Federal Government interpose in a matter of police regulation in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We are not interposing in a matter of police regulation. We are not asking leave to exercise military authority or military force in the State of Massachusetts. We are asking for information, which may be valuable in various actions which the Senate will have to take.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment more—

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator asks a great number of questions, and then proceeds with other questions without giving me an opportunity to answer them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I had given the opportunity to answer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator asks me in what respect—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the Senator had answered that by saying he was merely seeking information.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho will state it.

Mr. HEYBURN. A demand that the resolution go over for one day having been made, I submit the question of order that it is not debatable, and that we shall proceed with the regular order of business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has gone over. The resolution is not here; the subject seems to be.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. LODGE. And the unfinished business was temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was temporarily laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. But, Mr. President, if the Senate chooses to discuss this question in connection with anything before it, of course, it can do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows of no method by which a Senator can be taken off his feet, no matter on what subject he desires to address the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not desire that, but I wanted to know whether the resolution had gone over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has gone over. The resolution is not here.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the echo remains.

Mr. LODGE. The echo remains.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not now a question in connection with some one inquiry. Inquiry and action are not far apart. It seems to me that under the rule we can not demand information except upon a subject matter concerning which we propose later to act. Therefore I asked the Senator from Washington the main question, which was where the Federal Constitution had been violated, and where the authority of the Federal Government could be asked to interpose itself in a matter which, as I understand it, is a question of police regulation and the conservation of peace in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The privileges of the Constitution have been suspended by the military authorities preventing families or parts of families from going from one State to another. The Senator can readily understand, if this policy is to be sustained and continued, the people who engage in this strike or this controversy, or whatever it may be, can very easily be starved out. They are not working. When they were working they were getting something like $7.50 a week in these mills, and a great many families were supported on wages of $8 or $8.50 a week. Now they are not working. If the mill owners can prevent them from leaving the town, and they can not go from one State to another, and they do it by violence, without any complaint being made in any court against it—

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Starvation will be the result. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose the resolution is passed and we get the testimony the Senator desires, what is the Senate or Congress going to do about it? What can we do?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Congress may instruct the Attorney-General of the United States to begin proceedings in the courts of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator thinks that Congress has the right to instruct the Attorney General?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it has a right to request executive action. It is a very common practice on the part of Congress to pass resolutions and call for various branches of the executive departments to take this, that, or the other action. Congress may use this information in the consideration of the tariff bill which comes before this body. It is maintained that an exorbitant tariff on wool is necessary to insure a high standard of labor in the woolen mills. It may be valuable for that purpose. It may be valuable in case some foreign government should take action such as the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] referred to a few moments ago, in making an inquiry about the treatment of its subjects and the denial to them of the immunities of the law. That is what has happened. I said a military autocrat—I happened to use that word. The military authority assuming complete power, attempting to regulate the domestic affairs of private families in this community, issuing military orders, instructing them when they can not send their children away, and under what condition they may send them away. I assume that the colonel commanding the militia is a subordinate officer to the governor of the State. I do not know to what extent the governor supervises the orders which he makes, but he is acting under the general authority of the governor of the State and is setting himself up in place of the government prescribed by the law.

I say it is perfectly proper and pertinent for the Senate of the United States to call for that information.

Mr. STONE. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington a question, with his permission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator to say that these mills at Lawrence, Mass., began operating with American working men and women.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I read from a report to that effect.

Mr. STONE. And that they proceeded on a descending scale in the employment of labor so far as wages went and the quality of the labor, until now they are operated by a lot of people from southeastern Europe who do not speak the English language, who do not, as has been suggested to me, have a sufficient knowledge of our institutions and of their rights to apply for a writ of habeas corpus, and that now people are working there for about $7 a week, or about a dollar a day. Does the Senator know, and if so I would be glad to have him tell me, whether the owners and operators of these mills are now clamoring for the maintenance of the high-tariff rates prescribed under the Payne-Aldrich Act for the protection of American labor?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not speak from first-hand knowledge as to the attitude of these particular mill owners, but I can hazard a guess that they are.

Mr. CHILTON and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield, and to whom?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. I wanted to ask the Senator a question before he sat down. In looking over the act of 1888, creating the Bureau of Labor, I find among the powers of the Commissioner of Labor the following:

The Commissioner of Labor is also specially charged to investigate the causes of, and facts relating to, all controversies and disputes between employers and employees as they may occur and which may tend to interfere with the welfare of the people of the different States, and report thereon to Congress.

Is the Senator's resolution any broader than that language of the act of Congress, which is still in force and which imposes that duty upon the Commissioner of Labor?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think it is any broader. That is the ground upon which I framed this resolution, directing it to a particular bureau that is authorized by law to do this particular thing.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, one more word, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. Why should we again ask him to do his duty under an act of Congress?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We may ask him for information on this particular case, because it is a situation which has arisen. It is a new situation, and we simply ask him, by resolution, to investigate a particular situation, which investigation is within his general authority.

Mr. CHILTON. But the act says that he shall make this investigation and make the report upon each instance as it may occur.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from West Virginia a question? Will he read the portion of the statute which authorizes him to investigate the operations of State authorities?

Mr. CHILTON. I hope there is no such statute in existence.

Mr. LODGE. That is the point which is to be investigated. It is whether the authorities of Massachusetts have been doing their duty and whether the police regulations are proper. That is the question. It is not a resolution to investigate the merits of the controversy between the employers of labor and the employees; it is to investigate the action of the local authorities. I did not catch anything in the statute relating to that.

Mr. CHILTON. It is not there, of course.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is authority in the statute which was read by the Senator from West Virginia which would authorize the Commissioner of Labor to investigate the action of the local authorities. The statute directs him to investigate the conditions of labor, and where those conditions are affected in any way by the action of the local authorities it is his business to investigate to some extent the local authorities. He certainly does investigate—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment.

The Commissioner of Labor constantly investigates the action of local authorities and includes that in his report. His report refers to local regulations and to the action of local authorities as affecting the conditions of labor and the relations of laborers to their employers. This statute was passed in 1888, and, of course, those who framed it could not have foreseen at that time the condition arising in Lawrence, Mass. As the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has suggested, the Commissioner of Labor may already have this information. The resolution simply calls upon him to report it to the Senate, if he has it, and then it will not be necessary for him to make any further investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is one thing that the passage of the resolution would bring about, and that would be an additional appropriation of public moneys to this bureau. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. President, it is an easy matter for Senators to say that in the industrial centers of New England men are working for seven or eight dollars a week, intimating that that is the usual wage.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is close to the average wage. I know it is—leaving out the mechanics.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not know what he asserts.

Again, Mr. President, it is easy for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to indulge in a fling at the advocates of protection. We are accustomed to that; but if the Senator from Washington will take the trouble to inquire as to the amount of money that is in the savings banks of New Hampshire to the credit of the operatives in the woolen, cotton, and other mills of that State it will be illuminating to him.

Mr. BAILEY. We are not talking about New Hampshire now, but about Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I said "New Hampshire," I meant Massachusetts; but it applies to New Hampshire as well as to Massachusetts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like very much to have the information, and consequently have introduced the resolution calling for it. I think it would be very illuminating.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think the resolution calls for the information which I suggest at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It certainly does call for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I said that if the Senator would inquire and ascertain the amount of money to the credit of those people in the savings banks of New England it would be a matter that would interest him very much and it would give him information that I think would be valuable.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be extremely interesting to me if it could be shown that people working for an average of $7 or $7.50 a week had savings-bank accounts.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would be still more interesting to me to have the Senator establish as a fact what is a mere assertion on his part.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing to rely on reports based on the resolution which I have introduced. If the Senator wants the information he certainly will not object to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not need it, because I know it is not correct.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that I know that it is correct; but I do not care to bandy words with the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to that matter. I have very accurate and, I consider, very reliable information as to the average wage of the millworkers. It is true there is a class of skilled mechanics—machinists—who get a higher wage; but, leaving those out of consideration and taking the millworkers alone, $7.50—

Mr. GALLINGER. Women and those under age included.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly. Seven dollars and fifty cents a week is approximately the average wage.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is below the average wage, and that includes women, who constitute a very considerable part of the operatives in the mills in New England, and some children.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Comparatively speaking, there are few skilled machinists included among these mill workers. Most of them are outside of that class entirely.

Mr. President, anything which affects a large number of people in Massachusetts—I do not care whether they are Poles, Slavs, Canadians, French, or Portuguese; and I understand there are 31 different languages spoken by the mill workers in the town of Lawrence—it makes no difference to what nationality they belong, anything that degrades those people, anything that grinds them down to a condition of absolute penury, any situation which allows the authorities, when they are in that condition, to prevent them from leaving the town and leaving the State for the purpose of bettering themselves, degrades the average citizenship of the United States. It is a circumstance in which everyone is interested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator any evidence that there has been any restraint put upon men who want to leave that State to better their condition?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is most conclusive evidence that there has been restraint used upon men and restraint used upon grown women, the mothers of families, to prevent them from taking their own children out of the State.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; to prevent them sending their own children out of the State, abandoning them, making them objects of charity—

Mr. POINDEXTER. My information is not that they abandoned them.

Mr. GALLINGER. And clearing the decks in Lawrence for what may follow; and, in view of what has happened, the Senator can imagine what may follow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, there is a difference of opinion about what has happened; but I want to say that the assertion of force in the place of law against these mill workers is the greatest incentive in the world to encourage the adoption of forcible measures on their part against the mill owners.

Mr. GALLINGER. But did not these men leave their work and then refuse to allow others to take their places?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will not inquire—

Mr. GALLINGER. Have not the leaders, who came from other States, instigated and advised violence and committed murder?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am informed not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well—

Mr. POINDEXTER. But if they did, it is no excuse or justification for the assertion of violence, or of force, or unlawful arrest on the part of the authorities. I do not think any such violence has occurred on the part of the mill workers. If it did, it ought to be put down. The same law ought to be exerted against them as ought to be exerted in their favor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. It is stated in the telegram which has been read, and I know it as a fact of general repute, that the violence which occurred on certain occasions during the trouble in Lawrence was largely due to an organization known as the Industrial Workers of the World. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether that organization has ever appeared in his State?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think so.

Mr. LODGE. And whether anything has ever been done about it by city authorities in the State of Washington? I am told that in Aberdeen, Wash., the Industrial Workers of the World were deprived by the city authorities of entry within the city limits. Is that true?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know that the city authorities ever deprived them of entry within the city limits. If they did, I would not consider it as reprehensible as preventing them from leaving the city limits after they got in.

Mr. LODGE. Is it true that in the city of Spokane the Industrial Workers of the World were prevented from making speeches and were arrested under the order of the city authorities?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not answer in detail the catechism of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I will say in general answer to him—

Mr. LODGE. Well, I was told by citizens of Washington that those instances both occurred. I have not gone into the State of the Senator from Washington and, without reference to him, undertaken to deal with matters there as he has kindly done in the case of my State; but I wanted to call attention to the fact that the Industrial Workers of the World have been treated with some severity in the State of Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand—

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it an anarchistic organization?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know that there was difficulty between the city of Spokane, my home city, and the Industrial Workers of the World. The only force, so far as I know, that we used on that occasion was in stopping their meetings. There was considerable opposition to that action of the police by the people of the city. There never was, in the city of Spokane, in connection with that organization, any such action; and, so far as I know, there has never been in the United States, in connection with that or any other organization, any such unprecedented, extraordinary procedure as has taken place in the city of Lawrence.

I am not undertaking to interfere in any way with what is exclusively a matter of importance to Massachusetts. This is a matter of Federal importance; it is a matter of national importance; it is a matter in which everyone in this country is interested; and, assuming that such occurrences took place in the city of Spokane as the Senator from Massachusetts asserts, that the Industrial Workers of the World violated the law, that the authorities stopped them from violating the law and enforced order, by the same token when the mill owners and the local authorities undertake to exercise force and violence against the mill workers, the same law ought to be invoked in their behalf that is invoked against them. The law should not operate in one direction only. If it is going to operate at all, it must operate both ways and be an equal protection to both parties to the controversy. The fact that it has not done so is the obnoxious feature of the action of the local authorities at Lawrence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the so-called Industrial Workers of the World have exploited themselves in the State of Washington, as I am informed, as they have in other parts of the country. Mr. Ettor, who is at the head of that organization, is in command at Lawrence, aided by Mr. Haywood, of unsavory fame. They have taken possession there. If the Senator would read some of the declarations made by those two men in Lawrence, I do not think he would be so sure that it was not necessary for the authorities to take some summary action to protect the people and the property of that city.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him. I now want to offer an amendment to the resolution and to have it read, printed, and lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the proposed amendment to the resolution.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the words "concerning the," it is proposed to insert:

Circumstances that occasioned the strike in Lawrence, Mass., what persons not residents of the State are engaged in it, what acts of violence and intimidation have been committed, and by whom.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection whatever to that amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not surprised—

Mr. HEYBURN. Can we have the regular order?

Mr. BAILEY. I am not surprised that a Senator who is in favor of the original resolution would agree to that amendment, but I would like to know what authority the Senate of the United States has to inquire about acts of violence in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as I listened to the two Senators each expressing his opinion with respect to what occurred in the State of the other, I was impressed with the view that one knows just about as much of what happened to Industrial Workers of the World in Washington as the other knows about what happened through the Industrial Workers of the World in Massachusetts; all of which persuades me that the Constitution was wise in leaving to each State the matters which affect it and its people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in offering the amendment—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in offering the amendment I, of course, do not commit myself to the resolution. Whether it is amended or not, I shall vote against it, but in response to the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] I will say that we do know something of what has happened in Massachusetts, because we know that some men have been arrested in their mad career there who had—

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say that the Senator from New Hampshire did not know what had happened in Massachusetts; I credited him with knowing that; but I expressed a doubt regarding the information of the Senator from Washington about Massachusetts and an equal doubt about the information of the Senator from New Hampshire regarding the State of Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a little information that I will communicate in private to the Senator from Texas, if he desires. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, if it is worse than we have already heard, I commend the Senator for wanting to communicate it in private. [Laughter.] But, so far as I am concerned, I daily witness an illustration of the wisdom of our fathers in ordaining a Government which left to each State the settlement of every subject which immediately and only concerns the people of that State. Whether or not there has been violence, either with or without justification, in the State of Massachusetts, I think it affects them, and I am not able to believe that the people of Texas—I will not say the people of Washington, but the people of Texas—at least, are interested in that except in a neighborly way.

We learn something, however—and our friend from Missouri [Mr. STONE], with his customary alertness, has not failed to emphasize what we have been learning—about the operations of the tariff law. My distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who sits by me here, has continually reminded me through all this debate that the industrial conditions now existing in Massachusetts are as bad as, if not worse than, the conditions which existed in the South before the war.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have substituted industrial slavery for chattel slavery.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are not as bad as they were under the operation of the Democratic tariff law of 1894.

Mr. BAILEY. "Still harping on my daughter." [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator surely does not like to hear about that tariff law. The operatives have some wages now; they did not have any then.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, for the last 15 years no reference has ever been made to conditions when some of our friends on the other side have not referred to those bitter days from 1892 to 1897, days the bitterness of which began under a Republican administration and ended under a Democratic administration. I have often wondered what would become of our Republican friends if, in the providence of God and with the sanction of the American people, that tariff act of 1894 had not been passed. Some of them would be speechless whenever the tariff or any related subject was mentioned, because it is the burden of all they say, and sometimes they make it a burden without saying it, because they exhibit placards and posters and other appeals to people who can see without reasoning as to the effect of that law. I think it demonstrable—although this is not the time to demonstrate it—that our friends exaggerate the bad effects of that law, and I am almost persuaded that when the tariff question comes before the Senate again I shall attempt to convince the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and that other sturdy champion of high tariff, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]—although just exactly how sturdy he is in these days of division and discord in the Republican Party I am not able to say—

Mr. GALLINGER. And of harmony in the Democratic Party.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not care to stop the Senator's speech, but, if the Senator will allow me, I shall conclude in a moment.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I had not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not abuse the Senator's courtesy by making a Democratic speech even in an insurgent Republican's time. That would not be exactly courteous, and I beg the Senator's pardon. When I say "insurgent Republican," I want it understood that I do not mean any offense; neither do I mean any offense when I say "a progressive Democrat." I have in my own mind a well-defined idea of the difference. A "progressive Democrat" is a Democrat who does not believe in the old principles of his party, and an "insurgent Republican" is a Republican who does not believe in the present leaders of his party.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the "insurgent Republicans" have no greater distrust of the present-time leaders of the Republican Party than they have of the present-time leaders of the Democratic Party. This resolution, however, was not intended to settle the relative merits of the Democratic and Republican Parties, nor to determine who caused the hard times of 1907. The objection of the Senator from Texas to this resolution was to be expected. It is perfectly in line, perfectly consistent with the objections which I have heard him make on various occasions in the Senate to attempts to secure action by some agency of the Federal Government. I am familiar with the tendency of the Senator from Texas to hark back to the founders of the Constitution and to their times, and to object to every attempt that is made to devise some new agency which the people need under the new conditions which have grown up since the Constitution was framed; but at the same time I have seen the country progress; I have seen the Senate and the other House of Congress create new agencies, not in conflict with the Constitution, but in perfect harmony with it, for the purpose of developing the principles of the Constitution and applying them to these new conditions, notwithstanding the objections of the Senator from Texas. I have seen the activities of the Federal Government which resulted in the report which was read by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], to which he objects and to which I do not object. I have no objection to publicity as to conditions in my State. The people of my State have no objection to any light that may be turned on by the Bureau of Labor, or by any other bureau of the Federal Government, affecting manufacturing conditions or any other conditions within its borders.

Mr. OVERMAN. Neither have I, Mr. President, but I want the conclusions to be just, and I want the truth to be reported by the agents.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, we all have the privilege of objecting to the conclusions.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. RAYNER. Without delaying the Senator, I want to give notice that at the earliest opportunity I desire to address the Senate upon the "Charter of the new Democracy," as expounded by ex-President Roosevelt at Columbus, Ohio, within the last few days.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am sure that will be very delightful.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in that connection I desire—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask to have the address of Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, made at Columbus February 21, printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. No. 348).

Mr. BAILEY. Would it be in order to ask that it be read and printed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request, Mr. President?

Mr. RAYNER. What is the proposition?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that the address of former President Roosevelt at Columbus, Ohio, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will conclude in just one word. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] attempted to cast some aspersions upon this resolution by reference to Haywood and his activities and to the Industrial Workers of the World and their activities in the State of Washington and in the State of Idaho. If Haywood or the Industrial Workers of the World entertain principles not in harmony with the Constitution and not in harmony with the equal operation of the law there is no Member of this body who would go further than I would go to see that they are subjected to the law. It is because I believe in that, because it is necessary that the law should operate equally, because I am opposed to force and violence, whether advocated by Haywood, or the Industrial Workers of the World, or the mill owners of Massachusetts, or the commanders of the militia of Massachusetts, or the chief of police of Lawrence, acting without warrant of law, that I offer this resolution.

Mr. STONE, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. HEYBURN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely desire to ask a question of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who was first on his feet.

Mr. STONE. I do not rise except to ask permission, if it is in order, to make an announcement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I desire to leave the Chamber. I had intended to make some observations to-day on Senate resolution 19 relative to affairs in Mexico, but the time has been otherwise occupied. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the routine morning business, if I can have the consent of the Senate, I shall address the Senate for a few moments on that resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in regard to these announcements, I desire to give notice that after to-day, on each day after the expiration of the morning hour, I shall ask consideration for a matter of the highest privilege—that is, Order of Business No. 299, in relation to the right of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] to a seat in the Senate—and I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of that question until it is disposed of. I give notice of that now. I repeat, it is a question of the highest privilege, and I shall press it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just for a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A moment ago I made objection to a request made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], which, upon more exact information concerning its character, I wish to withdraw.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws his objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota for the printing of the speech delivered by ex-President Roosevelt at Columbus. Is there other objection? If not, the order is entered as requested.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, with the reminder—

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me merely to suggest that I think the ex-President's letter to the governors ought also to be made a part of that speech.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have no objection, as it emphasizes the issue which the ex-President made at Columbus.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the ex-President to the governors be printed on the front page of that speech.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a violation of the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? Mr. HEYBURN. Under the existing rules nothing can be printed on the first page except the regular proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not mean the front page of the Record, but the front page of the document.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not on the front page of the Record.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington still has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield the floor. I have concluded.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wanted to object to that part of the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that the letter referred to be made a part of the speech. I am perfectly willing that it should be printed as a public document, but I do not think it is proper that—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand the request was that it be made a part of the speech, but that it be printed preceding the speech as part of the document.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I object to its being printed in that way. I am perfectly willing that the letter should be printed as an independent document, but do not think it ought to be made a part of the speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; both together or not at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas objects, then, to printing the document in the manner requested by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BRISTOW. Only in the manner.

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask, then, instead of printing it first that it be printed as an appendix to the speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only want to say a word to make my own position and that of my colleague clear. We have not the slightest objection to publicity or to the fullest examination of all the facts that can be made, but what I do object to is inquiring into the action of the State authorities without any warrant, so far as I can see. I believe that the local authorities exceeded their power, and I have just been informed by my colleague, from whom word has come, that the local police exceeded their authority, and the State authorities are now taking steps to deal with and to remedy the conditions. I think they are the proper persons to do so.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may be complete, I ask unanimous consent that the document which we have just authorized to be printed may also contain the statement that the former Vice President made—I have forgotten the exact date, but I think in 1904—to the effect that he would never again accept a nomination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the statement of the former Vice President—

Mr. BACON. The former President. I may have said "Vice President," but I meant President, although he was Vice President before he became President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator to mean the statement of the former President.

Mr. BACON. The statement made in 1904 and also the one made in 1907, which are practically to the same effect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in that connection, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I would suggest that the remarks made by the present Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and by the former Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] at the National Republican Convention of that year, upon the same subject, be included in the same document.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I understood the objection was made to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi and not to my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington object to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to both requests.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BACON. In order that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may be complete, I wish to have inserted as a part of my remarks the words of the two paragraphs which I asked unanimous consent to have printed as a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"On March 4 next I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.—Theodore Roosevelt, November 8, 1904."

"I have not changed and shall not change that decision thus announced.—Theodore Roosevelt, December 11, 1907."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Following up what the Senator from Georgia said, in order that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may be still more full and perfect, I wish to have inserted the speeches to which I referred as the subject of my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will please state more specifically his request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is that there be printed in the RECORD the remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] at the Republican national convention during that year upon the subject of the good faith of the then President in not seeking a renomination and the remarks made at the same time by the temporary chairman, the then Senator Burrows, upon the same subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"Nothing has added so much to his (Roosevelt's) just fame as his persistent and irrevocable refusal to break the unwritten law of the Republic by accepting a nomination for a third term. By this act of self-abnegation he places his name and fame in the secure keeping of history by the side of that of the immortal Washington." [Applause.]

Speech of Julius C. Burrows, temporary chairman of the Republican national convention, 1908.

"His refusal of a renomination, dictated by the loftiest motives and by a noble loyalty to American traditions, is final and irrevocable. [Applause.] Anyone who attempts to use his name as a candidate for the Presidency impugns both his sincerity and his good faith, two of the President's greatest and most conspicuous qualities upon which no shadow has ever been cast. [Applause.] That man is no friend of Theodore Roosevelt, and does not cherish his name and fame, who now from any motive seeks to urge him for the great office which he has finally declined."

Speech of Senator LODGE, permanent chairman of the Republican convention of 1908.

PUGET SOUND BRIDGE, WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17242) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington, to report it without amendment.

There is on the calendar a similar bill reported from the Senate committee, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be substituted on the calendar for the Senate bill and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the interest of other business waiting, I shall object to taking up matters out of their order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill on the calendar, being the bill (S. 4846) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington, be taken from the calendar and indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill just reported by me take its place on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed and the House bill just reported by the Senator from Washington will take its place on the calendar.

CALL OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Crane	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Bailey	Crawford	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Fletcher	Nelson	Smoot
Bourne	Foster	Nixon	Stephenson

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is detained from the Chamber by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the Volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as the first bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

CONFEDERATE NAVAL MONUMENT AT VICKSBURG NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 2925) providing for a Confederate naval monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, the objection of the Senator from Idaho to the contrary notwithstanding. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now ask to have the bill put at the end of the calendar, under Rule IX, the Senate having expressed itself upon the subject. I merely wanted to find out whether we are bridging the bloody chasm with lip service or heart religion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the transfer of the bill to the calendar, under Rule IX? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. The hour is growing late, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 27, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 26, 1912.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 26, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the ages, everywhere present to uphold, sustain, and guide Thy children in right living, be with us lest we forget and wander from the paths of rectitude and duty and prove ourselves recreant to the trust Thou hast reposed in us as rational beings, gifted with the power of choice, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Sunday, February 25, 1912, was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of disposing of legislation relative to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill S. 238, an act to authorize the extension of Lamont Street NW., in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 238) to authorize the extension of Lamont Street NW., in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to extend Lamont Street NW. through squares Nos. 2604 and 2605, with a width of 90 feet, said extension to be a direct prolongation of Lamont Street as now existing east of Nineteenth Street: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension, plus the costs and expenses of said proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits.

Sec. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the said condemnation proceeding taken pursuant hereto, and for the payments of the amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 17238) to provide for an investigation of the collection and disposal of garbage, ashes, refuse, dead animals, and night soil in the District of Columbia and employment of a competent sanitary engineer to report the latest approved methods for disposal of the same.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to employ a competent sanitary engineer of recognized ability and experience in all systems of ultimate disposal of municipal waste to investigate the collection and disposal of garbage, ashes, refuse, dead animals, and night soil originating in the District of Columbia, said sanitary engineer to prepare and submit to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and to Congress on or before December 4, 1912, a complete report upon the most sanitary and economical methods of collecting and disposing of said waste material.

Sec. 2. That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, to be immediately available, half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for said purpose, which appropriation shall include the employment of a competent sanitary engineer of recognized ability and experience and such other incidental expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this appropriation.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out, of page 1, line 5, the word "all" and substitute the word "various."

Insert, in line 7, page 1, after the word "disposal," the words "within the District of Columbia."

Strike out, of page 1, line 11, the word "fourth" and substitute the word "second."

Insert, in line 2, page 2, after the word "material," the words "within the District of Columbia."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, an appropriation was asked for and an amount stated for the purpose of investigating the amount of garbage and the disposal of it within the District of Columbia. It was stricken out of the appropriation bill on a point of order. Anticipating this, I had introduced this bill that is before us to-day. I introduced it to investigate the various systems of gathering and disposal of garbage. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] was very much opposed to having a reduction plant located within the State of Virginia, and he asked for an amendment authorizing the investigation of the collection and disposal of garbage within the District of Columbia, which the committee approved and is contained in this bill, H. R. 17238.

It has been stated on this floor that there would be no bad odors arising from the location of such a plant. The gentleman from Virginia claimed if that was so he desired that if the garbage plant was built at all it should be located within the District of Columbia. That amendment by him was offered to the committee and adopted. The sum of $10,000 for investigation was considered to be too large, and an amendment was offered, although I do not see it in the bill, in section 2, to make it $5,000 instead of $10,000. This bill only contemplates the gathering of information and recommendations for gathering and disposal of garbage, etc., and that sum was thought to be all that would be necessary. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether he feels at all confident that the sanitary engineer would be able to make a report of much value within the time provided for in this bill?

Mr. LOBECK. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that all over the United States municipalities are considering this subject. A great many sanitation engineers in cities are giving careful attention to the subject. Does the gentleman have any anticipation that one sanitary engineer employed by the District Commissioners can, within the course of a few months, settle a problem like this?

Mr. LOBECK. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gathering of information or to the appointment of a sanitary engineer, but I am very confident that the man does not yet live that can settle that problem in three or four months.

Mr. LOBECK. I will agree that it is a subject that has been under discussion for a good many years.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Quite a number of large cities in this country have sanitary reduction works that are already in operation, and most of them have worked very satisfactorily.

Mr. MANN. I have given a good deal of study to this subject for some years. I was at one time, in a way, connected with a reduction plant in the city of Chicago. There is no satisfactory solution yet reached, in my judgment, and will not be after the sanitary engineer reports, if he does, in a few months. All the information that is available is easily obtained now.

Mr. KAHN. Of course there may be no sanitary reduction plant that is entirely perfect, but I know of several that are working quite well and are giving considerable satisfaction to the municipalities where they have been installed. I dare say that under this bill all that the sanitary engineer of the District could get would be the information as to how these various plants are working.

Mr. LOBECK. He could report the latest improved methods. Mr. MANN. These reports are obtainable now without the aid of a sanitary engineer, as far as that is concerned; it is a very live subject in many places.

Mr. KAHN. It may be advisable for the sanitary engineer to make a trip to some of these cities and investigate these plants personally. As the gentleman from Illinois says, he could easily get the reports that are published by the various municipalities where they have been installed. However, that might not be as satisfactory as a personal visit to the plants.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman is aware that the sanitary engineer appointed under this bill will not be the first one that has visited these different works throughout the country.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. And that there are different opinions on the part of the people who have visited them.

Mr. KAHN. I believe in getting all the information we can on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this bill up for consideration now?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LOBECK. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Committee on the District of Columbia think it is necessary to spend $10,000 to get information on this subject?

Mr. LOBECK. The amendment was made to $5,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you think it is necessary to spend $5,000 or $1,000?

Mr. LOBECK. I think so, to get the services of a competent sanitary engineer; and, with necessary incidental expenses, $5,000 is not an excessive amount.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska, as well as to the gentleman from California, that the great city of Chicago has made all the investigations which were necessary to be made to ascertain the best method of disposing of garbage in every form, and it sent to every city in the United States to see the methods by which they made disposition of their garbage, and such investigations were made without cost to the city. I do not see any reason why there should be any such sum of money expended as this bill provides. It would not cost $1,000 to travel to every city in the United States where such disposition is being made of garbage as is proposed in this city. Personally I desire to say, if the gentleman will allow me, that while I was chairman of the finance committee of Chicago for a number of years we were given authority by the city council not only to make investigations but to make any expenditure we pleased for the disposition of garbage, either by incineration or reduction, and after all the investigations which we made, and as thorough as they were, we could not bring ourselves to the conclusion that we ought to spend any part of the public money for the disposition of garbage by any such method as is proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia. We had all kinds of patentees with all kinds of schemes for the disposition of garbage submit their propositions to the city. We said to them, "If you have a good scheme, we will give you ground upon which to erect a plant; we will furnish you the material to consume; we will pay so much a ton for consuming it while the plant is in operation. If you are willing to make this kind of a test of your plant at your own cost, go ahead." We had a dozen people who believed their schemes were good. They each said theirs was the best in existence, and they erected them. We furnished them with the garbage, and we found that every one of them were failures, and you will find the same thing. If you want to test this thing, notify the men who think they have got something by which they can dispose of garbage to come here and put up the plants at their own expense, but the investigation you may make at the expense of the Public Treasury will result in nothing whatever. The only way you can get any actual results is by practical test. Select a lot somewhere along the river, let the garbage-reduction patentees erect plants on it, and test it in a practical way. What is the use of sending a Member of Congress or a member of the Board of Engineers or a member of the board of commissioners to see what is being done in Pittsburgh or Allegheny City or New York or Philadelphia or Chicago? They could at most make a report. The way to get information of any value is to let some one build a plant and test it.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. KAHN. It costs probably $100,000 to put up a proper plant; at least it cost that much to put up one at San Francisco.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, let the men who think that they have the best plants come here and put them up.

Mr. KAHN. Do you think you can get anybody to put up such an expensive plant here in Washington for the purpose of testing it?

Mr. MADDEN. I can say only this to the gentleman: That in the large city of Chicago, one of the great cities of the Union, we were able to get men who pretended to have schemes for the disposition of garbage to put their money into plants for the purpose of giving Chicago the opportunity to test them, and it never cost the city of Chicago one cent—not a cent—and there is no reason why it should cost the city of Washington one cent.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely I will.

Mr. DYER. How do they dispose of the garbage there now?

Mr. MADDEN. They haul it out of the city and dump it at any place that they can dump it. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] that I went to New York to investigate the manner in which they dispose of their garbage. They said they were disposing of it by incineration, and that they were paying so much per ton in order to dispose of it by that method. What did I find? I found that they had an incineration plant or a reduction plant—I do not recall now.

Mr. LOBECK. A reduction plant.

Mr. MADDEN. Here is what happened: When the inspector was not watching them they took the garbage, put it on scows, and hauled it out to sea and charged the city of New York for disposing of it by incineration or reduction. That is what happened. I went to Allegheny City, now a part of Pittsburgh, and I found there that they had the best plant in existence anywhere; but it did not do the work. None of them ever do the work. You can not dispose of garbage anywhere by incineration or reduction unless you have three methods of separation, namely, one to dispose of the tin cans and bottles, the other for the ashes, and the other for the garbage, and put each one of those commodities in separate receptacles; and if you do that you can dispose of the garbage in any way you please. But you can not do it and you will not do it, and they do not do it anywhere. There is not a municipality on the face of the American Continent that would dare to enforce a law that would compel the people to do those things.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman know how Berlin, Germany, does it?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not. I am not opposed to doing this thing. What I am opposed to is spending money without getting information. I am asking this committee to recommend a plan by which men who have schemes can be invited here and test them at their own expense, and not ask somebody to go out and get information on the subject which when you get it will not amount to anything.

Mr. COOPER. I understand that Berlin, Germany, has today a municipal plant that is profitable financially.

Mr. MADDEN. Maybe they have.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is it your idea that we ought to have people who put up plants of this kind come here and show what they can do?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Instead of spending this money?

Mr. MADDEN. That is the only practical way to do it. They think the have something and are willing to test it, but when they have tested it you will find that they have not anything in 9 cases out of 10.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to ask the gentleman if in Chicago they dump the garbage in the river now?

Mr. MADDEN. They never did dump it in the river. I want to say that since sewerage was let into the Sanitary District Channel and sent down to St. Louis diluted by the waters of Lake Michigan, the drinking water of St. Louis is purer than it ever was before.

Mr. LOBECK. I wish to say that the engagement of a sanitary engineer to do this work at $5,000 instead of $10,000 is to recommend new methods of gathering and disposal of garbage of this city, which is done in three different ways to-day, and which cost this city a great deal more money than it ought to cost the city. It is disposed of in an expensive manner. There are private garbage plants that take garbage from the city to-day, over in Virginia. The plan is not satisfactory. But plants are now constructed and in use in large cities, both in this country, in Canada, and in Europe, that dispose of garbage in a cleanly and first-class manner. The same can be done here. And if such gentlemen be engaged, as was spoken of here on this floor by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLISON], the man that devised the systems for Milwaukee and the systems for Toronto, two entirely different plans, something satisfactory can be found. The garbage situation in Washington is not satisfactory to-day. It is not satisfactory to the commissioners. It is not satisfactory to the people. If any plan can be arrived at by a study of the situation here by men who have made the subject a life study and who are competent men, something can be done in that line for the small sum of $5,000. It will be money well spent for the health of the city of Washington and the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will he yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman to state if he has talked with any engineers upon this matter as to whether or not this investigation can be made for this sum of money?

Mr. LOBECK. No. My idea was that there ought to have been $10,000 appropriated. That is what the commissioners thought. But the committee believed $5,000 would be enough, because the engineer will not make building specifications. The contractors can furnish the plans and specifications for the works for consideration, either for reduction or incineration—

Mr. MANN. This is for $10,000.

Mr. LOBECK. I will offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the committee report the amendment to the bill?

Mr. LOBECK. These men who construct these plants, either for incineration or reduction, will furnish all the plans for consideration that are necessary and will do it through their own engineers. It takes a mechanical engineer to do this. The sanitary engineers do not prepare the plans. But they will get together the information and recommend systems that are so much needed in this city, and I think it can be done for $5,000. An amendment to that effect will be offered here which the committee will accept.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to employ a competent sanitary engineer of recognized ability and experience in all systems of ultimate disposal of municipal waste to investigate the collection and disposal of garbage, ashes, refuse, dead animals, and night soil originating in the District of Columbia, said sanitary engineer to prepare and submit to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and to Congress on or before December 4, 1912, a complete report upon the most sanitary and economical methods of collecting and disposing of said waste material.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill—

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendments will first be considered. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, of page 1, line 5, the word "all" and substitute the word "various."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move its adoption.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 7, page 1, after the word "disposal," the words "within the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move its adoption.

The question was taken, and the Chairman expressed himself as being in doubt.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have one minute in which to explain what this amendment is.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. KAHN. Wait until the committee has divided.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, of page 1, line 11, the word "fourth" and substitute the word "second."

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 2, page 2, after the word "material," the words "within the District of Columbia."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The effect of this amendment, if it is adopted, will be that the plant, if one is found feasible and practicable by this commission, must be established within the District of Columbia. Now, we have considered heretofore the establishment of this plant in other places. So far as I am concerned, I would prefer that it should be established in the District of Columbia if it is found to be for the best interests of all concerned. But I do not believe we should limit it. We should leave it to this commission to make its report, and afterwards we can legislate upon the location at which the plant shall be established.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that in his opinion the words "within the District of Columbia" would locate the place of the disposal of the garbage or the waste material within the District of Columbia?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question of the gentleman I will say that it is my understanding of the reading of the bill and the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill that it is put there with the express purpose of providing that this material shall be disposed of within the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. That is not what it says. Without that qualification it would apply to the disposition of waste material in any city of the country, and would require this engineer to report upon the general subject of the disposition of garbage anywhere. This requirement is that he shall report upon the disposition of waste material within the District of Columbia, and not waste material in Baltimore, New York, or Chicago.

Mr. DYER. The technical reading of it is as the gentleman from Illinois has explained; but it was the intention to provide that this plant must be located in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. After all, the sanitary engineer reports upon a method. His report upon the place where it should be located would not cut any figure with Congress.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that when he is appointed, if this bill becomes a law, he will be instructed that he must report upon a place for the disposition of garbage, located within the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOBECK. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt; and on a division there were—ayes 27, noes 0.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, to be immediately available, half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for said purpose, which appropriation shall include the employment of a competent sanitary engineer of recognized ability and experience and such other incidental expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this appropriation.

Mr. LOBECK. I move an amendment, in line 9, in section 2, to strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five," so that it will read "five thousand dollars" instead of "ten thousand dollars." The committee have agreed to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 9, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "five."

Mr. MADDEN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "two" instead of the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "five" and inserting "two."

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. LOBECK) there were—ayes 19, noes 33.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK], to strike out "ten" and insert "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 16, on page 2, the word "appropriation" and insert the word "act."

Mr. LOBECK. I accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 16, strike out the word "appropriation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 13, to strike out the word "employment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "payment," so that it will read:

Which appropriation shall include the payment of a competent sanitary engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 13, strike out the word "employment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "payment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report favorably to the House the two bills which have been under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. LLOYD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 238) to authorize the extension of Lamont Street NW., in the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass; and also that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17238) to provide for an investigation of the collection and disposal of garbage, ashes, refuse, dead animals, and night soil in the District of Columbia, and employment of a competent sanitary engineer to report the latest approved methods for disposal of the same, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on Senate bill 238.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill (S. 238) to authorize the extension of Lamont Street NW., in the District of Columbia, was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the next bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17238) to provide for an investigation of the collection and disposal of garbage, ashes, refuse, dead animals, and night soil in the District of Columbia, and employment of a competent sanitary engineer to report the latest approved methods for disposal of the same.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report a bill inviting bids from various people who have plants or means of disposing of garbage, to erect a plant in the District of Columbia at their own expense, and that investigation be made in that manner.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit, with instructions, which is that the committee report a bill inviting bids to do this work.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were 11 ayes and 63 noes.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20111, the fortification bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that, by agreement, four hours is given for general debate, two hours of which is to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and two hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] desires to yield certain time, and I will now yield to him.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of the House to H. R. 18720, a bill to establish a legislative reference bureau in the Library of Congress, which, when it shall be established, will serve as our collective secretary and greatly enlarge our individual and collective capacity for legislative service.

What is the watchword to-day in the business world? It is efficiency, efficiency, efficiency. We see in every line of business, especially big business, successful managers install, seemingly regardless of cost, labor, time, money saving, and multiplying machinery, devices and methods to attain the maximum of efficiency. They know from common sense and experience that it will pay, and pay well. They see in this investment for efficiency the difference between business bankruptcy and business success. They see in it the difference between the ruin of any business and its increased life.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is it not reasonable to suppose that if business efficiency is not only possible, but highly profitable, political and legislative efficiency should be equally so? We know from common sense and we may know from the experience of other States and countries that it does pay, and pay equally well, not merely in the saving of money to the people but also in the conservation of opportunities, rights, and freedom under our form of government. Why should we, as shrewd and thoughtful men hesitate to install, at a nominal cost, labor, time, and money saving facilities, methods, and machinery that will enable us to attain the maximum of legislative efficiency? May not this investment in efficiency mean to Congress in the future the difference between failure and success? Are there not signs to-day that indicate that it may mean the difference between the ruin of the representative institution and its continued and increased life in the confidence and good will of the people? Why not, therefore, throw off the remnant of our Chinese conservatism, permit our pigtailed legislators to go, and we, too, join the army of efficiency and progress with one-half of the States of the Union and the leading countries of Europe? Mr. Chairman, I respect the membership of this House. I realize that it is composed of very able and competent legislators, but I submit that in availing ourselves of helpful facilities so as to increase our individual and collective capacity for legislative service we may learn a timely lesson in the science and art of efficiency from a successful business world.

Our critics, and they are legion, go so far as to assert that we may not only learn a lesson or two, but that we might well take an entire course in the university of efficiency from successful business managers. Whether that is true or not, I do not believe that any Member of this House is likely to rise to a question of personal privilege, if some one should mildly suggest that even Members of Congress may be made more efficient, or, shall I say less inefficient, as lawmakers. We know well that with helpful facilities, up-to-date methods, and improved machinery even the Congress of the United States can be made a more efficient lawmaking body. We know well, too, that the law, our finished product, now so criticized for crude and careless preparation, might, under other conditions, be made more efficient in carrying out the ends of popular government, which expresses the collective will through law, by making the law less the embodiment of force for self-interest and more the expression of principle for the public good. For, in the ideal state of which the fathers dreamed when they laid the foundation of this Republic, the end of law is justice, the direction righteousness, and the effect equity among the people. When these cardinal principles shall be more efficiently embodied in the substance and expressed in the form of law, Congress will be vastly more efficient in promoting the life, the opportunities, the development, the welfare, and the well-being of life of the people of this country, 93,000,000 of human beings, our countrymen, who now so confidently intrust us, less than 500 of their number, with all their legislative power for their protection, peace, and happiness. Mr. Chairman, when we contemplate this trust in the light of the magnitude of the work before us, the work we do, and the way we do it, surely we should not hesitate to increase our efficiency so as to make ourselves worthy, more worthy, of the confidence of our constituents and of the good will of our country.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand correctly that the State of Wisconsin has something of this kind that has proved helpful to the Legislature of Wisconsin?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, replying to the gentleman's inquiry, I will say that Wisconsin has a very efficient legislative reference bureau, and that after observing its practical utility there for 10 years, the way it has increased legislative efficiency and enlarged the individual and collective capacity of the State legislature; then realizing, as I have for six years in this House, how utterly we lack those helpful facilities and how very much they are needed, I have made this the object of my service in the House during this session to secure, if possible, this exceedingly helpful agency for the Congress of the United States.

Nobody expects Congress to attain the ideal. Such utopian thoughts are not entertained. But is that any reason why the Congress should not be keenly interested in the progress that has been and is being made by a score of States of the Union and the leading countries of the world in legislative efficiency? Surely, what they have done we can do. Mr. Chairman, I am confident that when the membership of this House understands the necessity, the value, and the practical utility of the legislative reference bureau, it will establish it without unreasonable delay, for in this twentieth century, in this great country, in this experiment of self-government, with its ever-increasing burden of legislation, with a multiplicity of problems pressing upon us for solution due to complex and changing economic, social, and political conditions, problems of the utmost importance to the life and well-being of this people, the question of increased legislative efficiency in this body is well worth our careful and conscientious consideration.

I have heretofore referred to the business world, because what private gain is to business the public good is to legislative efficiency. But this expressive term "efficiency," when applied to lawmaking, must be considered from three sides. First, we must look at the substance; then the form; and, finally, at the effect of law upon the business and the other activities of life of the people of this country.

Looking at the substance, we shall see how the legislative reference bureau has assisted State legislators, will assist us, to exact knowledge of conditions, relations, and circumstances with which we have to deal in any given field of activity and apply to them correct economic, social, sociological, and political principles. In other words, the reference bureau will facilitate our efforts to eliminate error and, consequently, to secure the refinement of truth, for truth, not error, should be the substance of our laws.

Looking at the form, we shall see how the legislative reference bureau has assisted legislators, will assist us, in approximating perfection of expression of law in language, by substituting for the vague and indefinite the certain and definite, by substituting for the inconsistent and ambiguous the consistent and the clear, by substituting for the loose, lengthy, and ineffective the concise, brief, and effective expression of the substance, the principle, the truth, in the statutory form of the law.

And, finally, looking at the effect, we shall see how the more we approximate purity of substance, conjoined with perfection of form, the greater will be the power of law to promote the public welfare. Perhaps I may here draw an analogy from nature. We know that there is a principle, an invisible fluid, in nature known as electricity. When acting as a blind force or in broken form it goes forth to do harm, to devastate, and destroy property and life; but when this natural principle is formulated into law and given expression in fitting form it becomes a tremendous power for good, pulling the cars laden with humanity up the steepest hills with ease. And so I think of this invisible force in human nature, the collective will, which, when it acts upon erroneous premises or in a broken, blind, or haphazard form, also goes forth to do harm, to devastate and destroy opportunities, rights, and freedom among the people; but when formulated in principles that are just, true, and equitable, principles expressed in fitting form, the strength of law is an immeasurable power for promoting the public good, pulling the cars of human progress up the heights of an advanced civilization for the enlarged welfare and well-being of mankind.

Mr. Chairman, from the sublime conception of law, as stated by Hooker, philosopher and poet, 400 years ago, "Of law there can be no less acknowledged than that her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world. All things in heaven and earth do her homage—the very least as feeling her care and the greatest as not exempt from her power," to this comment upon our methods of lawmaking by a foreign official, a Chinaman, "You proceed from premises not examined to consequences neither foreseen nor willed," surely there is room for improvement and progress, if we will but avail ourselves of the means at hand.

At this time it is my purpose merely to call attention to and arouse interest in this helpful legislative agency by pointing out in general terms its object, the increase of legislative efficiency, by referring to its fundamental functions, the approximation of purity of substance and the perfection of form in lawmaking, and to indicate the resultant power for the public service.

At another time I hope to give a more detailed demonstration of its practical value and utility.

Objections may readily arise in any fair Member's mind, objections may be urged against any beneficial institution, objections may be urged against the legislative reference bureau, but these are trivial or untrue and may be easily overcome. I may here state and point out the fallacy of a few of them.

It is clearly to contradict the logic of events, the principle of progress, to say that Congress can get along without this legislative agency in the face of the fact that half of the States of the Union have now established it and the leading countries of Europe have long availed themselves of its invaluable aid and assistance.

It is to save pennies and lose pounds to make complaint of its cost in the light of the appropriations for it that are being made by hard-headed, closefisted State legislatures, who, after a fair and extended trial, have seen the economy that it effects in public expenditures by enabling committees to detect the needless, the useless, the wasteful, and the extravagant in legislative projects.

It is to deny self-evident conditions known to us all for anyone to assert that it is unnecessary for Congress to establish this legislative agency, when it is so clear that it is needed to focus the resources of the Library, with its millions of volumes, upon the problems before us, and to make more available for our needs all the resources of the bureaus and departments of government.

It is a false pride, at public expense, for any Member to fear that it will encroach upon his legislative right to prepare the form of legislation as he pleases; for surely he must know of the criticism now justly passed upon the laws of Congress for crude and careless preparation; he must know something of the endless litigation that this entails upon the people; he must know how jurists have praised State laws that have been prepared by experts of legislative reference bureaus, and that for years the leading countries of Europe have employed skilled draftsmen in the preparation of their great national statutes.

It is to reverse cause and effect to say that a legislative reference bureau with expert draftsmen will increase legislation; the multitudinous laws now being placed upon our statute books are, in large part, due to crude, careless, and hasty methods of lawmaking; and surely with better laws, scientifically prepared, statutes will be more permanent, and consequently the need of repeal, amendment, or change in substance or in form will gradually diminish in State and national legislatures.

While all such objections are found upon examination either trivial or untrue, the positive advantages of the legislative reference bureau are so clear and convincing that there can be no question as to what Congress will do when it rightly understands the helpfulness of this legislative agency wherever established.

As legislators we assuredly see the need of conserving our valuable time, our physical and mental energies.

We surely realize that the day is fast approaching when we must concentrate upon the great principles and policies of government and be relieved of the clerical drudgery that now exhausts our physical and mental strength.

We truly wish to lift legislation from the lower level of petty wrangling and partisanship to the higher level of patriotism and statesmanship.

Surely we desire to prevent a breakdown of the representative institution and to give it renewed life in the confidence and the good will of the people.

We wish to facilitate the elimination of the evils of legislation—the joker, the lobbyist, the special pleader, self-interest in all its varied legislative forms.

We see clearly the need of improving the substance and the form of legislation so as to reduce the necessity for judicial interpretation to the minimum, in order to prevent the dangerous encroachment of the courts upon the legislative domain.

Most certainly we wish to so enlarge legislative power, by every possible means, that it may keep pace with the complex and ever-changing social, political, and economic conditions of the country.

And assuredly we desire to so increase our individual and collective capacity that we may wisely solve the great problems that press upon us for solution on every hand—measures of the utmost moment to the life and happiness of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I have given the House this general outline of the legislative reference bureau so that the Congress may know that it is neither a visionary hope nor a Utopian dream, but a helpful, substantial, and practical reality; and let me add that after my personal observation of the practical operation of this helpful legislative agency in my own State, during a period of more than 10 years, and after my study of what is being done by a score of other States of the Union and by the leading countries of the world, I have become convinced, as I believe this House will be persuaded, that the legislative reference bureau is a practical, necessary, desirable, positive, constructive, powerful, and indispensable part of the legislative branch of popular government for the promotion of our country's prosperity, peace, and lasting welfare. [Applause.]

For the benefit of those who are interested in this subject, I will also state that this morning Ambassador Bryce and Librarian Putnam spoke to us before the Committee on the Library; also Dr. Cleveland, of the President's Economy and Efficiency Commission, and that this afternoon and to-morrow we will have 10 or 12 other experts. Among the Members of the House who have kindly consented to appear and speak are the Speaker of the House, the minority leader, Mr. MANN, and Mr. SHERLEY, who has had a resolution pending in the House for years to reform the processes of legislation, because, as a codifier, he has seen the great need of it, and Mr. BERGER, the representative of the Socialist Party here. Mr. Tawney, the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has also promised to speak, and I think he will be here. If you are interested in this matter, I think you will also be interested in these hearings.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. HAMMOND. Where will the meeting be held?

Mr. NELSON. In the minority room of the House Office Building.

Mr. MANN. It is the caucus room in the House Office Building.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday last, under the five-minute rule, I offered a few observations on the subject of oleomargarine legislation, not particularly with a view of discussing the merits or demerits of that proposition, but with a view to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a number of letters, resolutions, and a statement prepared by the representatives of the dairy people who met here in Washington recently, and also to have printed extracts from statements made by scientists and experts of the Department of Agriculture and others before the Committee on Agriculture.

Under the rules of the House I had but five minutes, and inasmuch as letters had been sent out by the thousand, as I understand, questioning the wholesomeness of butter and bolstering up oleo, or this counterfeit, and appealing to the various organizations throughout this country for further support in securing the repeal or to modify and to make ineffective the present laws, I felt that in justice to all concerned certain correspondence, resolutions, extracts from testimony given by scientists and experts should be printed in the RECORD, so that Members of the House and the people who care for that information could have it; and as the time given me did not permit my reading all the letters, resolutions, and extracts, I asked the privilege of extending my remarks by having the letters, resolutions, and extracts printed in the RECORD, a privilege generally extended on other subjects under consideration. Objections were made to the exercise of this privilege, but why this House and the country should be denied this information, and especially after agreeing to have printed only extracts from testimony given by witnesses presented to the committee by those friendly to modifying or repealing the present law, I know not; but I leave it to those objecting to answer that question. Through the courtesy of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, my colleague [Mr. GOOD], I have been given time to read into the RECORD some of this testimony; but I have been accorded only 20 minutes, and I will now ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by the representatives of the dairy people, which has the headline, "Where the dairy interests stand in relation to oleomargarine legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks unanimous consent to have a certain paper printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman give the date of the communication he asks to be printed.

Mr. HAUGEN. Washington, D. C., January 26, 1912.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. This is a statement prepared and submitted to the subcommittee having that subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

WHERE THE DAIRY INTERESTS STAND IN RELATION TO OLEOMARGARINE LEGISLATION.

The representatives of several leading agricultural organizations met in Washington, D. C., Friday, January 26, and considered the Lever bill, so called, which had been drafted by a subcommittee of the congressional committee on agriculture as a substitute for the Burleson bill. The following statement was prepared and presented to the subcommittee of the Agricultural Committee:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee:

We, the undersigned representatives of different dairy and agricultural interests of the United States, hereby respectfully present our views in relation to H. R. 18493, which we have carefully examined. We find that there are many minor propositions in the bill with which we agree and some with which we disagree, but there are three vital objections to the measure as it stands, and we hereby call attention specifically to them, to wit:

1. It is desired that section 1 of the act approved May 9, 1902, which provides that the goods when going into any State or Territory from another State or Territory shall immediately become subject to the laws of the State be retained in the law. It seems to be somewhat of a question whether your bill eliminates that section. The doubt upon this point creates a strong and valid objection to the bill.

2. The bill is further objected to on the ground that the clause to call the one-half and 1-pound packages original packages and the larger package a shipping package distinguishes between them in such a way as to make it possible, if not probable, for the courts to decide that the smaller package becomes, by statutory enactment, the original package, with all the rights of such a package, under the decisions of the courts.

3. A further objection to the bill is that it omits all distinction between goods that are in their natural, uncolored state and goods that are in imitation or semblance of butter.

We stand for and shall advocate a bill which shall embody the following fundamental principle, to wit:

1. That shall make it impossible for oleomargarine to be imposed upon either purchaser or consumer as and for butter, the product of the dairy; and as the best and only practicable means to this end we are of the opinion that the statutes should not permit oleomargarine to be manufactured in semblance of butter of any shade of yellow.

2. In view of the fact that the present tax is assumed to add to the prices of butter and oleomargarine, we are willing to concede the reduction of all taxes to a nominal sum, providing that a bill is passed prohibiting the imitation or semblance above referred to.

The bone of contention is the color question. For twenty-six years the dairymen of the Nation have been contending against the imitation of butter. The oleomargarine interests have repeatedly come to Congress, as in this instance, asking in substance for nothing else than the privilege of coloring their product in imitation of natural butter. We contend that it is due the consumers of this country, as well as the producers, that the line of demarcation between these products be made so clear that each will sell upon its true merits and for a price based upon its commercial value. One should not be sold in imitation of the other, at an advanced price, thus allowing tremendous profits for counterfeiting. There is a widespread misunderstanding in the belief that this counterfeiting is due to the difference between the tax of one-quarter cent per pound on uncolored and 10 cents a pound on colored oleomargarine. The temptation and fraud are wholly because of the widespread difference in the cost of producing oleomargarine and butter. You have evidence of this in the statement of the Internal Revenue Department that, in its opinion, 50 per cent of the oleomargarine colored is sold for and as butter at a price nearly as great as butter.

G. L. Flanders, president National Dairy Union; J. A. Walker, president American Creamery Butter Manufacturers' Association; G. L. McKay, secretary American Creamery Butter Manufacturers' Association; N. P. Hull, president American Dairy Farmers' Association; H. E. Van Norman, president National Dairy Show Association; Geo. M. Whitaker, president Farmers' National Congress; F. N. Godfrey, chairman; C. O. Raine, secretary; S. H. Messick, Oliver Wilson, master; N. P. Hull, legislative committee, National Grange.

S. B. Shilling, secretary National Butter Makers' Association, though not personally present, indorsed by letter the sentiments in the above statement.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this expresses the sentiment of the dairy people. They ask for a square deal; nothing more, nothing less. And that means that the present law, if amended, should be strengthened and not weakened; or a law that will prevent fraud, counterfeiting, and deception, and not a law to make its fraudulent sale more easy.

Mr. Chairman, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD statements made by scientists and witnesses introduced by those who favor the repeal of the present law or its modification. These are extracts from statements and testimony given before the committee in the Sixty-first Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa also asks unanimous consent to have other statements printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if the dates of these hearings are made plain on the face of the paper that he proposes to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. HAUGEN. I wish to state to the gentleman that the extracts which I now offer are taken from the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture during the Sixty-first Congress. I also have extracts from the hearings of 1900, but I do not offer them at this time.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not object to the excerpts from hearings held during the Sixty-first Congress.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state in this connection whether he has any statements or extracts from the grangers' and the farmers' unions throughout the country upon this subject, because, as I understand, they have taken action in the direction of the claims made by the gentleman?

Mr. HAUGEN. I would state to the gentleman that representatives of the National Grange concurred in the views expressed in the statements prepared by the representatives of the dairy people who met here in Washington recently, and, as I understand it, their views are expressed in the circular which I have already presented to be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. S. E. BENNETT, INSPECTOR, BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Bennett, will you state your full name to the reporter?

Mr. BENNETT. My name is S. E. Bennett; I am inspector in charge of the Bureau of Animal Industry work at Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be possible to manufacture a clean, sound oil, by any process of refining, out of filthy, rancid raw material?

Mr. BENNETT. No; you could not make a sound product from a sour, filthy fat.

The CHAIRMAN. I have another letter, written by a man who signs himself "A packing-house employee." It is addressed to the Committee on Agriculture, from New York City, and he says:

"I know that if you saw the shop fat from which oleo oil—its chief constituent—is made, you would never relish it nor soon care to eat it again. About one-third of all the oleo oil made is extracted from this shop fat, which is gathered promiscuously from the numberless little butcher shops throughout the city or country.

"This shop fat—or, more properly speaking, mixture—is mingled with the sawdust, chicken feathers, heads, entrails, bits of old rags, and almost everything else imaginable, as it is brought in wagons to the rendering establishments controlled and operated by the big packing houses. This may be seen most any afternoon as it is brought in to a rendering establishment at the foot of East Forty-fifth Street and at the foot of West Fortieth Street, in this city, although there are several other places as well; and I suggest that if convenient you take a look for yourself some time, but be careful and don't let them know who you are or what you are looking for.

"Another great abuse in this business is in the handling of grease from dead hogs and cattle and diseased animals (condemned). This vile grease and tallow is not colored or denatured as it should be, but is placed in containers or casks and simply marked 'inedible,' a word that is easy changed to edible. Some time ago the Government ordered that all inedible grease, etc., be colored or denatured to prevent its use as food, but the American Packers' Association lost no time in having the order recalled and simply require now that this stuff be marked 'inedible.'

"Certain firms not connected with the packing houses cart this stuff away and refine it or bleach it. This is done by cooking it with bicarbonated soda and then straining it, or, rather, filtering it, through fuller's earth, after which it is deodorized by forcing air through the mixture while heated to carry off the odor, and it comes out as white as snow."

Mr. BENNETT. I will tell you our experience with shop fat. Of course in New York City they have considerably more business in the shop-fat line than we have in Chicago. I think they have 7,000 shops that they collect fat from in New York, while we have comparatively few in Chicago. But at the same time, while we may get what they call shop fat, which may come in mixed with chicken feathers and chicken heads and all that kind of thing, and it is not an edible product, it is put into a tank and rendered into an inedible grease, and everything we receive in Chicago is absolutely pure and wholesome and bears the mark of inspection on it.

Mr. BENNETT. In the shops we have in Chicago they gather the shop fat, and I have a man that goes around there constantly from place to place to see that those shops are in good condition—are kept in sanitary condition—and we require them to have galvanized-iron containers to put this fat in, and we see that they are kept clean. It depends altogether on the weather how often it is collected. In the summer time they collect it and render it every day, but in the winter time they collect it and put it in their coolers, so that there is no danger of its getting in a bad condition. In the summer time it may become sour, and if it arrives at the plant in a sour condition we throw it into the grease plant.

The CHAIRMAN. What precautions do you take to make sure that the things you mark "inedible" do not finally get in with those that are edible?

Mr. BENNETT. No more than the precaution of marking it on the end of the package. We mark it "inedible." We mark it "grease" or "inedible grease," and some of them use a stencil; and if the product comes from what is termed the "black gut" in hogs, that makes a dark-colored grease.

Mr. BENNETT. There is no doubt about it. You can not make a No. 1 oleo oil from shop fat. I have known cases where they took a shop fat, apparently clean and wholesome in every way, and manufactured it into a No. 4 oleo oil. If you put shop fat into oleomargarine, you can detect it in the flavor right away.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, I have known of cases where they have manufactured oleo oil from shop fat, but not from the kind of shop fat that he describes there. It was shop fat that came in marked, like kidney fat and cod fat. We do not permit any of the fat of that kind to enter into an edible product in Chicago, except the fat from the kidneys and the cod fat.

Mr. LEVER. So that an unwholesome meat-food product could not go into the manufacture of oleomargarine?

Mr. BENNETT. I think it would be absolutely impossible. I do not see how it could possibly get into a food product—any unsound, unclean, or unwholesome product—without the connivance, as I say, of some employee.

Mr. HAUGEN. I supposed this question of wholesomeness was settled. I want to read to you from Dr. De Schweinitz, of the Agricultural Department. Do you happen to know him?

Dr. MELVIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is he not in the department now? I should like to read from his testimony.

Mr. BURLESON. At what date?

Mr. HAUGEN. Before the committee, 8 or 9 years ago.

Mr. BURLESON. That was before there was any inspection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Let us see about it.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think it is material at all.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, I should like to read it, right on this question of wholesomeness.

Mr. BURLESON. I submit to the committee that it is simply a burdening of the record with the testimony of a man who spoke of conditions before Government inspection; and it has absolutely nothing whatever to do with this matter.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, those same things exist now. There is nothing to hinder that. I will read it to you, and you can see how easily it can be done. [Reading:]

"Dr. De Schweinitz, of the Agricultural Department, in his visit to a factory which was several years ago located in Philadelphia, found the same condition of affairs. Oleo oil was being made from a pile of fat scraps collected from the hotels, restaurants, and butcher shops, which pile gave out such an odor that it was sickening, and the makers admitted it was being made into oleomargarine."

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes. Then you do not mean by that statement that oleomargarine made of these other fats, while it is wholesome and nutritious, necessarily has the same degree of wholesomeness and nutrition that butter and other fats have?

Dr. WILEY. In our examinations we found they were about the same. There was scarcely any difference between them.

Mr. FLANDERS. But answer my question, if you will. You do not mean by that answer that they have the same degree of wholesomeness and nutrition—by your answer itself?

Dr. WILEY. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. FLANDERS. You said that butter, as I understood, had an amount of—you did not use the word "butyric," but you used the word "volatile" acids, did you?

Dr. WILEY. Volatile acids; yes.

Mr. FLANDERS. In greater amount than oleomargarine had?

Dr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. FLANDERS. Does oleomargarine have any constituent that butter also has, but has it in greater quantity? For instance, stearine?

Dr. WILEY. I think oleomargarine has more stearine in it than butter.

Mr. FLANDERS. I believe you testified seven or eight years ago that it had from 16 to 20 per cent, did you not?

Dr. WILEY. I remember, I think, saying something about like that.

Mr. FLANDERS. And that butter has about how much.

Dr. WILEY. About 2 or 3 per cent, or less.

Mr. FLANDERS. Oleomargarine has about how much butyric or volatile acid?

Dr. WILEY. I said not to exceed 1 per cent, usually less, of volatile acid; not necessarily all butyric acid.

Mr. FLANDERS. And butter has about how much?

Dr. WILEY. Five per cent.

Mr. FLANDERS. Then they are not identical products?

Dr. WILEY. No, sir; not identical.

Mr. FLANDERS. And if those ingredients that are in different proportions have different values, the two commodities would have a different food value, would they not?

Dr. WILEY. That might be; yes, sir.

Mr. FLANDERS. And if one is not as easily digested as the other—if one is harder of digestion—then the one that had the most of the fat in it that was hardest to digest would be harder to digest, would it not?

Dr. WILEY. Naturally.

Mr. FLANDERS. And that might call for greater effort on the part of the system to get nutrition out of it than it would out of the one more easily digested; might it not?

Dr. WILEY. Yes, sir.

STATEMENT OF DR. CHARLES A. CRAMPTON, OF THE BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Crampton, will you state your name and your official position to the stenographer?

Dr. CRAMPTON. Charles A. Crampton, chemist in the internal-revenue office.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Burleson, will you proceed with your examination?

Mr. BURLESON. Doctor, what official position did you hold in 1902?

Dr. CRAMPTON. I was chemist in the internal-revenue office at that time.

Mr. BURLESON. How long had you held that place at that time, Doctor?

Dr. CRAMPTON. I went into the internal-revenue office in 1890. Prior to that time I was for seven years in the Department of Agriculture, under Dr. Wiley. In 1890 I entered the internal-revenue office. I have been there ever since. Four years ago, however, I was put in charge of the work in connection with denatured alcohol. Since that time my work has been along that line.

Mr. LEVER. Have you ever conducted any investigation to determine whether or not it is very much more indigestible than butter?

Dr. CRAMPTON. No, sir; I have never made digestibility experiments.

Mr. HAUGEN. If it is indigestible, would not that affect one's health? Would not that make it unhealthful?

Dr. CRAMPTON. Oh, yes; if it were not digestible, it would affect the health. But it might have a very slight effect on the health, which would not be ascertainable for some length of time.

Mr. LEVER. But you have never made any investigation for that?

Dr. CRAMPTON. No, sir.

Mr. HAUGEN. In what respect do you consider butter superior to oleomargarine?

Dr. CRAMPTON. It has a larger content of these volatile or fragrant glycerides, fatty glycerides, and as long as those are fresh they are a little more palatable than the tasteless glycerides which make up the larger part of the oleomargarine.

Mr. HAUGEN. You are familiar with the process of manufacturing oleo?

Dr. CRAMPTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAUGEN. And also as to the ingredients?

Dr. CRAMPTON. Yes, sir; to a considerable extent.

Mr. HAUGEN. To what extent is butter or cream used in the manufacture of oleo?

Dr. CRAMPTON. I think milk is used very largely in the manufacture of oleomargarine—I should rather say universally. That is, it is almost always used.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the quantity affect the quality of the oleo?

Dr. CRAMPTON. To a certain extent, yes; but large quantities are not ordinarily used.

Mr. HAUGEN. The larger the quantity the better the oleo, is it not?

Dr. CRAMPTON. No, sir; not necessarily; because only a certain portion of the milk or cream goes into the oleomargarine.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will read to you a statement from Mr. Swift, who is a manufacturer of oleo:

"Creamery butterine is usually composed of 25 per cent creamery butter, 40 per cent neutral, 20 per cent oleo oil, and the balance milk, cream, and salt. Dairy butterine is different from creamery only in the proportions. It is a cheaper product, and its proportion of butter is about 10 per cent."

Dr. CRAMPTON. He is describing different brands of oleomargarine. There are different grades.

Mr. HAUGEN. The more butter that is used, or the more cream that is used, the better the grade, is it not?

Dr. CRAMPTON. Yes. I was making a distinction between the amount of milk and cream that is used and the amount of butter that is used.

STATEMENT OF MR. W. D. EDSON, OF PHILADELPHIA, PA., HEARINGS, SIXTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

Mr. BURLESON. Did I understand you to say that a large percentage of the colored oleomargarine that is sold in Pennsylvania is fraudulently sold as butter?

Mr. EDSON. Or considered so by our State.

Mr. BURLESON. Fraudulently sold as butter?

Mr. EDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURLESON. You do not sell oleomargarine?

Mr. EDSON. No.

Mr. BURLESON. Did you ever sell oleomargarine?

Mr. EDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURLESON. How long ago?

Mr. EDSON. It must have been—I don't know; away back in my first year in business. Everybody in Philadelphia was selling oleo. I tell you if we had had a year of it we would have wiped the dairy interests out of the State of Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. You sold it as oleomargarine, did you not?

Mr. EDSON. We sold it for any old thing. It used to come in marked "Red Leaf Creamery," "Red Leaf Butter," and all those names; and the trade used to grow so fast—

Mr. BURLESON. Let me understand you. Did you sell it as oleomargarine or not?

Mr. EDSON. Well, the man that bought it knew it was suine, or some style of butterine. He asked the price, and we took it out and sold it for butter.

Mr. BURLESON. I did not ask you about the man to whom you sold it. I asked you if you sold it as oleomargarine?

Mr. EDSON. I can not answer that question, because we simply sold it for what it was marked.

Mr. BURLESON. Do I understand you, then, to come before this committee and say that if oleomargarine can be made for 50 per cent of what it costs to make butter a tax should be levied upon it, because it is a cheaper food than butter?

Mr. EDSON. No, gentlemen. I will say this: I have my own personal views on that 10-cent per pound tax. I know in my heart that 95 per cent of the colored oleo that is sold in our State is sold for butter, and at butter prices; and the poor workman does not get the 10-cent tax. I would a great deal rather see that go to the Government than to see it go into the pockets of the oleomargarine manufacturer.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read from the testimony given at the hearings in 1900, first from the argument of ex-Gov. Hoard, of Wisconsin, which will be found on page 583. He says:

The consumers and producers of butter have asked Congress to enact into law House bill 3717, which provides in the first section that all counterfeit substance for butter, when taken into any State or Territory, shall be subject to the laws of the State or Territory concerning such counterfeit.

He further states that—

With a tax of 10 cents a pound on the counterfeit, we believe these temptations for these profits and the deceptive sale and dishonorable and dangerous conspiring against the law and fraudulent competition against an honest industry will be greatly modified.

A great many people ask why it is not as permissible to color oleomargarine as it is to color butter. I would answer because they are not colored for the same purpose. Butter in winter is too light to suit the taste of most consumers. The highest value is in fresh butter not more than 10 days old. The consumer asks that it bear the yellow summer color of butter. That is a matter of taste, not deception, for it is not colored to resemble something it is not. But oleomargarine is colored to make it resemble butter, which it is not. It is colored, not for the benefit or taste of its consumer, but to deceive the consumer.

Said President Cleveland, in his message approving the oleomargarine legislation of 1886:

"Not the least important incident related to this legislation is the defense afforded to the consumer against the fraudulent substitution and sale of an imitation for a genuine article of food of a very general household use. . . . I venture to say that hardly a pound ever entered a poor man's house under its real name and in its true character."

The argument still holds good.

There is no credible evidence to show that oleomargarine is innocuous; no evidence to show that when eaten continuously in place of butter it is not harmful. But there are reports in great abundance to the effect that oleomargarine is harmful.

Mr. Edmund Hill, a member of the Somerset County council, England, reports that the great bulk of oleomargarine, or "margarine" as it is called there, is eaten in public institutions, convents, schools, etc. At the Wells Asylum, with which he is connected, the inmates receive oleomargarine. In the asylums of Dorset, Wells, and Hants—the adjoining counties—butter is furnished, and the death rate at Wells is 30 per cent higher. At the Taunton Hospital there were 11 deaths in 13 months. Oleomargarine was substituted, and in 9 months the deaths rose to 22.

This accords with the experience in France, where its use in hospitals is forbidden. In the United States, in institutions for the blind and for girls, it has been noticed that the use of oleomargarine lowered the vitality of the inmates very perceptibly.

There is abundant reason for this. The normal heat of the human stomach is 98°. Butter melts at 92°, 6° below the heat of the stomach (passes into pancreatic emulsion and digestion). Nature designed this fat in its raw state for food.

Oleomargarine melts at the varying temperature of 102° to 108°, a temperature no healthful stomach ever attains. As a consequence, this unnatural foreign fat must be expelled by sheer gastric action and force.

Butter fat is found in the milk of all mammals. It is chemically and physically unlike any other fat in existence. It was designed by nature for the food and sustenance of infant offspring, having the most delicate of all digestion. Because of this most evident purpose and provision of nature, butter forms a healthful and important article of food in milk, cream, and in its separated state.

No matter what paid chemists may say, no counterfeit, even in its purest state, is wholesome or healthful.

But there is another phase of this question. There is absolutely no protection for the public against most dangerous introduction of positively unhealthful compounds into oleomargarine.

The Journal of the American Chemical Society and the department of agriculture of New York abound in proof of the adulteration of oleomargarine with paraffin, a substance which the strongest acids even are unable to affect. There is no reason on earth why the foulest of germ-laden fats should not be used in the making of this compound, when once they are deodorized by the aid of chemistry.

But with butter it is different. Any contamination or hurtful manipulation is instantly shown in a loss of flavor. Butter always advertises its condition.

It should be considered that the distinction proposed in taxation against colored oleomargarine will bring no hardship to the consumer who may want this article as a cheap, fat substitute for butter. The coloring of it adds nothing to its digestibility or food value, if it have a food value. The whole proposition is in a nutshell. Force out the color or semblance to butter and you put a stop to its being imposed on the consumer for butter. In addition you protect this great army of producers, the dairymen of the United States, from competition with a fraud and counterfeit.

It is high time that Congress entered upon this work of protection of all honest and legitimate industries against the dishonest greed of the counterfeiter and adulterator.

The Dominion of Canada has taken from us nearly all of our once magnificent export trade in dairy products. Canada absolutely prohibits the making of counterfeit butter or cheese.

Consequently the Dominion stands high among all foreign consumers as to the purity and honesty of its foods.

Our National Government can proceed repressively only in the way of taxation. We believe we are right, fair, and just, and in accordance with a wise public policy in asking of the members of this committee an earnest support of House bill 3717.

The Wilkins case gives a clear idea of the enormous frauds that are being practiced in the oleomargarine traffic, which do not affect the revenue, because the goods used for this fraudulent business have all paid the 2-cent tax.

Attorney General Griggs's statement of facts and refusal to recommend the pardon of Wilkins and Butler will give the reader a clear idea of the character of fraud which is being practiced, the lamentable phase of the question being the fact that this case which came to light is only one of the hundreds of swindles which are being carried on in a large way and of the thousands being practiced upon consumers in all portions of the country.

The Attorney General wrote to President McKinley as follows:

"The petitioners, Joseph Wilkins and Howard Butler, were convicted of fraudulently removing labels from packages containing oleomargarine in violation of the act of August 2, 1886, and were sentenced on March 17, 1898, as to Wilkins, to imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of $1,500 and costs, and, as to Butler, to imprisonment for four months and to pay a fine of $500 and costs.

"The judgment of the district court was subsequently affirmed in the circuit court of appeals, to which it was taken by the defendants, and an application subsequently made to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari was denied. Thereupon, in November last, the petitioners were committed to serve their sentences of imprisonment.

"The grounds of the application for a pardon as to Joseph Wilkins are that he has a wife and child, and that each of the prisoners is of good reputation and standing, and has never been convicted of any other crime. They request, in view of the humiliation and disgrace already suffered by them, as well as of the heavy fines imposed, and in view of their good reputation and standing in the community, and of the fact that no revenue has been lost to the Government, that that portion of the sentence providing for imprisonment be remitted.

"The offense of which the petitioners are now convicted was committed December 20, 1896, two days after the verdict of acquittal in the trial in the District of Columbia. The petitioners were discovered by a revenue agent in the act of scraping off the stamps, marks, and brands from packages of oleomargarine.

"In connection with the present case, an offer to pay $8,000 and costs in compromise was made, but rejected February 23, 1898, and thereupon the case went to trial with the result above stated.

"It is obvious that the business in which Wilkins was engaged must have been one of great profit, otherwise he could not have afforded to make the very large payments in compromise which he did make or offered to make.

"That he was aware of the fraudulent and dishonorable nature of the business in which he was persistently engaged appears from his own statement made in a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, October 31, 1893, from which I quote the following:

"Notwithstanding that the authorities were induced to settle with him upon his promise of abstention in the future from similar violations of the law, it appears that he straightway resumed his operations, undoubtedly taking courage from the success with which he had compromised the first offenses in which he had been discovered.

"It is absolutely clear that for such a persistent violator of the law something more than a money penalty was essential. The sentence of imprisonment imposed in this case was peremptorily required by the circumstances. Nor can I say that the sentence was anything but moderate. It is less than the average sentence imposed upon persistent violators of the internal-revenue laws relating to the distillation of spirits, and much less than the ordinary sentences imposed for violation of the laws against the use of the mails for fraudulent purposes.

"Not only is the dignity of the law to be upheld against such persistent violations, but the public is entitled to be protected by the salutary influence of stern punishment against fraud and deception, such as were practiced in this case, by means of which the petitioners were enabled to impose upon innocent purchasers as genuine butter a counterfeit article, which, if sold for what it really was, would have brought very much less in the open market.

"I do not think that the sentences should be interfered with."

Now, Mr. Chairman, with the information furnished in these extracts and furnished by scientists and experts in the various departments, I fail to see why anyone should work night and day, in season and out of season, to enlighten the American people by sending out circular letters and extracts from testimonies submitted to the committee. Nor can I imagine why women's clubs and various organizations all over this country, who are so much interested in the health and longevity of the children and members of their family, why they should pass resolutions for the repeal or modification of the present law, and which would of course open the gates wide to fraud and deception. Gentlemen, I fear that some one in his zeal to serve the country has overlooked reading and giving to these various clubs and organizations all the testimony relative to this matter.

Gentlemen, these extracts are a few of many that will show that oleo is not altogether a wholesome food product, but I believe sufficient to prove that the contentions set out in the letters are not well founded, and that any law permitting coloring of oleo without an additional tax on the counterfeit, though it may provide for heavy penalties for breaking the original packages and selling it as butter can not be made effective in preventing its fraudulent sale and that to not make its sale subject to the laws of the State is a dangerous proposition; that it will open the gates wide for fraud and deception, and it seems to me that President Cleveland's and the Attorney General's and others' statement relative to its fraudulent sale ought to convince anybody, that rather than to weaken the present law, it should be strengthened.

While the present law is not perfect in all its details, it has worked fairly well, and I believe by amending the law as suggested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by providing for a strip stamp instead of a coupon it would be all that is required. Personally, I believe it very unwise to repeal section 1, which provides that the sale of oleo shall be subject to the laws of the State and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in original packages or otherwise, and equally unwise to permit its coloring in imitation of butter. Personally, I believe if coloring is permitted by law, the counterfeiting should be taxed equal to the difference of cost between oleo and butter, thus removing the incentive to perpetrate the fraud and I believe that taxing the counterfeit is the most effective way of preventing its fraudulent sale; but as stated in the statement, the representatives of the dairy people who recently met here in Washington, after carefully considering the conditions confronting us, including the prevailing misconception of the purpose of the 10-cent tax on colored oleo, many contending that the 10-cent tax is a tax on oleo, while of course it is not a tax on oleo, but a tax on fraud, for where oleo is sold in its natural color and for what it is, the tax is one-fourth cent per pound only and the 10-cent tax is applied only when colored to deceive and defraud. But after carefully considering all matters, it was decided to not insist upon the 10-cent tax, but to insist that oleo shall not be made in imitation or semblance of butter of any shade of yellow and that section 1 should be incorporated in the bill, and they prepared a statement presenting their views with relation to the Lever bill, and appointed a committee to draw a bill in accord with these views and requested me to introduce their bill which I did, and which is known as the Haugen bill, H. R. 19338.

The bill is not my bill. I claim no credit for its production. As before stated, it was prepared by thoroughly competent and experienced dairy men, including officers of the National Grange, men who have given the subject careful and thorough consideration, men of ability and the highest integrity, acting with the firm determination to draft a bill just and fair to the dairy interests and also just and fair to the oleo interests and to the millions of consumers of the two products, and have sought to attach only such reasonable restrictions as would prevent fraud and protect consumers.

Gentlemen, by reading over these extracts you will find that Mr. Bennett, though he reluctantly admits it, let the cat out of the bag. Bennett says:

I do not see how it could possibly get into a food product without the connivance, as I say, of some employee.

Gentlemen, if the thousands of employees serve the Beef Trust in violating the law, and where heavy penalties are imposed for so doing, why would they not do what told to do where no penalties are imposed for so doing?

Gentlemen, bear in mind that the act of August 2, 1886, did provide that the packages of oleo should be marked and stamped as prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that the manufacturers should put on each package a label giving number of factory, and so forth. It provided for heavy penalties of $50 for each offense for removal of labels so affixed; but, unfortunately, it permitted its coloring and provided for a uniform tax of 2 cents on colored and uncolored oleo. You will see that many of its provisions are practically the same as are provided for in the bills now pending in the House; and as it did not prohibit its coloring in imitation of butter, and did not tax the counterfeit, the law proved ineffective, and that is what we may expect of any similar act.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have only 20 minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman believe that it is fair to one industry to impose a tax upon it if that industry sells its product not fraudulently as something else, but sells it for what it is and under severe penalties against fraudulent representation? Does the gentleman think it is fair to tax one product as against another?

Mr. HAUGEN. You mean if it is sold for what it is? As long as one sells his article for what it is no one raises any objection. We are willing to leave the present law as it is. I acknowledge that it is not perfect in all its details, but I believe that by amending it, as suggested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it would be all that would be necessary.

Mr. HARDY. Leaving it without any taxation?

Mr. HAUGEN. In my opinion, the way to prevent fraud and deception in the sale of oleo is by taxing the counterfeit, the same as you tax the counterfeit of the gold dollar.

Mr. HARDY. There is no tax on a counterfeit gold dollar.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; but penalties are imposed for counterfeiting gold dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in this connection, that at the beginning of the hearings of the Sixty-first Congress that it was practically agreed that the question of wholesomeness should not be brought up, and after such agreement was made no effort was made to introduce evidence to prove the wholesomeness of butter or the unwholesomeness of oleo by the dairy people; but as the matter was constantly brought up by the other side by introducing witnesses to prove the wholesomeness of oleo and discredit butter, I deemed it just to introduce evidence which had been submitted and printed in the hearings of 1900, but objections were made on the ground that it would be burdening the record, yet hundreds of pages of testimony intended to discredit butter had been presented at the hearings, but not one single paragraph relating to the unwholesomeness of oleo must go in, because it burdens the record. You remember that the same argument and the same reason was given last Tuesday against printing this testimony in the record.

Mr. HARDY. Would the gentleman be willing, also, to tax butter if it was colored?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly, if it was colored to deceive and pass a counterfeit; but the gentleman knows as well as I do that butter is never colored to pass it as a counterfeit. It is colored to suit the eye and to make it more palatable, while oleomargarine is colored for one purpose, and only one, and that is to pass it as butter and to sell it as butter and at a higher price. That statement is borne out by the statements made by witnesses who appeared before the committee, such as Mr. Cabell, the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BURLERSON. The gentleman can not find in the hearings where Mr. Cabell said any such thing.

Mr. HAUGEN. What?

Mr. BURLERSON. That oleomargarine was colored only for one purpose, the purpose of disposing of it as butter.

Mr. HAUGEN. If you will give me time, I will read it to you.

Mr. BURLERSON. The gentleman can take all the time he wants, but he can find no such statement made by Mr. Cabell.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will you give me five minutes—

Mr. BURLERSON. I am willing to give you an hour, or even longer.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the gentleman does not control the time. I will print it in the Record, if that will suit the gentleman.

Mr. BURLERSON. Does not the gentleman know as a matter of fact Mr. Cabell said, speaking of the proposed legislation, that it would prevent or materially diminish the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter; and, further, that it is absolutely impossible under existing law to prevent such frauds, whereas under the proposed bill that fraud would be reduced to a minimum?

Mr. HAUGEN. I say to the gentleman that Mr. Cabell's statement is this, That it is being colored for the purpose of enabling them to sell it as butter. You will find it, not only on one page, but you will find it running through the hearings; there is no question about that. (Hearings, 61st Cong.)

Mr. FLANDERS. When you speak of fraud, do you mean the fraud practiced upon the Treasury Department?

Mr. CABELL. Yes; of course. The debauching of the trade, and the fraud upon the public is a matter which I, as a citizen, am interested in, but as Internal Revenue Commissioner I am only interested in it incidentally.

The CHAIRMAN. That is to say, they have been led to believe that it was butter and not oleomargarine at all?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. STANLEY. Do you assume, in that data, that all colored oleomargarine is artificially colored?

Mr. CABELL. That is a distinction that we make. Recently manufacturers have begun to put tinted oleomargarine on the market, and that tinted oleomargarine is generally sold under its own name—that is, being put in labeled packages. There are one or two manufacturers selling oleomargarine under its own name, but most of the tinted goods being put out now which under the law is uncolored—that is, the color having been added by one of the ingredients—is sold under its own name, oleomargarine.

Mr. CABELL. Many persons do, but now we come to the other part, where the public is deceived. Our agents have this happen every once in a while, and this is how we catch a man. He begins to take chances, because the idea of profit becomes such a great temptation to him. The merchant will take the 60-pound tub of oleomargarine and set it on the counter, and put a 60-pound tub of butter on the counter. A man will come in and say, "What is the price of butter?" The answer will be, probably, "42 cents." Then the customer will say, "You know that I can't pay any such price as that; is that the price you are charging?" Then the merchant will say, "But I have some butter here which is just as good; it is not dairy butter, but you can't tell the difference, and I will sell you that for 35 cents." Then the customer will say, "Well, let me have a couple of pounds of that," and the merchant will take it out of the box of oleomargarine right before the customer's eyes and sell it for butter. And who is going to be the wiser, unless one of our agents catches it and analyzes it? And then the housewife does not want to come down to court and testify. He has done that with impunity. We have our agents dress up as street-car conductors, or laboring men, etc., and we catch them in that way. Dealers also will start out with oleomargarine on the wagons with all of the marks required by law. After the wagons start the drivers take the wrappers off; and they have sold it this way in the District of Columbia, even right on Connecticut Avenue and on Rhode Island Avenue.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE, JANUARY 26, 1912.

Mr. CABELL. In my judgment the facts justify what I stated a few moments ago—that there are two causes. In a number of cases we find that the person qualified to sell uncolored oleomargarine sells oleomargarine artificially colored. There are a large number of violations of that class, but a larger number of violations are where they color it and mix it with butter and sell it for butter.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is to enable him to sell it at a higher price.

Mr. CABELL. They sell it somewhere in the neighborhood of the price of the lower grade of butter. There have been two classes of violations in that way; the one would use artificial coloring in it, selling it for oleomargarine; but in the greater number of cases we catch persons selling it for butter, and in those cases there are greater amounts involved.

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe you pointed out to some one last year that they sold nearly all of it as butter.

Mr. CABELL. Great quantities of it undoubtedly are sold for butter, as I pointed out in my annual report this year.

Now, a word as to the contention that practically all the merchants are in favor of the Burlerson bill; and as the Burlerson bill repeals the section which imposes a tax on oleo and does not provide a tax on either colored or uncolored oleo, it practically repeals the whole law, for in the absence of the tax on the article the Internal-Revenue Bureau will have no jurisdiction over its manufacture or sale. Therefore it is contended that the merchants generally favor the repeal of the present law, or at least to modify it, which in effect would weaken it and make it ineffective.

Gentlemen, that statement I can not believe, but letters and telegrams are pouring into Washington which convey that idea, and those letters and resolutions are being used as evidence of the fact and, evidently, with effect. Much capital has been made out of a letter from Mr. Thomas, secretary of the Iowa State Retail Merchants' Association, and one from Mr. Mulqueen, of Council Bluffs.

References have been made to statements made by Mr. Green, secretary of the Retail Merchants of Illinois. In answer to a question, "Do you indorse it?" (the Burlerson bill) he answered "Yes." (See Hearings, pp. 231, 232.) Mr. T. P. Sullivan, president of the National Retail Grocers' Association of the United States, claiming to represent about 28 States and probably 140,000 members, said: "I desire to say that I indorse everything that Mr. Green has said." (Hearings, p. 233.) Notwithstanding these letters, resolutions, and statements, I want to say I believe—and, in fact, I know—that generally merchants throughout the country do not concur in the sentiment expressed by Mr. Green and Mr. Sullivan and in the letters and resolutions, and my understanding is that while no dairyman or merchant objects to selling oleo when called for, and sold for what it is, they do not believe in counterfeiting or making its fraudulent sale possible, and thereby not only crippling or destroying the legitimate industry carried on by their best customers—a business so conducive to the best interests of agriculture and prosperity in general—but will force onto millions of unwilling consumers an undesirable food product at enhanced and exorbitant prices, as did the 5,492 dealers who succeeded in selling 62,000,000 pounds of oleo in 1900 as butter and at butter prices and in violation of the laws, as pointed out by Grover Cleveland and the Attorney General and as shown by the records of the Treasury Department. Through its fraudulent sale they thereby not only rob the producers of butter of their legitimate market for a worthy and legitimate product, but rob millions of consumers of the difference of the cost between oleo and butter, and nobody benefited except the lawbreakers, the dishonest vendors in oleo. I can not believe the merchants generally desire such conditions to return, and I will want further proof.

Gentlemen, do you believe that merchants in general favor repeal or amendment of the present law so as to make it ineffective and to make fraudulent sale possible? No. If you do, you are mistaken. I know a number of merchants; I have been a merchant myself and know something about how business is transacted. I know that they are as much opposed to passing counterfeits on others as they are to have them passed on themselves. Every honest merchant wants to sell everything on its merit and for what it is. That is why he is for the pure-food law and against misbranding, adulteration, fraud, and deception. Do you believe that he wants to engage in the fraudulent sale of oleo? Certainly not. Oh, what a misconception it is on the part of those who contend that it is the dishonest man who succeeds in business. A few do, that is true; but show me a merchant who is known to be dishonest in his dealings and I will show you a merchant without a business. To the contrary, if a man is known to be honest, upright, square, and fair in his dealings, he will enjoy the confidence and respect of all who know him. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred it is the merchant whose character is founded on integrity, with a firm determination to do justice and right, who succeeds in life. I can not conceive that any merchant, with information of these fraudulent practices at hand, would, under any consideration, advocate the repeal or weakening of the present law or to make it ineffective in preventing fraud and deception. I may be mistaken, but to me it seems absolutely certain that to repeal section 1 of the present law and to permit the coloring of oleo without taxing the counterfeit would open the gates wide for counterfeiting and deception; and if the merchants see it as I do I know that they would under no circumstances favor the enactment of any such law.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have not the time. If you will yield me the time, I will be very glad to discuss this matter all the afternoon.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I wanted the gentleman's opinion on one important phase of the question.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may have permission—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he has only two and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. HAUGEN (continuing). To have printed in the RECORD two letters and a resolution I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Thomas, who claims to represent the retail merchants of the State of Iowa—

Mr. BURLESON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to state the date of that letter.

Mr. HAUGEN. Recently; I have it here—

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection, but I do not think matter 12 years old should go into the RECORD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Within a few days.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Also the resolution passed by the Merchants' Association of Council Bluffs recently.

Mr. BURLESON. No objection to it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Now will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do I understand the gentleman that if oleomargarine is allowed to be sold after it is colored or manufactured that it is impossible for the United States Government to throw around its sale sufficient restrictions to safeguard the public interests against fraud?

Mr. HAUGEN. Why, absolutely.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is all.

Mr. HAUGEN. As before stated, Congress passed a law in 1886 providing that every package should be marked and stamped, and providing for a heavy penalty for the destruction of those markings and the wrappers. And what happened? Five thousand four hundred and ninety-two dealers sold 62,000,000 pounds, every pound of which was sold in violation of law, every pound of it was sold in violation of the laws of the States, and 5,492 dealers were in the business of violating the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like a little time to—

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters and resolution referred to are as follows:

IOWA STATE RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,
Des Moines, Iowa, February 13, 1912.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAUGEN: In behalf of the hundreds of thousands of consuming public in Iowa I would ask that you give your favorable consideration and support to the oleo bill as reported from the House committee.

You doubtless realize that the consumers of Iowa have been at the mercy this winter of the Creamery Butter Trust and have been obliged to pay 40 and 50 cents for this necessary article.

In the event of the passage of this oleo bill this will give the people a good, palatable article at a cost considerable less than that asked for the creamery product.

This legislation has been indorsed by our State association of merchants and, I believe, by the State Federation of Labor, and I trust will have your support, as requested.

Yours, very truly,

IRA B. THOMAS,
Secretary.

Also one from Mr. Mulqueen, grocer:

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, February 14, 1912.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed find copy of resolutions passed by our association some time ago, which shows our, and I believe expresses the sentiment of every merchant in Iowa.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN T. MULQUEEN,
230 Main Street, Council Bluffs.

OLEO TAX.

Whereas oleomargarine is conceded by chemists and food experts to be a wholesome food product, and

Whereas existing laws discriminate against this wholesome article of food through a tax of 10 cents a pound when artificially colored, the only purpose of which is to make it appear palatable, and

Whereas artificial coloring matter is permitted in butter and other dairy products, which clearly establishes a discrimination, and

Whereas the discriminatory tax placed upon oleomargarine must be paid, in the main, by poorer classes of people, and has a tendency to increase the price of butter, and

Whereas, with the present high cost of living, oleomargarine would afford a pure and economical spread for bread: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Council Bluffs Retail Grocers and Butchers' Association, That Congress be petitioned to so amend the oleomargarine law that a tax of not more than one-quarter cent per pound be placed upon the product, whether colored or uncolored, and that a license fee not exceeding $6 per year be placed upon the retail dealer for the privilege of vending oleomargarine, and that the product be sold only in original tax-paid packages.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. FINLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, it is astonishing how thoroughly obsessed one can become with the views of a particular class with whom he is constantly brought in intimate contact. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] is thoroughly honest in his belief that the proposed legislation to repeal the 10-cent tax on colored oleomargarine is for the sole purpose of making easy the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter.

Mr. HAUGEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. BURLESON. I thought the gentleman was honest in his statement, but I am willing to hear him further.

Mr. HAUGEN. That would be the effect of the repealing of the law, but that was not the purpose. I am not here to impugn the motives of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURLERSON. I have not said that the gentleman was impugning my motives, and nothing the gentleman has said could be so construed. I will state again that the gentleman is thoroughly sincere in his belief that the repeal of this tax on colored oleomargarine would increase its fraudulent sale as butter, but, as a matter of fact, as is well known, every officer chargeable with the duty of administering this law takes the directly opposite view. The hearings before the Agricultural Committee during the Sixty-first Congress conclusively showed that the proposed legislation, instead of encouraging and increasing violations of the law, will materially diminish the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Cabell—and a very efficient officer he is—repeatedly stated during the hearings that under the law as it now exists it is utterly impossible to prevent the "moonshiner" from disposing of oleomargarine as butter. At the same time, he was emphatic in his statement that if the bill now pending before the Committee on Agriculture should become law, it will reduce this fraud to a minimum.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gravamen of the complaint the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] makes is that certain strictures or certain criticisms have been made with reference to the unwholesomeness of milk and butter. He says there was an agreement that during the hearings the unwholesomeness of oleomargarine should not be brought in question. That is true, because when the hearings were commenced those who favored the pending legislation had eminent chemists present for the purpose of showing that it was not only healthful and nutritious but that it was undoubtedly a wholesome product. And in order to save time those who stood with the gentleman from Iowa stated to the Committee on Agriculture that, in order to not take the time of the committee in hearings upon that issue, they would concede that it was a wholesome product. And because, forsooth, a letter was sent out in response to a number of resolutions that had been forwarded to me by women's organizations asking for an investigation with reference to the unhealthfulness of milk and butter, the gentleman intimates that there has been a breach of the understanding then had.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the gentleman's time. However, I would like to correct that statement. To begin with, I have not questioned the gentleman's right or motive in sending out these letters.

Mr. BURLERSON. Mr. Chairman, my time is limited, and I decline to yield. I have not said that he has impugned my motives or even questioned them. He could not if he wished, in view of the statements contained in the letter which he has caused to be printed in the RECORD.

But, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Parsons, late a Representative from the State of New York, introduced during the Sixty-first Congress a resolution urging the Committee on Agriculture to make an investigation of the unwholesomeness of milk and butter, directing attention to these products as vehicles of disease, and in response to that resolution this Congress has been flooded with resolutions from women's organizations from one end of this country to the other, appealing to the Congress to make an investigation of the dangers arising from the use of uninspected milk and butter.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BURLERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if these resolutions have not been passed in response to these letters that have been sent out, and as the gentleman now has referred to a certain letter, I will ask him if he has not sent out a number of letters at different times, and that these resolutions are in response to the letters sent out, and upon the representation made in those letters and the circular that went with them?

Mr. BURLERSON. Undoubtedly that may be true. A plain statement of fact was made with reference to this resolution, and the attention of women's organizations throughout the country was invited to the fact that butter and milk frequently reeked with typhoid and tuberculosis germs and were a prolific source of disease. And they were invited to support the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York asking for an investigation, with a view of securing action which, I hope, in due time will be taken.

Mr. Chairman, bearing on this important matter I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution adopted in this city as late as February 8 of this year, and ask that it be read. It will show the dangers I allude to in the letter which was printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions on the protection of public health against the bovine source of human tuberculosis and for the conservation of food-producing animals. Adopted February 8, 1912, at a meeting of the board of directors of the Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis of the District of Columbia, Surg. Gen. George M. Sternberg, United States Army, retired, president.

Whereas it has been proved by Federal and private investigators at Washington, D. C., and by State, municipal, and private investigators elsewhere in the United States, and by the British Royal Commission on Human and Animal Tuberculosis, and by the German Imperial Tuberculosis Commission, in Europe, that bovine tubercle bacilli in dairy products are a serious cause of human tuberculosis, especially among children, who should receive, alike on the basis of sentiment and reason; first consideration in measures taken for the protection of public health; and

Whereas this fact, confirmed by investigators the world over, has been accorded definite recognition by the International Congress on Tuberculosis, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, and the American International Commission on the Control of Bovine Tuberculosis, and has had marked influence on measures recently taken by the Governments of England and France to protect the public against tuberculosis; and

Whereas the danger to which the public health is exposed through the use of infected dairy products is a danger against which the individual, acting as an individual, can not protect himself; and

Whereas the danger to which the public health is exposed through the common occurrence of virulent tubercle bacilli in the milk from tuberculous dairy herds can be eliminated by obtaining milk from herds in which all the cows have been proved free from tuberculosis by the tuberculin test, or by the proper pasteurization of all milk and cream before they are used as beverages or in the preparation of butter, ice cream, cheese, etc.; and

Whereas it has been proved that the proper pasteurization of milk and cream protects the public health not only against the tubercle bacilli they may contain, but also against other disease germs, such as those of typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, sore throat, etc., which are often spread through the agency of raw milk and cream in a way that causes epidemics, at times accompanied by great mortality; and

Whereas it is known that cream contains about 60 per cent of the total bacteria of the whole milk from which it is separated and that the bacteria contained in cream infect the butter and ice cream made from it; and

Whereas it is advisable that tuberculosis be eradicated from dairy herds: Be it

Resolved, That the United States Congress, the legislative body for the District of Columbia, be urged to enact a law requiring the pasteurization, under official supervision, of all milk and cream sold in the District of Columbia, unless such milk and cream are obtained from dairy herds in which the animals have been proved free from tuberculosis by both physical examination and the tuberculin test; that all dairy herds supplying milk and cream for the District of Columbia be kept in accordance with the sanitary requirements of the health office of the District of Columbia; and that the milk and cream of no cow showing clinical symptoms of tuberculosis or other communicable disease shall be sold as human food in any form in the District of Columbia; and be it further

Resolved, That this association respectfully urges upon the Congress of the United States that steps be immediately taken, in collaboration with the officials of various States which may so elect, for the complete eradication of all tuberculosis among animals; and be it further

Resolved, That this association recognizes the danger of tuberculosis resulting from butter, ice cream, and other dairy products made of raw milk and cream obtained from tuberculous herds, and respectfully urges that Congress enact laws which shall guard against such infection; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be requested to continue the distribution of literature defining how tuberculosis among animals may be eradicated and how animals free from the disease may be protected against infection; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States; to the President of the Senate; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; to the Secretary of the Treasury, in whose department the Bureau of Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service is located; to the Secretary of Agriculture; to the chairmen of the Senate Committees on Public Health and National Quarantine, the District of Columbia, and Agriculture and Forestry; to the chairmen of the House Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the District of Columbia, and Agriculture; to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; to the chairman, National Relief Board, American Red Cross Society; and to the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Discussed and approved by:

George M. Sternberg, Surgeon General, United States Army, retired; Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chemist and Chief of Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture; Dr. E. C. Schroeder, Superintendent of Experiment Station, Bureau of Animal Industry; Dr. R. W. Hickman, Chief of Quarantine Division, Bureau of Animal Industry; Dr. George M. Kober, professor of hygiene and dean of Georgetown University Medical School; Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture; Dr. John R. Mohler, Chief of Pathological Division, Bureau of Animal Industry; Dr. Wm. C. Woodward, health officer, District of Columbia; Dr. G. Lloyd Magruder, emeritus professor of materia medica and therapeutics, Georgetown University.

Mr. BURLERSON. Thus it is seen that a Surgeon General of the Army, Gen. Sternberg; the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, the great food expert, Dr. Wiley; the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Dr. Melvin; the District health officer, Dr. Woodward; in fact the leading scientists of this city, support the very proposition that is laid down in the letter which the gentleman from Iowa complains about. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the last report made by the trustees of the Washington Home for Foundlings, and from which I will read a short statement relating to the death rate of that institution for the past several years:

If we compare the mortalities of the previous 10 years, we find that the average has been 21 per year—the highest in 1904, with 43 deaths, and the lowest in 1906, with 7 deaths.

Immediately preceding this statement, I read that—

The loss by death during the year was 4 out of a total of 77 children, and is by far the lowest mortality the institution has ever had.

Mr. Chairman, I had it from the lips of a gentleman connected with that institution that this marked decrease in the death rate of these unfortunate babies was directly attributable to the fact that the hospital authorities had instituted a careful inspection of the milk and butter that was supplied to it and which was being used to feed these foundlings. Thus human lives are saved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does not the gentleman believe that many deaths in the last few years have been prevented not only through that means but through the effect of pure-food legislation?

Mr. BURLESON. I do not doubt that, but I do not see what bearing that has on the issue now under discussion.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It shows that it has had at least something to do, although not all to do, with that particular subject.

Mr. BURLESON. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition, but I do not see what bearing that has on the question we are now discussing.

Mr. Chairman, further, with reference to milk and butter being a vehicle of disease, I hold in my hand one of the reports of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, issued February 16, 1912. It is a report made by one of the leading experts of the Marine-Hospital Service, who was sent to Texarkana, Tex., for the purpose of investigating an epidemic of typhoid. Reading from the summary and conclusion of this report:

To sum up the foregoing, 25 out of 34 cases arising in the city, or 73.5 per cent, are attributed to the use of milk from one dairy.

Now, surely the gentleman from Iowa is not so anxious to promote the interests of the dairy people of this country as that he will stand here and block or interfere with or obstruct the passage of a resolution to make an investigation that will result in the saving of the lives of these unfortunate foundlings and the other children and people from one end of the country to the other.

I want to say to the gentleman that if he can get away from the narrow views of the class with which he is so intimately associated—the dairy interests and the butter combine of this country—he can then understand that the purpose of the proposed legislation is not to increase the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine, but it is to take a burdensome tax off a healthful, wholesome, nutritious food product. I assure him the purpose of the legislation is not to encourage fraud. It will, in fact, throw more stringent regulations around the sale of oleomargarine and serve to prevent rather than increase this fraud. The officer charged with the enforcement of the oleomargarine law—the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—argues in favor of its passage for the very reason that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] earnestly urges its defeat. Mr. Cabell says that it will prevent fraud. The gentleman from Iowa and the butter combine say that it will increase fraud. When this measure to repeal this indefensible tax is brought before this body for consideration those who favor it want to discuss it upon its merits, and upon its merits alone, and we have absolute confidence as to what the result will be when action is taken on it by this body. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, probably no bill of a more technical character comes before the House than the fortifications appropriation bill, and probably no bill is of greater importance, considering the size of the appropriation, which is not large as compared with other supply bills of the Government.

The committee, in considering the estimates for the pending bill, had in mind the necessity of affording means for the proper defense of the country, and with a proper desire to exercise close scrutiny over estimates and to promote economy in public expenditures, there was never lost sight of this main purpose of the legislation—to provide for a proper seacoast defense of continental United States and the insular possessions.

I am glad to be able to say to this Committee of the Whole that there has been no division along party lines or otherwise in any material sense as to what items should be carried in this bill and the amounts of those items. The estimates submitted amounted to $7,218,899, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying bill appropriations amounting to $4,036,235, which amount is $1,437,472 less than was appropriated for the same purpose at the last session of Congress and $3,182,664 less than the estimates submitted; and while this is a very pronounced reduction from the estimates and a considerable reduction from the amount carried in the bill last year, there has been no matter omitted that was deemed in any sense necessary at this time to provide for, having in view a proper defense of our country.

No other supply bill that is presented to Congress has from its inception followed quite as closely a complete scheme as has the fortifications appropriation bill. In 1885 a board was appointed to prepare plans for the proper defense of the United States, that board being subsequently known as the Endicott Board. In 1906 there was again appointed a board to revise and bring up to date the scheme as presented by the Endicott Board. That latter board, known as the Taft Board, made its report, and the appropriations from the beginning of modern seacoast defense have been in line with the recommendations of the Endicott Board as subsequently modified by the Taft Board and as in turn modified from year to year as the exigencies of the situation developed the need for such modification.

For continental United States the original scheme, as modified to date, will cost $163,933,480.66, of which amount $119,944,434 has been appropriated.

The scheme of fortifications for the insular possessions contemplated by the National Defense Board, as revised to date, will cost in the aggregate $28,951,355, of which amount there has been appropriated the sum of $16,544,434.

The difference between the estimated whole cost of the so-called Endicott scheme of fortifications, as modified and revised to date, for continental United States, $163,933,480.66, and the appropriations made therefor to date, $119,944,434.03, amounts to $43,989,046.63.

The difference between the estimated whole cost of the scheme of fortifications for the insular possessions, as revised to date, $28,951,355.89, and the appropriations already made therefor, $16,544,434.09, amounts to $12,406,921.80.

The difference between the combined estimated cost of both schemes, $192,884,836.55, and the combined appropriations therefor to date, $136,488,868.12, amounts to $56,395,968.43.

The difference between the $136,488,868.12, already provided toward the scheme of the Endicott Board, modified by the National Coast Defense Board, and the sum total of appropriations, $159,632,230.32, for fortifications since 1888, amounting to $23,143,362.20, is represented in expenditures for erecting and equipping the gun factory at Watervliet, the gun-carriage factory at Watertown, the powder factory at Picatinny, N. J., the Ordnance and Fortification Board, the manufacture of mountain, field, and siege guns and ammunition therefor, and for sundry other objects incident to providing and maintaining a system of seacoast defenses.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. I was trying to pay close attention. Did the gentleman state how much had been expended on the coast defenses of the United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. There has been spent, on projects carrying out the scheme for continental United States, $119,944,000 in round numbers.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman, in as concise a way as possible, inform the committee for what purpose this sum of money has been expended?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is impossible to answer the gentleman's question with any satisfaction without going into a review of the entire expenditures since 1885. Broadly speaking, this money has been expended for providing fortifications at the major seacoast cities of the United States and such other places as possess strategic value and, in the opinion of the board, it was desirable to fortify.

Mr. HELM. Does that include the Coast Artillery posts?

Mr. SHERLEY. It includes the purchase of sites, emplacements, armaments and the accessories thereof, and so forth, but does not include barracks and quarters for the Coast Artillery, which have been carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HELM. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much of this total sum that has been spent on continental United States has been spent on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not inform the gentleman offhand. The $119,000,000 can not all be localized. Of that sum about $76,000,000 could be, and of that sum about $49,000,000 has gone to Atlantic and Gulf fortifications.

Mr. HELM. One more question. Does this bill carry any appropriations for the construction of an island at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Referring to the last question put by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM], as to the island at the mouth of the Chesapeake, is there not a commission now investigating the advisability of establishing such an island?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not that I know of. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that from year to year various recommendations have been presented to Congress for the fortification of the lower Chesapeake, and as originally presented they contemplated the building of an artificial island at the mouth of the Chesapeake. The Committee on Appropriations and Congress, acting on their recommendation, have repeatedly refused to make such appropriation. There was carried in this bill an estimate for $150,000 for the purchase of land on the Virginia side, with a view of fortifying the Chesapeake by the establishment of batteries there. By reason of the recent very great increase of range and efficiency of guns and mortars, the department has become convinced that it will not be necessary to construct an artificial island in order properly to guard the entrance to the Chesapeake.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been looking over the report as carefully as I could with a view to finding out about the Chesapeake Bay fortification, since there is some apprehension on the part of people in Norfolk and vicinity that they may not be so well fortified and protected as they ought to be.

Mr. SHERLEY. That item of $150,000 was not allowed by the committee. I shall be glad to discuss it further on if the gentleman desires.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is nothing in the bill pertaining to it?

Mr. SHERLEY. Nothing in the bill in that regard.

It may not be amiss, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the general statement I have just made, to discuss more in detail these large expenditures. I have referred to the Endicott and Taft Board plans. It is in pursuance of these plans that the estimates are submitted to Congress each year, and constitute the bill as originally considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I should state in passing that the estimates for the fortification of the Panama Canal are submitted as a part of the general canal estimates and are carried in the sundry civil bill and are not included in any of the figures I shall use.

These items of appropriation may be roughly divided into three general classes, namely:

1. Fortification of seacoast forts, including ammunition.
2. Supply of Field Artillery material, including ammunition.
3. Miscellaneous items related to the above but not strictly forming parts thereof.

The first classification can be subdivided into three items: (a) Items pertaining to new armament and installation, including reserve ammunition; these items embrace guns, gun carriages, emplacements, sites for defense, electrical installation, searchlights, sea walls, submarine-mine structures, fire-control instruments and structures, and ammunition; (b) items pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alterations of property embraced in subdivision a, except ammunition; and (c) items pertaining to seacoast target-practice ammunition, including appliances for same, and subdivisions a and b should also be segregated according as they relate to continental United States and the insular possessions.

Under these three subdivisions of the first general division there has been heretofore appropriated for continental United States, including practice ammunition used in the insular possessions, $119,944,434.03. Of this amount, under subdivision a, items pertaining to new armament and installation, there has been apportioned $86,811,050.25; items relating to reserve ammunition, $14,832,885.98. Under subdivision b—that is, the item for maintenance, repair, and alteration—there has been appropriated $12,686,095.43. Under subdivision c, seacoast target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated the sum of $4,414,058, and there has been covered into the Treasury unexpended $1,200,344.37.

Under subdivisions a and b there has been appropriated for the insular possessions $16,544,434.09. This total includes, under subdivision a, items pertaining to new armament and installation, $14,651,589.09; items for reserve seacoast ammunition, $1,700,000. Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $192,845. So that the total of appropriations for both continental United States and the insular possessions, under heading No. 1, amounts to $136,488,868.12.

The second general classification, to wit, supply of Field Artillery material, including ammunition, can also be subdivided into three classifications similar to that of item No. 1. In other words, (a) those pertaining to new material, including reserve ammunition; (b) those pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alteration; and (c) those pertaining to target-practice ammunition.

The total appropriated has been $7,030,200. The total of the above that is included under the subdivision a, new material, including reserve ammunition, is $6,063,800, of which $1,501,000 was for such reserve ammunition, leaving $4,562,200 as the amount that has been appropriated for new material. Of this latter sum $580,000 is counted as being for new material, though it is literally for the purpose of making new batteries out of old ones.

Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $306,000. Under subdivision c, for target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated $660,400.

The third general classification, to wit, miscellaneous items related to the preceding but not strictly forming parts thereof, consists of the following items, totaling appropriations of $16,113,182.20:

Board of Ordnance and Fortification.....	$2,425,003.00
Proving ground, Sandy Hook.....	1,497,178.00
Machine guns not used for seacoast defenses.....	385,082.00
Ordnance establishments, buildings, gun factory, powder factory, etc.....	2,997,042.00
Machinery for ordnance establishments.....	451,097.00
Purchase of materials abroad, Board of Ordnance and Fortification.....	100,000.00
Experimental guns, carriages, and ammunition.....	919,603.00
Testing experimental guns and carriages.....	167,500.00
Implements, equipments, alteration, and maintenance of old armament.....	133,896.00
Field material and ammunition of old designs.....	5,374,959.00
Field material and ammunition of old designs (national defense fund).....	1,341,383.00
Returned to Treasury.....	241,293.00
Unassigned balance for fire-control instruments on account of insular possessions.....	79,141.91
Unaccounted for to balance.....	1.29

The statement I shall read shows the funds that it is estimated by the War Department will be necessary for the completion of the various projects heretofore outlined.

Under the first classification, and for continental United States only, it is estimated that the items coming under subdivision a will be as follows:

For construction of emplacements.....	$9,702,130.00
Sites for defenses.....	1,455,900.00
Electrical installations.....	4,652,769.00
Searchlights.....	2,200,000.00
Sea walls.....	1,524,845.00
Submarine-mine structures.....	377,406.00
Fire control.....	4,599,554.00
Guns and carriages.....	7,378,300.00
Reserve ammunition.....	7,750,266.63
Submarine mines.....	1,036,505.00

Total..... 40,677,675.63

Under subdivision b they are for—

Modernizing emplacements.....	1,024,201
Alteration of armament.....	2,287,170

Total..... 3,311,371

Making, under the first general division for continental United States, a grand total of $43,989,046.63.

In addition to the above it is estimated that there will be annually required $1,000,000 for maintenance, repair, and minor alterations, and $425,000 for target practice.

For the insular possessions, under subdivision a of the first classification, the following is the estimate for the completion of projects:

For construction of emplacements.....	$4,174,200.00
Electrical installation.....	266,528.00
Searchlights.....	379,400.00
Submarine-mine structures.....	400,000.00
Fire control.....	550,000.00
Guns and carriages.....	2,021,150.00
Reserve ammunition.....	4,293,493.80
Submarine mines.....	322,150.00

Total..... 12,406,921.80

It is estimated that no appropriations will be required under subdivision b for alteration or under subdivision c for target practice.

In addition to the above, it is estimated that $76,585 will be annually required for maintenance, repair, and minor alterations, plus a proportionate increase due to the installation of new armament as it is supplied.

Under the second general classification, first noted, it is estimated that items coming under subdivision a will be as follows: For new matériel, including funds for the alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $15,230,686.80; for reserve ammunition, $22,031,329.47, making a total of $37,262,016.27.

In addition to the above, it is estimated that there will be required annually $45,000 for alteration, maintenance, and repair, and $130,000 for target practice.

It should be stated in connection with the foregoing items for Field Artillery matériel and ammunition that it is also estimated by the War Department that for such matériel and ammunition for the use of the militia there will be required a total of $10,879,278, for which latter sum, however, it is expected that estimates will be submitted and appropriations carried in the Army bill.

In the present estimates there is asked, under the first general division for continental United States, subdivision a, new matériel, and so forth, $822,000, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying bill $203,000, together with a reappropriation of $50,000; under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, and so forth, $997,000, of which amount the bill carries $820,000, together with a reappropriation of $161,000; and under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $425,000, all of which is recommended in the bill, making a total estimate of $2,244,000, of which the bill carries $1,448,000; in addition to which there are recommended authorizations as above stated amounting to $211,000.

In the insular possessions, under subdivision a, there is asked for new matériel, ammunition, and so forth, $1,993,414, of which there is recommended in the bill $1,272,500 and an authorization of $71,400, and under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, and so forth, $76,585, of which the sum of $65,835 is recommended, making total estimates of $2,069,999, of which $1,338,335, exclusive of authorization of $71,400 as above stated, is recommended, making a grand total of estimates of $4,313,999 for both continental United States and the insular possessions under the first general division, of which there is recommended $2,786,335, exclusive of authorizations and reappropriations of $282,400.

Under the second general classification there is asked, under subdivision a, new matériel, and so forth, including alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $2,605,000, of which there is recommended $975,000, with an authorization of $300,000; under subdivision b, maintenance, repairs, and so forth, $45,000, all of which is given; under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $130,000, all of which is given, making total estimates of $2,780,000, of which the bill carries $1,150,000, with authorization of $300,000 as above.

Under the third general division there are asked the following items:

Current expenses, ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J.	$56,200
Expenses of officers at the proving ground and compensation of draftsmen	18,700
Board of Ordnance and Fortification	50,000
Total	124,900

All of the estimates under the third general division are recommended except that for the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, which is reduced from $50,000 to $25,000.

Prior to entering into the consideration of the details of the estimates the subcommittee asked the Chief of Staff, Gen. Wood, to be present and to indicate what, in his judgment, were the matters most urgent and that should be given most attention to by the committee and Congress.

He suggested as of the utmost importance the continuation of the work of fortification in the Philippines and in the Hawaiian Islands, and a more liberal appropriation for the purpose of furnishing matériel for the Field Artillery together with ammunition therefor.

Following the line suggested by Gen. Wood the committee in making this bill has provided practically all the money that can be used on the work in the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands prior to the enactment into law of another fortification bill, and they have been liberal in their estimate for the mobile Artillery and for reserve ammunition therefor.

The committee in regard to what might be called continuing work, have adopted a policy that is not new but which several times has been adopted previously, of appropriating only that amount of money that could properly be expended prior to the time when a new supply bill would have been enacted into law. The estimates as to the Philippines and Hawaii were estimates in excess of the amount that could be expended prior to the 4th of March of next year, and therefore the committee reduced such estimates.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman fix the date as the 4th of March?

Mr. SHERLEY. Because the new supply bill will have to become a law by the 4th of March, the time when Congress by law ends, and the moneys carried in this bill are immediately available.

Mr. MANN. It is not pretended then that this bill carries appropriation sufficient to cover the entire fiscal year of 1913?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does as to those items of maintenance or items that necessarily and properly come within a fiscal year for which the appropriations are made up, but where there is work in progress, for instance, certain engineer work being done in the Philippine Islands, when a certain amount of money only can be expended prior to the 4th of March, we saw no reason why Congress should appropriate more money than the department could use prior to the time when moneys would become available in a new bill.

Mr. Chairman, the bill practically carries nothing for new fortifications in continental United States. Frequent statements are made in the press and elsewhere that we are in grave danger in America, due to lack of preparedness in case of war. I desire to state for the benefit of the committee and for the benefit of those timid souls outside who may be misled by such statements that the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts of the United States are not only properly fortified but, broadly speaking, are in many cases overfortified. There are only two places that I know of in continental United States where there will be probably in the future a need for fortifications of any material amount. One is the lower Chesapeake and the other is the harbor at Los Angeles, Cal. As to the latter no estimates were submitted and the committee did not feel at liberty to authorize expenditures in the absence of estimates by the department. As to the mouth of the Chesapeake, speaking for myself only, I am inclined to believe that the time will come when Congress will feel warranted in making provision for the fortifying of that place. I did not feel at this time that the estimate of $150,000 was a proper estimate to be allowed. First, because I do not believe that the price asked for the land is a reasonable one, and, second, because it contemplated the buying of more land than the committee with its present information felt warranted in authorizing. I have had prepared a statement from the War Department as to the amount of land now owned by the Government at seacoast fortifications and the amount of it that is necessary in time of war, and from that statement it appears that something like 9,000 acres could be disposed of by the Government without harm to the seacoast defenses. With that fact staring us in the face I for one am not willing to make appropriations for the purchase of additional land that are not accompanied with provision for the sale of unneeded land.

It was urged strongly by my friend representing the Norfolk district [Mr. HOLLAND] that provision should be made for the purchase of this land, and if the matter were to be determined by his zeal and persistency it would have been carried in this bill, but the committee did not feel at this time warranted in carrying a provision for the purchase of this land at the mouth of the Chesapeake.

In regard to the mobile artillery, an estimate was asked of $1,002,000 for the manufacture and purchase of mobile artillery, and the statement was made by Gen. Crozier that we were more backward in regard to mobile army matériel than in any other direction. The committee therefore allowed what they believed was a liberal sum, though nothing like the sum asked by the department. We allow $300,000, with a provision for contract obligation of $300,000 more, being practically an allowance of $600,000 out of an estimate of $1,000,000. As I have stated, the moneys for the mobile artillery are carried in two supply bills. The fortifications bill carries moneys necessary to supply the matériel for the Regular Army and for a Volunteer Army. The Army appropriation bill carries the moneys deemed necessary for the militia, and the same division is also true of items for ammunition for the Regular and Volunteer Armies and the militia. There are now built or building guns more than sufficient to supply the Regular Army at its full strength in time of war and leave some reserve for the Volunteers. The condition in regard to the militia is very much less promising, but in view of the fact that the Regular Army is the first branch looked to in time of war, the militia second, and the Volunteers third, the committee did not feel warranted in moving as rapidly as the War Department desired in appropriating money for mobile artillery for the Volunteers, because, as stated, we have now more than sufficient for the Regular Army at its full war strength. But we have appropriated a sum in excess of that which has usually been appropriated in the past. As to ammunition, a request was made for $1,500,000 for ammunition for mobile artillery, and the committee allowed the sum of $600,000, which in its judgment is a very liberal provision. We made no cut as to the amount requested for practice ammunition, believing that it was a very shortsighted policy that would undertake to curtail expenses in that regard. The efficiency of seacoast batteries is entirely dependent upon the skill with which the guns are fired, and anything that would curtail the practice in that direction would be, in the judgment of the committee, a very grave mistake.

In maintenance we have allowed whatever was properly necessary; but, as I have said, we have not undertaken to provide for any new armament in the United States, nor have we gone forward as rapidly as might be desirable in the future and with a different condition of the Treasury in bringing up some of the accessories, such as searchlights and modernized fire control.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill contemplates a total cut of over three millions of dollars below the estimates made by the department. Will the gentleman tell us what some of the things desired by the department were that the committee did not think they would put in the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman wants a detailed statement—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not a detailed statement.

Mr. SHERLEY (continuing). He will find it in the report, where each item is set out, showing the estimates for this year, the appropriations for last year, and the recommendations contained in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is powder one of those items?

Mr. SHERLEY. Ammunition, which includes powder, was cut. A large cut from the estimates was made, but the appropriation recommended is a very liberal one in regard to ammunition. There was asked $1,500,000 for reserve ammunition, which, of course, includes powder, for the mobile Artillery. There is recommended $600,000, which is a cut of $900,000. The allowance of the year before was $300,000, so that we are recommending a sum just twice that which was recommended and passed by the last Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has made a study of this matter. I call his attention to the items throughout the bill contemplating "the purchase, manufacture," and so forth. Now, with regard to powder and ammunition that may be used by the Coast Artillery in these fortifications, to what extent does the Government manufacture and to what extent purchase ammunition and supplies outside, including powder?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Government manufactures about 25 per cent of all the powder it uses in all branches of the military and naval service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How is it with regard to other ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is hard to answer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I mean other ammunition than powder.

Mr. SHERLEY. They make varying quantities, according to the particular object. I should not like to say what amount is manufactured of ammunition other than powder; I do not now recall the amount. As to guns, we manufacture in the arsenals nearly all, and of carriages, and so forth, I think we manufacture over two-thirds. I may not be accurate in that statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman estimates that the Government makes about 25 per cent of the powder it uses in this service, and is not able to state as to other ammunition. Could the gentleman tell us to what extent there has been a cut as to the ammunition manufactured by the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. There has been no cut. There has never been in this bill, or in any previous bill, an attempt to segregate what should be manufactured and what purchased, because it is impracticable to do it. The only way that cuts can be shown is in amounts.

Now, in point of fact, it is not expected there will be any less work done in any of the Government plants by virtue of any cuts made in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With a view of continuing the service and being prepared for the future, the department did estimate for more ammunition and more powder than is being allowed in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. They, in one instance, did estimate for $1,500,000 and got $600,000, a difference of $900,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could the gentleman indicate the proportion of the saving of $3,000,000 that would involve ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not catch what the gentleman asked.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The committee proposes to save $3,000,000 under the estimates of the department for supplies for the incoming year. Can the gentleman indicate to what extent ammunition will be involved in that $3,000,000 of saving? I am including ammunition and powder. How much of a cut will there be so far as the Government manufacture of those commodities is concerned? If the gentleman can not answer directly—

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that cut is the only one—the $900,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nine hundred thousand dollars will be about the limit of the cut on ammunition and powder?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Thank you.

Mr. DONOHUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DONOHUE. A Member of this House made a statement, or is quoted as having made a statement, that this cut will materially affect the employees in the arsenals. Is that so?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not so. There is no intention here to in any way lessen the amount of work that shall be done by the Government itself.

But if we had allowed the total estimates received, it would have forced the Government to put a larger amount of work outside and to do a less per cent of it itself, and inasmuch as the Government is doing all the work it does cheaper than it can be done at the establishments of private concerns, we did not feel called upon unduly to force it to place a larger proportion of the work outside.

Mr. DONOHUE. And these changes will not affect injuriously the employees of the arsenal?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know what may be the policy of the Government as to the arsenals. In my judgment, there is nothing in this bill, however, that in any way warrants the cutting down of the force at the arsenals.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask, if there is a reduction of $900,000 in the amount of ammunition to be provided for the forthcoming year, whether it would not affect to that extent the employees of the arsenals in the Government service who have heretofore manufactured that $900,000 worth of ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would in the event the gentleman's question was accurate, but it being inaccurate I answer "No." It so happens that they have never done all the work before, and the amount we are appropriating now is more than sufficient to give as much employment, if not more, than has been given by the Government in its arsenals for this kind of work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that there will be $900,000 less of ammunition manufactured at the Government arsenals than has been provided for the present year?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a fact that they asked for $1,500,000 and we gave them $600,000, thus reducing the estimate $900,000. But it is not a fact that that $900,000 cut lessens by that sum the amount of work to be done as compared with work heretofore done at the arsenals. It simply means that if we had given them $1,500,000 they would have to do more work outside than ever before.

Now, I would like to ask whether the gentleman is asking his question with the idea of having the work done inside of the Government arsenals or outside?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know what the policy of the committee was as to having this work done, whether in the Government arsenals or outside; whether it was the policy, as indicated in the bill, to have as much work as possible done outside and not to have as much done in the Government arsenals.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman says "as indicated in the bill." There is nothing in the bill that indicates anything approaching that, and there is no desire on the part of the committee or any member of the committee to lessen the amount of work that the Government does itself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I call the attention of the gentleman to the paragraphs on page 5, beginning with line 6, "for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon," and so forth, and on line 11, "for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon," and so forth, and on line 16, "for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice," and so forth, and on line 25, "for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for mounted, field, and seige artillery practice." All of this would indicate that there are two ways of procuring ammunition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course I am not responsible for the gentleman's lack of familiarity with the previous bills, but if the gentleman knew about those previous bills he would know this to be the exact language that has always been carried in every one of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it is a fact that the Government has two ways of providing supplies of ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and it ought to have two ways.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ascertain whether less work would be done at the arsenals than heretofore under the new system which seems to have been adopted in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble with the gentleman is that he is hunting for something that he can not find. There is no "new system." The plan now followed is the plan heretofore followed. There is no intention in any way to interfere with the work now being done by the Government in its own arsenals. I can not make a statement more comprehensive than that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I realize that the committee has reported that it proposes to expend $3,000,000 less next year than the department asked for.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and if the gentleman had familiarity with the previous bills he would know that the estimates were cut much more than $3,000,000 in some previous years. The fact that you cut estimates is not the determination of a policy, except as it indicates a desire not to progress as rapidly as we would with larger appropriations.

Mr. KONIG. Is it not true that the recommendations of the committee in its proposition this year are larger than were granted in the last Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. No, sir. The recommendations in this bill are a million dollars less than were carried in the bill a year ago. The recommendations for ammunition are larger than the amount carried in the bill last year.

Mr. KONIG. Then you have a million dollars less than was appropriated by the last Congress. Why would not that $1,000,000 affect the people engaged in the manufacture of powder in the Government arsenals?

Mr. SHERLEY. I tried to make myself clear. The reason is simply because it is impossible for the Government to manufacture in its arsenals or powder factories all of the ammunition, including powder, that it uses, and there has always been a certain amount expended outside. If we allowed the full sum that they asked, the result would be to have more expended outside than heretofore.

Mr. RAUCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAUCH. Is it not true that on page 5 of the bill the items to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] alluded in his question, for the purchase, manufacture, and testing of ammunition, that those appropriations can be utilized by the department in the carrying on of work in the arsenals?

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely. There is no limitation upon the amount that shall be expended outside or in the arsenals except the capacity of the arsenals themselves and the determination of the officers in charge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is to say, the discretion is left with the department to buy or to manufacture as it sees fit.

Mr. SHERLEY. That has always been the rule. That is not a new proposition. It has always been so.

I will say to the gentleman that this is my idea of what should be the policy of the Government as to work of this kind being done by the Government and being done outside. I believe that, owing to the unusual skill and efficiency of one man—Gen. Crozier, of the Bureau of Ordnance—we are making a saving in the manufacture of guns and carriages by the Government over what it would cost to purchase them outside; that is sufficiently large to make it desirable that we should do the major portion of the work by the Government itself; but I do not consider it advisable to do all the work in that way, and the reason for that is twofold. First, you would have no means by which you could test the cost of the work the Government is doing, whether it was economical or not, unless by comparison with what it cost outside. Secondly, you would put out of availability all the private concerns that now exist which are capable of doing this work and are actually doing it, who could be called upon, and of necessity would have to be called upon in time of war or of great need. That applies not only to guns and carriages, but, broadly speaking, it applies also to powder.

Mr. PEPPER. Right at that point I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I think I heard the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] express practically the same opinion upon another bill. I am desirous of having the gentleman state if he has in mind any proportion that he would recommend as the proportion that the Government should purchase, and the proportion that the Government should manufacture, of guns, ammunition, and so forth?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I can answer that question. My own judgment is that we ought to make more powder than we have been making. My own judgment is that we ought to run the arsenals to their full capacity, using the word "full" in the sense of ordinary capacity. I do not believe we ought to run them day and night in order to increase their output.

Mr. PEPPER. Does not the gentleman believe that the reason for purchasing of outside manufacturers that he has given, in order that they may be prepared to furnish these articles, would depend a good deal on the price; that is, the amount you purchase? For instance, if the difference is a great deal, it is paying a pretty high bonus to private manufacturers for maintaining a plant where the difference is such as to amount to quite a sum in the large expenditure we are making.

Mr. SHERLEY. Frankly, I say to the gentleman that the difference in cost as shown by the Government and by outside purchase strikes me in some cases as being rather extreme, and while much of it is due to the splendid efficiency of Gen. Crozier, still it would indicate that we are paying rather a large price to private manufacturers. But this committee was without the necessary ability to determine these questions. It can not have the information or the technical knowledge to enable it to determine how proper a contract for work of this sort may be. We have no information by which we can judge whether a contract is reasonable or unreasonable, and no other committee of this House could have the means of determining that matter. We are necessarily dependent on the efficiency and knowledge of the men who let the contract and who spend this money.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course, we might be partially responsible for the policy.

Mr. SHERLEY. We would be responsible to the extent that we would have the power to indicate how much of the work should be done by the Government itself. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 50 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman partly developed by the colloquy that has already taken place. I notice the bill carries a smaller sum in total than has been carried for a number of years. The gentleman has explained that in part by stating that as to a portion of the appropriation it was only intended to go up to the 4th of March. I take it that the gentleman and I would agree on the proposition that it is not desirable to make a large appropriation one year, a small appropriation the next year, and a large appropriation the ensuing year for work of that character. Is the gentleman satisfied that the amounts carried in this bill are sufficient to carry the work along, and that similar amounts will be sufficient in ensuing years to carry out the necessary projects?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's question raises several considerations. As to the Philippines and Hawaiian Islands we have practically given what was asked, with the statement previously made that the moneys recommended for appropriation are such moneys as they can expend prior to the 4th of March next year. That is not a new policy. The same thing was done in bills reported by this committee several years ago.

As to continental United States, we have done nothing in the way of new ordnance and very little beyond maintenance. Now, the reason for that is this: The whole science of seacoast defense is not only a progressive one but a rapidly progressive one. It was stated before the committee, and I believe it to be true, that in many cases we are overfortified, due sometimes to mistakes in the original plans, but more frequently to the increased draft of vessels, making it impracticable, if not impossible, to attack some fortifications by any battleship or anything larger than what would now be called a small cruiser, and due also to the fact that the increased range of guns and the efficiency in shooting is such as to have given us overfortification at many places.

Now, that being true, with the situation we are in to-day, where we are short, very greatly short, of men that would be necessary to man the fortifications of the United States, it did not seem wise to the committee to hasten in any way the work of further fortifying continental United States.

Now, there are quite a number of things in the nature of accessories that ought to be provided in the course of time. For instance, much will be found in the hearings in regard to a permanent system of fire control. There is not a fortification today that has not now a system of fire control that, in my judgment, would be efficient in time of war. It is not a standard system, in that some of the wires are not so placed underground as to be free from any danger of the enemy's fire, and it is not modern in the sense that it is up to date, although it is modern in the sense that it is only a few years old.

The committee did not feel warranted in going ahead with work for standardizing the fire control at this time. I will say frankly to the gentleman that there has been no cut made of a serious nature or in the elimination of items that was not made after ascertainment that it would not in any sense imperil the defense of the country.

It would have been possible for this committee to have gone more rapidly, but the history of this bill, the history of fortification schemes has been such as to hardly warrant Congress in going very rapidly. For instance, as to the mouth of Chesapeake, it was urged some years ago with great fervor that we ought to build an artificial island there, the cost of which no man knew. Nothing but the determination of the Committee on Appropriations not to authorize that expenditure on the loose information presented saved the Government from a waste of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 in the building of that artificial island that is now acknowledged by the War Department to be unnecessary, made unnecessary, perhaps, by the very causes I spoke of a few moments ago. But with this rapid change of conditions we did not feel warranted in going forward at any faster rate than we have gone. There is another thing that is a little bit discouraging to the committee dealing with a bill of this kind, for while it speaks somewhat for the attention and the alertness of those gentlemen of the Army who are primarily concerned with this work, yet we find that we no sooner get to a point where it looks as if a matter was about to be ended and wiped off the books but what there comes a modification of the project or an enlargement of it that makes continued appropriations necessary. As to all of those things that the department stated were in any sense imperative, the committee has been liberal. As to those matters which were simply a question of how fast we should progress, the committee has taken the conservative course, and a course which we believe will be justified upon the examination of the items as they are reached in the bill.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the statement of my colleague, and especially that portion of it that relates to the Coast Artillery posts. I have seen it stated recently by officers of certain divisions of the War Department that Chesapeake Bay is considered one of the most pivotal and strategic points on the Atlantic coast and that the fortification of it has been very much urged by them. In view of the statement made by my colleague that continental United States is well fortified and overfortified, I would like to know, if he cares to express an opinion, why out of these vast sums of money that have been used for the purpose of fortifying the coast some of that money has not been used at this strategic and pivotal point which now they think needs to be fortified?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, it is only fair to say on behalf of the War Department that for several years past they have urged appropriations for the fortification of the mouth of the Chesapeake and Congress has refused to authorize them, so that the failure for that number of years has been the failure of Congress, and as a member of the fortifications committee for five years past I am willing to share part of that responsibility. This is the situation as to the Chesapeake. It is urged, and seriously urged, by those gentlemen—who, of course, have a technical skill and knowledge that makes a layman slow to question what they propose—that assuming control of the sea it would be possible to land a large army at the lower part of the Chesapeake and to march on to Washington, as was done a hundred years ago.

Mr. HELM. Right in that connection, may I ask the gentleman if Fortress Monroe would be an effective impediment to that march or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. The idea is that instead of coming up the Chesapeake and undertaking to engage Fortress Monroe and there landing, that there is a sufficient harbor to permit the landing of troops at the mouth of the Chesapeake way beyond the range of the guns of Fortress Monroe.

Mr. HELM. That is where I want to get in. Fortress Monroe is, I believe, 12 miles from the mouth of the bay—

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not state.

Mr. HELM. And I can not understand the wisdom and the reason for expending the sums of money that they have expended on Fortress Monroe when if the fort had been constructed at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay it would be of far greater service.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, there are several reasons. In the first place it is sometimes desirable that there should be a double defense—an outer and an inner defense. In the second place it is only fair to say fortifications in many places were made at a time when the conditions of warfare were very different from what they are now, conditions such as I spoke of, the draft of vessels and the range of guns. It was not believed until very recently that it was possible to fortify, except by floating batteries, the mouth of the Chesapeake and that was recommended in the Endicott scheme. The entrance is very wide in Chesapeake Bay. Then, when Japan began to build artificial islands that idea was adopted here, that we should build an artificial island. Congress refused to authorize the project. In the meantime the range of guns have so increased and the drafts of vessels have so increased, which therefore narrows the channel that they could use, as to make it possible in the view of Army officers to fortify the two shores so as to close that entrance. Now, it is proposed to guard the entrance by guns and mortars on the Virginia side only—

Mr. HELM. I will ask the gentleman this question, Does the gentleman think there has been more or less of a haphazard scheme or plan manifested by the department in the location and construction of some of these Artillery posts?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not be willing to go quite that far. I think this is true, that there have been quite a number of mistakes made.

Mr. HELM. They have abandoned this island proposition, have they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir. If the gentleman will permit, I think there are conditions now that are obsolete; that there are forts that could be abandoned and armaments removed, and, in some instances, that has been done. I think in one instance, as far as I can understand—and I am speaking as a layman—it had been possible to fortify Narragansett with one fortification instead of five. But some of those mistakes that are apparent to us now, looking backward, could not be apparent to those at that time, looking forward.

Mr. HELM. Is it not also true that the Coast Artillery defense is divided into districts, and then into posts, and then into batteries?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman fully as to that. I have not undertaken to familiarize myself particularly with that phase of the matter. The posts are largely designated from the standpoint of defense as main and subposts, according to the amount of armament they contain.

Mr. HELM. Is it not also true that the troops at these Artillery posts are scattered to a more or less extent among the different divisions of the district instead of quartering them along the idea of the concentration of the mobile army posts?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this is unquestionably true that there are more garrison posts in connection with seacoast fortifications than are necessary. But it is also true that there is not any surplus of officers or of men in the Coast Artillery.

Mr. HELM. Well, the point I am getting at is this: Instead of concentrating the men, as the scheme or plan is in the mobile army posts and keeping them all in as few posts as possible, that they are scattered among these different posts or batteries; and could not any economy be effected by a more complete concentration of the troops?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not so sure that there could be any special economy in the concentration of the Artillery. There could be an economy effected in disposing of a lot of land and of barracks and quarters at some places where they are not needed.

Mr. HELM. Is it not a fact that there are two or three, if not several, posts that, by reason of their isolation, would be ineffective in defense, and should be abandoned?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I can answer that.

Mr. HELM. Is there not one in Alabama, off by itself and entirely helpless, and could give no account of itself at all in an attack by a fleet?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there are several posts that, perhaps, are not now needed, and it was because of that belief that the committee was not willing to enter upon a project for buying additional land for a large garrisoned post at the mouth of the Chesapeake until we had more information as to the general scheme.

Mr. HELM. As I understand it, all these artillery posts ought to be able to take care of themselves against an attack by a fleet before a landing of troops is effected, and a post that could not do that is of no value.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably, the idea of a land defense is that it shall be able to repel any probable sea force that may come against it. And I want to say in that connection that in my judgment the test of a proper defense is going to be the fact that it is never called into action. Whenever you have properly fortified a place, that moment the probability of its being attacked by sea almost passes away. During the Japanese-Russian War the Japanese early discovered that they could not take Port Arthur from the sea, because of its being strongly fortified, so they gave up that attack and undertook a slower, but what in the end proved a successful attack by land.

Mr. HELM. That justifies my statement that no artillery post should be maintained that is not capable of defending itself.

Mr. SHERLEY. From the sea?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should say, generally, that that was true.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] permit me to ask his colleague [Mr. HELM] one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not true that the view you are taking now is absolutely contrary to the judgment of Gen. Wood in that respect? Does not he put it upon the ground—

Mr. HELM. He and I may differ from one another. I do not pose as an Army expert at all, but I am trying to exercise just a little modern common sense.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman this further question—

Mr. HELM. And common sense tells me that it is useless and foolish to go out and put up a coast defense that can not give a good account of itself and can not take care of itself against an attacking fleet.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I was going to ask the gentleman if it was not true that Gen. Wood expressed an entirely different view from that of the gentleman from Kentucky in that respect?

Mr. HELM. What does the gentleman understand Gen. Wood to say?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I understood him to say that it is impossible to have a fortification at all times in shape to defend itself, but that it is absolutely necessary to have these interior garrisons in such condition that in case of attack they can be thrown into the forts of the seacoast defenses.

Mr. HELM. I have been unfortunate in my statement if the gentleman does not understand me. My statement is that a Coast Artillery post, with guns and equipment, ought to be able to take care of itself as a post; that it ought to have the equipment and the strength necessary, so that when it is properly manned it can give a good account of itself and defend itself and repel the attack of any invading fleet before any landing of troops has been effected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to continue my speech. If the gentleman desires to ask me a question, I will be glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Then I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] this question: If it is not true that Gen. Wood's report upon this matter is to the effect that one of these coast garrisons would be absolutely unable to defend itself against an attack from the sea because the landing forces would be so far away that the garrison would have no effect upon the vessels, and therefore the troops of the enemy could come in behind and it would be necessary for the Army to be there to defend it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I should say: No; I do not believe that Gen. Wood ever said anything of the kind. What seems to me to be confusing the gentleman is that he is failing to consider the difference in the ability of a seacoast fortification to withstand an attack from the sea and an attack from the land.

Now, it is true of all modern fortifications that while they are supposed to be protected from an attack by sea by virtue of the disappearing guns and the protection that is afforded by the land embankments, they are nevertheless exposed from the rear. If the gentleman has ever seen a modern seacoast fortification he will realize that from the rear they are absolutely exposed. Now this is true: Assuming that a force should land and make an attack upon the fortification from the rear, it is not expected that the Seacoast Artillery shall be relied on to defend from the attack from the land side, but that defense is a problem for the mobile Army and not for the Seacoast Artillery, which presumably will be engaged in repelling at the same time a sea attack.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is just the point I was making. I want to state to the gentleman that Gen. Wood says there never will be an attack made directly upon the forts from the sea side, but that it will always be by a detour movement in the rear, and therefore the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] is making the point that there should be an abandonment of these interior garrisons, the very thing that Gen. Wood says is necessary in order to protect the fort from attack.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman permit me just a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; go ahead.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman from Colorado is missing the mark entirely. The gentleman is discussing a proposition after the enemy's fleet has effected a landing. I am talking about an attack made by the fleet without any force having landed to attack the fort.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is hypothetical; because there will be no attack made upon the fort from the sea.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to delay much longer the committee. In the consideration of the bill by items I shall be glad to give to anyone seeking it such information as I possess touching any matter, and shall endeavor in particular to afford information touching fortifications in the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands. Broadly speaking, the items carried in the bill practically provide for all present contemplated fortifications in Hawaii, and the work should be completed there within two years. In the Philippines about $2,000,000, including amounts carried in this bill, is needed to complete the work, and it also should be completed in a little over two years, perhaps earlier. In the belief that proper provision has been made for carrying on the work of coast defense here in continental United States and in our insular possessions, as chairman of the committee on fortifications I submit the bill to the consideration of this Committee of the Whole House. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall not further detain the committee. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some comments relative to the report of the National Monetary Commission. Mr. McCabe, of Columbus, Ohio, addressed the Middle Group of the Tennessee Bankers' Association, and I wish to insert in the RECORD his remarks, which I regard as clear and elucidating and worthy of careful consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. McCabe stated in part:

It is folly to say that the improved, modern, and scientific monetary methods of other commercial nations can not be adopted here without also creating the monopolistic central bank.

The National Reserve Association is simply an organization for the coordination and cooperation of all the banks and trust companies of the United States for definite, specific purposes. It will be limited and restricted to the performance of essential duties which neither the Government nor our isolated banks severally can now perform. It will not be a gigantic bank of unlimited and far-reaching powers as are the central banks of Europe.

NATURAL OUTGROWTH.

The reserve association is the natural outgrowth of American business life. It is the evolution and an amplification on a national scale of that peculiar American institution known in all our cities as the clearing house association. It will be the national cooperative association of the banks and trust companies of the United States even as the clearing houses are now the cooperative associations of the banks for the cities of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, and other places. The American clearing house, rather than the European central bank, is the model for the creation of the National Reserve Association. There are no political objections to the American clearing houses and likewise there can be no valid political objections to the National Reserve Association. This organization is simon-pure American. There is nothing like it in the world. It is purely a republican, representative system of federated banks, even as our Government is a federation of States. If we are satisfied with the wisdom of our plan of government, as we are after more than 100 years of experience, then we should set the seal of our approval upon this proposed plan of bank organization.

All our banking institutions will continue as they are at present. No revolutionary changes in their character and functions are contemplated. They will continue to do business as separate units, but they will not be isolated as heretofore. They will continue to be independent, but not hostile, as oftentimes they have been. They will continue to compete with each other, but henceforth they will also cooperate to sustain the credit of each other, of the community, and of the Nation. They will perform the same daily functions they now perform, but by organization among themselves into the National Reserve Association, each bank, whether it be in Maine, Texas, New York, or Arizona, will be strengthened and fortified to render greater service to the people of its vicinity than it heretofore has been able to do.

SAME COMPETITION.

There will be the same vigorous competition for business among the banks as exists to-day, but in addition to this there will be hearty cooperation among them through the reserve association to sustain uniformly the credit of the Nation in all sections and at all times. It will be an organization for cooperation and not a capitalistic consolidation for monopoly. It will be cooperation for the public welfare and not monopoly for the profit of a few.

By the creation of the National Reserve Association our present disjointed and invertebrate system would be transformed into an articulate body having an intelligent head to think and act for the welfare of banks and public alike. The reserve association would be the executive head of a national league of competing banks. It would bring order, system, and concert of action among them; it would preside over all and stand behind each. It would be a neutral, impersonal power which would neither seek to take advantage of the banks, nor would it permit them to take advantage of the people, but would strengthen and assist them to carry the burdens of commerce for which they are created. It would be a bank of banks, conducted without profit to its stockholders beyond fair interest on capital invested—wholly for the welfare of the American people.

ASSOCIATION CONTROL.

By a unique method of unit voting control of the reserve association will always be vested in the smaller banks of the country located outside the great financial centers. Although New York possesses 30 per cent of the banking capital of the Nation, yet it would have less than 10 per cent of the total representation in the reserve association. The South and far West, having only 23 per cent of the banking capital, would have 47 per cent of representation. There will be only three branches of the reserve association located in New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, where half the banking capital of the Nation is located. Four branches will be located in the South, four in the Middle West, and four in the far West. It is thus provided that the planters of the South, the grangers of the West, and the wonderful people of the Pacific coast shall have banking facilities equal if not superior to those of the people of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. The preponderating power of the smaller banks can neither be transferred by them nor can it be wrested from them. No bank can sell or dispose of its stock in the reserve association to any person or corporation, except to the reserve association itself, and then only when the bank ceases to be a member of the association or reduces its capital. Nor can its stock be voted by proxy. These provisions render it well-nigh impossible for any group of men, even though they should be backed by the wealth of Golconda, to gain control of or manage the reserve association for selfish purposes. Inasmuch as the maximum dividends which the banks shall receive on their stock in the reserve association can never exceed 5 per cent, and as all further profits shall go to the Government after a 20 per cent surplus has been accumulated, there would be no inducement for the great financial interests to seize control of the association. But what would they do with it even though they had it? They would have to run it without profit under the daily surveillance and constant supervision of Government officials; and the governor of the association, who would be appointed by the President of the United States, would have the veto on all their acts. It will be impossible to conduct the association for the profit of the banks or a select group of men. The banks, however, will furnish the capital at 5 per cent per annum for an institution which can not be more advantageous to them than it will be to the people. Less than half of the directors of the association will be bankers; the majority of the directors will be farmers, manufacturers, business men, and public officials. It is essential in the last degree that the reserve association shall be independent and high above the selfish interests of men and be conducted for the welfare of all the people of the Nation, and this is amply guaranteed by the safeguards thrown around its organization. It will be impossible to run it as a money-making institution. Primarily and ultimately it must be a great national monetary institution for the regulation and control of our monetary affairs, regardless of profits.

NOT IN COMPETITION.

As the reserve association is forbidden to receive deposits from or to discount directly for the general public, it can neither compete with our banks for business nor extend favors to individuals. It would arouse neither the envy nor animosity of the bankers or the people. As it can not "go out and get business," and as the bulk of its profits must go to the Government, it can not become a competitor of other banks and a huge money monopoly; and as it can not deal with individuals, it can not, even if it would, corrupt public officials.

It does seem that human ingenuity has finally succeeded in creating an organization which will be far removed beyond the reach of the grasping hands of the money power and which will also be immune to the sinister and baneful influence of politics.

We will have a supreme organization, democratic in principle and republican in form, which will safeguard the monetary interests of all, even as the civil rights of all are now impartially protected by the United States Supreme Court. Such an institution would not be repugnant to the democratic instincts even of Gen. Jackson. The National Monetary Commission has laid deep and broad the foundations of a democratic banking system, which, if put in force, will eliminate the fear of panics from the American mind, safeguard the daily business of life, prevent the universal sudden discharge of men dependent on daily wages, and which will also enhance, extend, and make preeminent the financial power of the foremost Nation on earth. The reserve association will be an exclusively commercial institution, like the great banks of Europe, having no connection with the stock markets, or the financing of railways, mines, or industrial enterprises. Its distinct aim will be to encourage commercial loans representing an exchange of goods and to discourage loans representing stock transactions.

UNHOLY ALLIANCE.

The reserve association will sever forever the tie which now binds American commerce in its unholy alliance with Wall Street. The bulls and bears would no longer terrorize legitimate business, as they now do. They could blow up Wall Street as often as they pleased, but the country would not feel the shock. The President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury would never again be required, as they have in the past, to humbly supplicate the magnates of Wall Street to save this mighty Nation of mighty people from financial ruin.

The reserve association will emancipate our business men, farmers, and manufacturers from the bondage and thralldom of the New York Stock Exchange. Every prudent man can then mind his own business without watching the ticker to see what is apt to befall him. What have always been to us the portentous operations of the bulls and bears will become the amusing antics of actors in a passing show.

The plan of the National Reserve Association may not be perfect, nor is any claim made for its perfection, but it is as near perfect as human experience and foresight can make it. We know it is republican in form, because it will be fashioned like our Government. We know it is democratic in spirit, because its benefits will be for all the people and not for the few. We know it is correct in principle, because it squares with reason. We know its operations will be efficient and safe, because of the experience of other nations. No one of comprehensive mind who has carefully studied the plan has been known to condemn its basic principles. Opposition comes only from those who will not inform themselves or from those whose mental processes are deranged by personal animosities, petty fears, and antiquated prejudices.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAUCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 18794. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General to deliver to the governor of New Mexico, for the use of the State, certain furniture and furnishings, law books, and typewriters.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4551) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a dam across the Savannah River, at or near the mouth of Stevens Creek, between the counties of Edgefield, S. C., and Columbia, Ga.," approved August 5, 1909, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. MARTIN of Virginia as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

THE RECALL OF JUDGES.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some remarks on the subject of the recall of judges and court decisions, but not wishing to take up the time of the committee I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Former President Roosevelt's advocacy of the recall of judges and court decisions has made this proposition a live political issue, especially in view of his announced candidacy for the Presidency. One of the latest expressions from a member of a court on this topic was an address delivered before the New York County Lawyers' Association at its annual banquet February 17 by Associate Justice Stafford, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Justice Stafford said, in part:

"We have built our institutions on the proposition that the people have a right to rule. Their will is made known through the suffrage. And when opinions differ, as they usually do, the majority must govern. But that is not the whole of the proposition. If it were, there would be no safeguard whatever for the rights of the minority. The majority might appropriate their property. It might reduce them to slavery. It might even take away their lives. The proposition takes for granted, then, certain guaranties for the protection of the minority. And what are these? They are those elementary rights which no majority, however large, may ever violate. They have been recognized in constitutions and bills of rights, but they were not created by them. They inhere in free government itself, for human freedom is impossible without them. Among these rights there is none more important than this, that no citizen shall be deprived of his liberty or property except by the judgment of the law, and after a trial before an independent and impartial tribunal. We have now come to the keystone of the arch. It is this: The majority of the legal voters can not constitute itself this tribunal.

"If it can, it still holds the property and lives of the minority in its hands, subject to its mere will and pleasure, for there is no one who can call it to account.

"The cases that may come before the tribunal are of two classes: First, those between individuals merely; second, those in which one of the parties is, in fact if not in name, the people themselves, or the popular majority. By far the most important and most trying cases will be those of the second class, in which it is contended that some fundamental right of the individual or the minority is being violated. The violation will be attempted under the form of law, and thus the real party upon one side is the people, or the popular majority, whose will has here found expression in the form of law. In such cases how is the independence and impartiality of the tribunal to be secured? How except by removing it as far as possible from dictation by either party? Let it be remembered that the tribunal, the court, has been created and its members chosen by one of the parties to the controversy, namely, the people. Clearly, then, the only security the other party can have is this: That the tribunal, once it is created and its members chosen, shall be permitted to decide without further interference. If it is to be checked and overawed by one of the parties; if the moment it decides the case against that party its power is to be taken from it and bestowed upon others, then it is the party that decides the case, not the tribunal.

SETS FORTH AN EXAMPLE.

"Let us inquire whether this reasoning fits the facts of the present time. Take but one example: A popular majority, through the legislature elected by it, or more directly by the initiative and referendum, enacts a statute requiring railroads to carry passengers for 1 cent a mile. A test case comes before the court. The railroad insists that the act robs it of its property, and the court so holds. Thereupon the same popular majority votes the judges out of office and elects to fill their places judges who will reverse the decision. Has not the popular majority constituted itself the court? May a man be the judge in his own case?

"Let us test the measure by another fundamental principle. A despot makes the law and also decides whether the particular case comes within the law. Or he may just as well dispense with the law, since no one can question his decision that the case comes within it. On the other hand, in a free government one body makes the law, the general rule, while another body decides whether the particular case falls within the rule. Thus the citizen is protected. We call it keeping the legislative and judicial departments separate. In a despotism they are united. In a free government they are separate. Now, if the popular majority not only makes the law but also decides whether a given case falls within it, then the legislative and judicial powers are united in the same body and the government ceases to be free and becomes a despotism.

"If it be objected that the argument proves too much, since by this reasoning the rule should be once a judge always a judge, my answer is twofold: First, I hold with Hamilton that the judicial tenure ought to be nothing less than during good behavior; second, if the judges are to be elected for limited terms, those terms should be at least of such a length that the judge's reelection should not depend upon his decision of some particular case or question, but upon his general worthiness to be a judge.

"The argument for the recall assumes that judges are only agents of the majority, and easily reaches the conclusion that when the agent fails to satisfy his principal he may rightly be recalled. The fallacy in the argument is in the assumption that the judge is an agent. He is not an agent in any proper sense of that word. He is not the agent of either party to a cause. He is not even the agent of both parties. If his duty were to trade and compromise between them, he might be considered the agent of both. But that is not his duty. His duty is to decide; it is not for him to please, nor to seek to please, either party. It is for him to decide the question between them as law and justice require.

WHY NOT BE INSTRUCTED?

"If judicial opinions are to be reviewed at popular elections, why should not judges be instructed beforehand how to decide questions that are certain to arise? They would be saved the possibility of making a mistake. If that is not to be done, the greatest jurist will be the one who shows himself most expert and nimble in keeping on the side of the majority.

"When the King asked Lord Coke how he would decide a certain question if it came before him, he replied, 'When that case arises I will decide it as shall befit a judge.' History has recorded the answer with a proud smile. When democracy asks that question of her judges shall they answer with less dignity and self-respect than the chief justice of the Stuarts? When Prince Hal struck the lord chief justice on the bench and went to jail for it, the King shed happy tears that he had a judge who dared administer the law even to the heir apparent, and that he had a son who in his sober second thought accepted the judgment of the law. Has free America in the twentieth century less reverence for law than the house of Lancaster had 500 years ago? In one respect the Roman tribunes performed for the Roman people the office that our judges do for us—they had the power to veto laws that struck at fundamental rights. You remember that when the plebs were advised to do away with tribunes by those whose purpose had been thwarted by them, the tribunes recalled the people to their senses with a fable. Once upon a time, they said, the wolves advised the sheep to get rid of their watchdogs, because they interfered with the sheep going where they pleased and were really the only obstacle to a perfect understanding between the forest and the fold. When, afterwards, the people did give up their tribunes they lost their liberty, and they never regained it till they got them back. Your watchdog may annoy the sheep when they wish to go astray, he may even nip one of them now and then as he tries to bring them back, but let the flock think twice before they exchange the watchdog for the wolf.

"The proposal to recall judges for unpopular decisions is nothing less than a proposal to abolish courts. To abolish courts is to abolish freedom. However innocent the motives of those who propose the measure, no deadlier blow was ever aimed at the heart of human liberty than this. The people have only to understand it to reject it. They are not ready to throw away the fruits of their long labors and unnumbered battles, labors endured and battles waged for this very thing, that under the broad shield of a sacred and inviolable justice the weakest or most hated might rest secure in their liberty, their property, their lives. They will discover the tyrant under this flattering disguise. And in the end they will consign to obloquy the names of those who would have tempted them to their destruction."

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, before this House disposes of all the money it has at its command, I wish briefly to call attention to a bill that I have introduced for the purpose of asking Federal aid and supervision in the construction of highways. [Applause.]

The improvement of country roads is the most important question before the American Congress. In all else our Nation's progress has been unusual. We are the richest manufacturing people in the world. The products of our factories exceed those of all Europe. Our farms produce more food products than those of any other country and more cotton than all the world besides. We furnish more of the world's foods and clothing than any other country. Our mines supply 52 per cent of the world's mineral products. We have greater wealth collectively and per capita than any other nation. We have more banks and banking capital than any of them. The world's financial circulation now receives its heart throbs from New York City. Uncle Sam holds his finger on the world's financial and industrial pulse. We have more miles of railway than any other country and better equipped facilities for rail transportation. We surpass all other countries in foreign and internal commerce. We are the wealthiest, the most intelligent, and progressive people on earth, and yet we have the poorest roads of any civilized country in the world. Ninety-two per cent of our country roads are impassable during a part of every year and are poor most of the year. More freight is handled over these roads than over the railroads. It is impossible to estimate the annual loss suffered by our people on account of hauling and traveling over these miserable roads. If the United States is to maintain her supremacy in commerce she must look to the cost of initial and articulating transportation as well as public transportation. We can not maintain our prominence without developing the veins as well as the arteries of commerce. Commerce is the measure of the Nation's prowess and facilities of transportation the index of commercial progress. The United States has surpassed all of the nations of the world in facilities for public transportation. We have the best-constructed, best-equipped, and best-operated railroads in the world, but have the poorest facilities for initial transportation. This is not because we do not spend money enough upon our highways, but because of our system of handling road construction. We spend more than $100,000,000 a year in the local construction of highways, but we do not get results because our system is defective.

The American colonists, when they came to this country, brought with them the local or parish system of England, and we still adhere to it, though England herself has abandoned it. A careful study of the history of road building in Germany, England, France, Austria, Russia, and Switzerland will show that all of them first tried the local or parish system of building and repairing highways, and it will further show that so long as that system was pursued they had poor roads. None of them made any real progress toward good roads until they combined their local system with national aid and supervision. It seems a little strange that the United States, which is so progressive in everything else, should still cling to the system of highway construction and repair that has been abandoned by practically every civilized country in the world. If the United States expects to keep abreast the world's civilization, she must at once begin and prosecute a national system of road construction. [Applause.]

The first question that suggests itself to every legislator in approaching this subject is, Has the National Government constitutional authority and power to expend its revenues in the construction of roads within the States? Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution provides:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

The power to "provide for the common defense" would clothe Congress with sufficient power to construct and maintain highways. No one thing adds so much to the effective strength of an army as facilities for mobilization. The clause providing for the "general welfare" would also be ample to clothe Congress with this power. It is under this clause of the Constitution that Congress has found power to give its money, property, and credit to the building of railroads. If it has power to assist in the building of railroads for private use, it certainly would have power to assist in the building of highways for public use. But it is not necessary to rely upon the implied powers of the Constitution. Paragraph 7 of said section 8, Article I, expressly provides that Congress shall have power

"to establish post offices and post roads." This necessarily gives the power to erect and construct post offices and post roads. It is under this clause that the Federal Government erects its post-office buildings, and the same clause must necessarily give to the Federal Government the right to construct post roads. President Monroe, on May 4, 1802, in a message to Congress, said that—in whatever sense the term "establish" is applied to post offices, it must be applied in the same sense to post roads.

In 1818 the House of Representatives declared its authority under this article of the Constitution as follows:

Resolved, That Congress has power under the Constitution to appropriate money for the construction of post roads.

President Madison, in his message to Congress, said:

I particularly invite the attention of Congress to the expediency of exercising the existing powers * * * in order to effectuate a comprehensive system of roads * * * such as will have the effect of drawing more closely together every part of our country, by promoting intercourse and improvements, and by increasing the share of every part in the common stock of national prosperity.

Henry Clay, in 1818, said:

Of all the modes in which a government can employ its surplus revenue none is more permanently beneficial than that of internal improvement. Fixed to the soil, it becomes a durable part of the land itself, diffusing comfort and activity and animation on all sides. The first direct effect is on the agricultural community into whose pockets comes the difference in the expense of transportation between the good and bad ways. Thus, if the price of transporting a barrel of flour by the erection of the Cumberland Turnpike should be lessened $2, the producer of that article would receive that $2 more now than formerly.

Mr. John C. Calhoun was perhaps the strictest constructionist in Congress, and yet as early as 1817 he introduced a bill in Congress to provide funds for the construction of roads. In defense of that principle, among other things, he said:

Let it not be said the internal improvements may be wholly left to the enterprise of the State and of individuals. I know that much may justly be expected to be done by them; but in a country so new and so extensive as ours there is room enough for all, the General and State Governments and individuals to exert their resources. Many of the improvements contemplated are on too great a scale for the resources of States or of individuals, and many of them are of such a nature that the rival jealousy of the State, if left alone, might prevent. They require the resources and general superintendence of the Government to effect and complete them. But there are higher and more powerful considerations why Congress should take charge of this subject. If we were only to consider the pecuniary advantages of a good system of roads and canals it might, indeed, admit of some doubt whether they ought not to be left alone wholly to individual exertion, but when we come to consider how intimately the strength and political prosperity of the Republic are connected with this subject, we find the most urgent reasons why we should apply our resources to them. Good roads and canals, judiciously laid out, are the proper remedy. Let us, then, bind the Republic together with a perfect system of roads and canals.

And subsequently when the Secretary of War, in referring to the same subject, he said:

No object of the kind is more important and there is none to which State or individual capacity is more inadequate. It must be perfected by the General Government or not perfected at all.

As early as 1806 Congress passed a law appropriating Federal money to aid in the construction of highways, and that policy was pursued by the Government up to the time of the breaking out of the Civil War. During that time the Government appropriated and spent more than $14,000,000 to aid in constructing public highways, and some of the best roads now in the East and in the South were constructed by Federal aid. With the breaking out of the war the depletion of our revenues made the cessation of work along that line necessary. After the war the Government directed its energies toward the improvement of our great national railroads, and millions of dollars and millions of acres of land were appropriated by this Government for that purpose, but not a dollar has been expended by the Government since the war in the construction of roads for the general public in the United States. It is true we have spent some $5,000,000 from the Public Treasury in constructing roads in Porto Rico, Alaska, and the Philippine Islands, and it takes a strange interpretation of the Constitution to allow this Government to expend its funds in the construction of roads outside of the United States, but so construes it as not to allow the United States to build roads for itself, and it certainly is an exaggerated altruism that would spend money out of the Treasury for the benefit of an alien population and withhold it from our own citizens. There can be no question about the power of the Federal Government to aid in the construction of public highways, and there remains therefore but two questions for consideration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PROUTY. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman argue that the Government should appropriate money to construct roads wholly within a State?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think the Government has that power, and that it would be good policy?

Mr. PROUTY. I will discuss the policy a little later; I am now only speaking of the power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman this: The gentleman is familiar with the construction of the Erie Canal in the State of New York?

Mr. PROUTY. Not very. It was constructed before I was in business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been very useful since that time.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The agitation for it was actively begun about 1811. The Government positively refused to participate in the construction of that canal, because it was regarded wholly as a State enterprise.

Mr. PROUTY. Well, I am not saying that the Federal Government could not withhold the building of a post office in a State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman raises a very interesting question if he advocates the appropriation of public funds—that is to say, United States funds—for the construction of good roads wholly within the jurisdiction and limits of a State.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir; I do; and I will give my reasons for it if you will give me the time. I have only discussed so far the power. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will discuss in a minute the question of policy.

First. Is this work of sufficient importance to justify Federal aid and supervision?

Second. Is it fair as between our own people to take funds from the Public Treasury for this purpose?

I shall first direct your attention to the first proposition. The tonnage hauled over highways exceeds that hauled over all of our railroads. The cost of such transportation can be reduced practically 50 per cent with properly constructed highways. In France it costs 7 cents per ton per mile to haul freight over her splendid highways; in Germany it costs 10 cents; in England it costs 11 cents; in the United States it costs 23 cents. It is estimated by good authority that if our roads were thoroughly improved we could haul freight for about 13 cents, or a saving of about 10 cents per ton per mile. This would make an annual saving of over $250,000,000. This is the "mud tax" the American farmer pays. But this is not all the loss. Considerable of the farm products will not stand the high cost of transportation and they are allowed to rot or waste. Again, there are many products in which the selling price does not equal the cost of production and transportation, and thus their production is arrested. It is safe to say that bad roads cost the American people from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 per year.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman having the floor, I trust he will not yield it until he ascertains from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] how the Government evidenced its refusal to contribute toward the building of the Erie Canal.

Mr. PROUTY. I will leave that for the gentleman to explain.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It is quite important.

Mr. PROUTY. I may be compelled to ask for a few minutes more time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will be glad to explain it. The original plan of De Witt Clinton and others was to have Congress pass an act, by which the States should cooperate through grants of land, which would enable loans to be obtained in foreign countries. In this way funds were to be raised to build the Erie Canal, which would bring the traffic of the Great Lakes to the seaboard, a seemingly national project. Congress refused to consider the proposition, and many of the States regarded it wholly as a New York matter; hence there was not the public interest in it that there ought to have been. The result was that New York was obliged to go ahead on its own hook, and did actually provide the ways and means for the construction of that canal. I thank the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] for permitting this interpolation.

Mr. PROUTY. Again, it makes country life undesirable. It isolates our people and drives our populations to the cities. In 1790 less than 4 per cent of our people lived in cities and towns; in 1850, less than 13 per cent; in 1900, over 40 per cent; and by the census of 1910 the city population had increased to 46 per cent. This abandonment of the farm and flight to the cities must be stopped if we would preserve our democracy. How can it be done? Statistics gathered by the Office of Public Roads show that in 25 counties, chosen at random, where there are practically no macadam roads, the average loss in population from 1890 to 1900 was 3,112 per county, while a similar number of counties, chosen in the same way, in which 40 per cent of their roads were macadamized, the population increased in the same 10 years 31,095 per county. These figures clearly show that the way to increase our rural population and diminish our city population is by improving our country roads. This improvement should be undertaken from patriotic motives, if none other. Every man who has studied the question knows that it is dangerous to our Republic to have congested city population. The dwellers upon the farm are the hope of our democracy.

Again, we have about 400,000,000 acres of unimproved land in this country. Much of this would be cultivated if made to articulate with the railroads by good country roads. We have about 800,000,000 acres of land in the United States. The Agricultural Department estimates that good roads would increase the value of this land an average of $5 per acre. This would add $4,000,000,000 to the country's wealth. One-tenth of this would surface the principal well-traveled thoroughfares of this country.

Again, there is nothing that would so much tend to reduce the high cost of living as reduction in this transportation. It now costs more money to haul a bushel of wheat 8 miles over the country roads to market than it does to transport it by water from New York to Liverpool—3,000 miles. On the average, it costs more to haul the food products from the farm to the nearest railroad station than it does to transport it from there by rail to the point of final consumption. There would be more gained to this Nation by reducing this initial cost of transportation than by cutting down railroad rates.

Again, this would be a direct saving to the Government itself. Last year we paid out $42,000,000 for rural-route delivery. It is estimated that nearly one-half of this could have been saved if the delivery could have been made over good roads. The importance of this matter to the Federal Government is accentuated by the possibility, or even probability, of the establishment of a rural parcel post. This will add very much to the weight of the matter to be distributed over these post roads, and the Government's interest in good roads will thereby be greatly increased.

I now come to the second question: Is it fair to take funds from the Public Treasury for the construction of highways in the States for the benefit largely of the rural dweller?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I believe I can not. I am informed I can not get more time.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a simple question.

Mr. PROUTY. I will submit.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the gentleman to say that the country lost about three or four million dollars a year because of the fact that they did not have good roads.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. What would be the proportion of the State of Iowa if that is the case?

Mr. PROUTY. You can figure that quicker than I can.

Mr. MADDEN. About six millions?

Mr. PROUTY. You can figure it out.

Mr. MADDEN. If it would spend $5,000,000 out of its State treasury, it would be a million dollars per year if it lost six?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes. And that brings me to the question of whether or not it is proper for the Federal Government to do this.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it is.

Mr. PROUTY. I realize that many men do not agree with me, but listen to my argument and see if I can not convince you. I do not expect everybody to agree with me. It matters not how high taxes are if they are expended for the benefit of those who pay them. But there is no greater crime that a nation can commit than to continue to collect taxes from one class of people and expend them for the benefit of another class. Every candid man will have to admit that in the past a large part of our public funds have been expended for the direct benefit of the dwellers in our cities. It seems to me that the time has fairly arrived when this Nation should give more attention to the welfare of the country dweller.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is right.

Mr. PROUTY. The farm is the primal source of our wealth, and the farmer is certainly the only hope of our Nation. It has been truly said that "You can tear down every edifice in our cities, and labor will rebuild them; but abandon our farms, and our cities will disappear forever." Therefore, whatever benefits the farmer benefits the Nation, and whatever injures the farmer injures the Nation. There is no injury like injustice. The farmers of this country have not received in expenditures their share of the public money. This Government has appropriated more than $600,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and has spent this money among and for the direct benefit of those living in the cities along these channels of commerce. Three-fourths of this money has been paid by the inland dweller. Of course, he has received some indirect benefits from this expenditure, but he is entitled to have some money spent in which he receives direct benefits. The people in the cities would also receive indirect benefit from the expenditure of money for public highways. I do not say that the Government should not spend money to improve rivers. I believe in that policy, but I say the time has arrived in the history of this country when the Government should spend money not only for but among the people that contributed it. It is time for the farmer to have a chance to welcome back into his own community a few of the dollars he sends to Washington. What I am insisting upon is that the inland dweller be allowed to participate in direct benefits, and not alone in those vapory benefits called "indirect." If we have not sufficient money to improve the highways and build waterways at the same time, the money ought to be divided about in the proportion contributed. It is not fair to spend it for the benefit of one to the exclusion of the other.

Again, this Government has spent $200,000,000 in public buildings in the various cities in the United States, and all of this money has been spent in the cities. The buildings and improvements are for the convenience and accommodation of the city citizens. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has attacked the cities, and I simply desire to ask him—

Mr. PROUTY. I live in the city myself, but nevertheless I can tell the truth, even if I am from the city. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to consider the river and harbor bill that is coming into the House this week and then think it over.

Mr. PROUTY. More than half of this money came from the farmers. Why, in justice, should there not be an equal amount expended in the country to make improvements contributing to the convenience and accommodation of the country dweller? [Applause.] Can anyone tell me why he is not entitled to his half of the money? At this session of Congress there is pending a bill appropriating $16,000,000 for the erection of public buildings in the cities. Every dollar of this money will be spent not only in the cities, but for the benefit of their people. Why would it not be fair to divide this up, giving half of it to the improvements of the cities and half to the improvement of the highways of the country, for the benefit of the country people? [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. PROUTY (continuing). And that three-fourths of that money has been paid by the fellow who lives in the country?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PROUTY. I regret that I have not got the time.

Mr. MADDEN. How much money do we lose every year for the Rural Free Delivery Service?

Mr. PROUTY. You would not lose half as much as you now lose if we had good public highways; I will tell you that. [Laughter and applause.]

The argument most commonly resorted to by those opposed to this measure is that we have not sufficient funds. That argument would be absolutely unanswerable if all the appropriations now made by Congress were for objects more worthy, more beneficial, and more just than this one. But it is not fair to take all the money and appropriate it for even good objects to the absolute neglect and exclusion of others equally as important and deserving. If we have not enough money to go around, let us divide it up, giving to each its just share.

Last year we spent more than $126,000,000 for the Navy; and that, too, in time of profound peace. This was the high-water mark. It was more than was spent for the Navy during the highest period of the Civil War. It may be necessary to prepare for war, but I am inclined to think that greater good would come to this people if we would spend more of our money in improving the paths of peace and prosperity. The money that we spent in sending "Miss Navy" around the world to exhibit her toggings, her frills, and her feathers would surface a highway from New York to California. I am in favor of spending our money in such a way as will improve the living conditions of our people rather than in displaying our prowess. I can not just understand why we are spending these vast sums of money in strengthening our Navy while we are at the same time engaged in the making of treaties that ought to do away with all foreign wars. It may be that the time has not yet arrived "for the pounding of the sword into the plowshare and the spear into the pruning hook," but, gentlemen, I am sure that the time has arrived when we might safely convert some of our mortars into macadam and our turrets into turnpikes.

There are plenty of other places where saving could be made of sufficient amount to begin this work. This Congress will probably appropriate a billion dollars, and it seems to me that out of that appropriation sufficient savings could be made by the exercise of strict economy to furnish funds to at least begin this great work of constructing national highways. I feel quite sure that it would not hurt some of these pampered pets of public patrimony to go on half diet awhile and let some other worthy objects have a chance.

But the vast resources of the United States will easily enable us to carefully provide for these matters and at the same time enter upon a conservative policy of Government aid for road building. If Congress should now make an appropriation for this purpose proportionate to our wealth, as compared with that appropriated by Congress in 1806, it would produce about $615,000,000, more than the amount used by France in constructing the most magnificent system of highways in the world.

Again, it is fair that the Government itself should enter upon this project. When the Government in the Constitution divided the power of taxation between itself and the States it gave them the right of direct taxation and reserved to itself the power of indirect taxation. The latter is the easy way of collecting large sums of money. It is done almost imperceptibly; while direct taxation creates irritation. There are vast fields of taxation not yet employed. If the Government should lay an internal-revenue tax of 1 cent per package on chewing gum it would produce more money than is asked for in my bill the first year for improving highways. The initial cost of the material is such that this tax could be levied without increasing the cost to the retail dealer or to the consumer and yet leave reasonable profit to the manufacturer.

Again, there are many sources of expenditure of the Government that will soon be curtailed. It must be apparent to anyone that unless we enter upon new fields of expenditure the present revenues will soon produce a large surplus. Among other things, we are now paying out over $150,000,000 a year for pensions. The pensioners of the Civil War are now dying at the rate of 35,000 per year, and this mortality will increase as the expectancy diminishes. The average expectancy of the soldier of the Civil War is now less than six years. Their ranks are very rapidly decimating. To what better purpose could the money, now used for pensions and not needed then, be used than that of building national highways, over which the citizens and soldiers of the future might pass with less hardship than did our soldiers in marching through the bogs and mires of the South?

Again, it is fair that the Government should assist in the building of roads. It is now using more than a million miles of roads which have been constructed and are now maintained by the State and local communities without its contributing or paying a cent. It treats the communities so different in this respect from what it treats the railroads. This Government helped to build the railroads of the country but still pays them more than a private transporter for every pound of matter sent over their tracks. This is not fair. The rural dweller is as much entitled to have Federal aid in the construction of articulating post roads, as the promoter is to have Federal aid in the construction of railroads, especially as the Government would use the former forever free and be compelled to forever pay for the use of the latter. The Government has given about 200,000,000 acres of land for that purpose, which at $10 an acre would be $2,000,000,000. It has been estimated, however, that that land is now worth $40 per acre, which would make $8,000,000,000; much more than would be needed to surface all of the well-traveled roads of the United States. More than twice as much freight is hauled by team over public highways as is hauled by all the railroads of the United States. Not half of the freight that is hauled from the country to the cities by team over the public highways, ever reaches the railroad station. It is used in local consumption. If it is good statesmanship to use the Federal Treasury to assist in creating facilities for transportation by rail, why is not it equally patriotic to use Government funds in improving the highways on which the greater volume of traffic takes place? The estimated savings on the cost of transportation on the highways would be equal to all the freight paid on all the railroads of the United States. From this we get some idea of the enormous waste that results from the bad roads of this country. There is no field in which the conservationists can show such a saving of energy and wealth, as in the construction of good roads, and it is just as important as a national problem, to conserve energy and waste, as natural resources.

Every objection that is now being urged against the use of public money for the improvement of post roads was urged against the establishment of free-rural delivery. They said then that it would bankrupt the postal treasury, but experience has demonstrated the fallacy of that argument. The increased volume of mail matter has turned the postal deficit into a surplus. Increased facilities necessarily increase volume, and consequently increase revenues. If the Government enters upon the policy of either parcel post or parcel express, the saving upon the cost of transportation to the Government alone will amply compensate it for its cooperation in the building and maintaining of national highways. I would begin this matter as we began the postal-free delivery, by experimenting; but the time has arrived, in my judgment, for action.

There is another viewpoint from which this question should be considered. It was said a few days ago on the floor of this House that the productive power of labor is being so increased by the use of machinery that in 50 years the production of the world's necessities would only call for the labor of 2½ hours each day, and that this applied with special force to the United States. If that statement has any truth in it, and I think it has, we are rapidly approaching the national problem of diverting a considerable quantity of our labor from the field of production into the field of improvement. It will not do to have a nation of idlers working only three or four hours a day. It will not do to have one-half of our people working eight hours a day and the others having nothing to do. A rational national system of employment will then be necessary. What better method could the Nation devise for transforming surplus and idle labor into improvement for the public good, than providing a system that will enable this constantly increasing surplus of labor to be used in the construction of roads which will benefit all the people. It is always better to tax the people to furnish the labor for the unemployed than it is to tax them for supporting the poor in idleness. It is infinitely better for the laborer to have employment than to receive charity. Charity always humiliates and debases. Labor inspires and dignifies.

Back to the farm is the urgent cry of the hour, but intelligent men will not go in the mud or long remain there in exile and seclusion. [Applause.] Country life must be made attractive and intercommunicable. The country parish is the hope of our democracy. As long as it predominates this Republic is safe. When its conserving influence is swallowed up by the corrupt city force our Republic is gone. I have been profoundly impressed with this fact by my experience and research as a member of the Committee on Elections of this House. In all the cases I have examined I have not found a single strictly rural precinct that has been thrown out on account of fraud, intimidation, corruption, or ballot-box stuffing. These crimes against republican government have been confined to the cities. Self-preservation therefore demands that this Government should use its every constitutional power to increase and preserve this pure blood of our body politic. That can be done no way so efficiently as by making good country roads. This will hold the farmer's boy on the farm, and will entice some of the people from the political miasmas of the overcrowded cities to the pure moral atmosphere of rural life. This is the hope of the Nation.

The building of good streets draws population to that part of the city, so the building of good roads will draw population to the country. Good roads makes habitation along them desirable and attractive; they facilitate transportation of person and products; they increase the value of farm land and farm products, and at the same time reduce the price to the consumer by reducing the cost of transportation. The building of roads furnishes employment to labor and pays for it by economizing the time of those who use them; they make the country beautiful and attractive; they bring the city and the country in closer touch; the inhabitants of the country will go to the city oftener, and the residents of the city will be more frequently lured to the country; they will learn to know each other better and dislike each other less. Good roads will assist in educational, social, and religious progress and development of our people; folks will go to church, to school, to social gatherings more frequently and regularly over macadam than through mud. Good roads will do much to remove isolation and consequent intellectual stagnation. They will make broader and better our country life. They will help to purify city life. The city dweller never beholds the scenic wonders of field and farm; he never breathes the free air of the country that he is not made stronger and better. The improvement of our highways will add untold millions to our wealth. It will facilitate the transportation of the products of factory, forest, and farm. It will make the necessities of life cheaper to the consumer and higher to the producer. Every intelligent farmer now knows that the difference between the cost of transportation over good and bad roads often means a difference between profit and loss. The consumer can not stand the present high cost of living. The wise statesmanship of this age must be directed toward the problem of reducing the cost of getting the article from one to the other, and in that cost transportation is one of the big items. Good roads means cheaper food products for the toilers in the cities and better prices for the farmer. Bad roads means still higher prices for the necessities of life. Good roads would benefit all classes of our citizens and all departments of our civic life. They would help the city, the country dweller. They would help the man that raises food and the man that eats it. They would help the man that digs coal and the man that burns it. They would help the man that rides in an auto and the man that wheels the barrow. They would help everybody and hurt nobody.

Viewing this subject from any corner I have been able to look at it, I firmly believe that the time has now fairly arrived when this country should enter upon the broad policy of assisting in building a system of national highways by direct national aid and supervision.

Mr. GOOD. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the country very briefly to some of the achievements of our President to which we should point with pride.

THREE YEARS OF TAFT—AN INDEX.

Arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France, aimed at war, have been negotiated and are now before the Senate. Similar negotiations with other powers are pending.

Great trusts have been made to feel that the statutes carry penalties for them as well as for the small trusts and for the individual violator of the law. An era of calm enforcement of existing law has been inaugurated. The sugar corporation was convicted, proceedings brought against the Steel Corporation, and the coal, whisky, lumber, and beef corporations brought to court. More than two score prosecutions are pending. The Standard Oil and Tobacco cases have been completed and an interpretation of the Sherman law, many years in doubt, obtained.

When a Democratic House threatened to involve the United States with Russia in a too hasty annulment of the passport treaty, President Taft assumed the weight of responsibility and declared in diplomatic form that the treaty would be abrogated upon the notice of one year which it required.

Scientific tariff revision has been put in place of political giving and taking in such legislation. A Tariff Board has been created and its investigations have brought a recommendation from the President for a revision and reduction of the woolen schedule. Other schedules are under scrutiny, preparatory to further recommendations if they be found to conflict with Republican platform principles, and his policy looking to future revision on a scientific schedule-by-schedule revision has become effective. The tariff bill regarded by President Taft as a step in the right direction, even though not a perfect measure, has turned a $58,000,000 deficit into a $30,000,000 surplus. Wool, cotton, and so-called farmers' free-list bills, originating in a Democratic House, have been vetoed because they violated the principle of the Republican platform that revision of the tariff should be based upon the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad—a difference upon which information at that time was lacking.

The Panama Canal has been brought to a stage approaching completion and the date of opening advanced by several months through systematic work.

The Arizona statehood bill was once vetoed because it provided for the recall of judges. New Mexico and Arizona have now been admitted as States.

The Post Office Department has been placed upon a self-sustaining basis.

A difficult situation resulting from the revolution in Mexico, arousing deep feeling in the southern portions of the United States, was handled with diplomacy and tact, and the United States aided in the establishment of law and order in the neighboring Republic through preserving it in our own.

The Treasury agents and customs employees have been reorganized, fraud has been weeded out of the customs service, and many thousands of dollars lost under fraudulent importations have been recovered.

A Bureau of Mines has been created. Steps have been taken toward a new employers' liability and workmen's compensation act and the adoption of additional safety appliances on railroads.

A new policy as to river and harbor appropriations has been begun, the old "pork barrel" appropriation system abandoned, and the business policy of continuing contracts adopted.

A treaty with Japan has been negotiated, bringing about genuine friendship between her and the United States.

New treaties with Honduras and Nicaragua, that will make for permanent peace in those countries, have been negotiated and await action by the Senate.

Postal banks have been established. Rigid economy has been instituted in the Government departments. A Court of Customs Appeals has been created.

A Stock and Bond Commission has been appointed, and has made a valuable and exhaustive report.

Parcel post has been recommended.

Judicial appointments have been taken out of politics.

The Thirteenth Census was made nonpolitical.

President Taft has declared for the extension of the civil service, accomplishing much in this direction by Executive order.

The passage of a corporation-tax law, yielding $30,000,000 annually, has been obtained, with the resultant surveillance of corporate activities.

The question of an income-tax amendment to the Constitution has been submitted to the States.

The President has provided for the accomplishment of conservation policies and obtained a bond issue for irrigation projects; obtained legislation further extending the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission and creating a Court of Commerce to review the commission's findings; recommended a Federal incorporation act; and induced China to open to American finance on equal terms with the rest of the world.

Peace in Cuba has been maintained by a word of friendly warning.

The railroads of the country were prevented, by an appeal to the writ of injunction, from putting rate increases into effect. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, in the few observations I shall make in the limited time at my command, I want to talk about the national defense, and particularly to emphasize what, to my mind, has not been properly emphasized in the discussion of this question upon the floor of this House or in the country.

The proponents of a large navy have always approached the people of the country and appealed to their patriotism along the line of the national defense; and the patriotism of the people of the whole country is such that this argument has made considerable impression. But, in my judgment, the advocates of this policy have purposely not referred to the phase of our national defense carried in this bill and now being considered by the House.

The testimony given in the hearings before the subcommittee that drafted the fortification bill is to the effect that the coast line of the United States is not only amply defended and protected by these seacoast fortifications, but that in many instances as stated by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. SHERLEY] we are overfortified.

In my judgment these facts have not been given to the people by those who favor a large Navy, and they have made it appear, in consequence, that the only protection from foreign invasion possessed by the United States is the protection afforded by the battleships.

During my service in this House I have never been one of those who have opposed a reasonable naval program, but I have believed, and do yet believe, that there are a large minority of this House who would appropriate more money for the construction of battleships than is warranted by the necessity for them.

During the last two or three weeks, from the other side of the main aisle of this House, and in the newspapers, particularly those published in this city, there has been a great deal of criticism of the action of a recent Democratic caucus, which passed a resolution instructing the Naval Affairs Committee of this House to eliminate battleships from the bill reported at this session.

That criticism, in my judgment, is not well founded, nor does it mean that those of us on this side who supported that resolution and who are willing to support a bill carrying out the provisions of that resolution, are not opposed to an efficient and effective Navy. I want particularly to call the attention of the committee to the Navy as it is now constituted. Only the other morning an editorial in one of the papers published in this city carried the information, coming from the Navy Department, that two vessels, the armored cruisers Washington and North Carolina, which have been in commission about five years, and the only two armored cruisers that are in the Navy, were to be taken out of active commission and placed entirely out of commission, or in the reserve line, for the reason that the officers and men who were on these vessels were needed to equip the new battleships that are being turned out from our navy yard.

Then, if you examine the last report of the Secretary of the Navy, you will find this language:

The Navy is very deficient in certain classes of vessels required for the maintenance and protection of the battle fleet. These vessels are battleships, cruisers, scouts, destroyers, submarines, repair, supply, fuel, ammunition, and hospital ships, and tenders to torpedo vessels. A number of gunboats, river gunboats, and tugs also are required for the routine duties of peace as well as war. The number of such vessels, except gunboats and tugs, should be proportioned to the number of battleships; for example, there should be four destroyers for each battleship, one scout for each battleship, one repair ship for each squadron of eight battleships, etc. This is indicated fully in the following table:

	Present number of effective ships.	Number necessary on the basis of 33 battleships.	Present deficiencies.
Battleships.....	133
Battleship cruisers.....		8	8
Armored cruisers.....	12
Scouts.....	3	33	18
Protected cruisers.....	17
Destroyers.....	50	132	82
Tenders to destroyers.....	1	7	6
Repair ships.....	1	4	3
Supply ships.....	3	8	5
Hospital ships.....	1	4	3
Ammunition ships.....		4	4
Fleet fuel ships.....	12	24	12
Submarines.....	38	60	22
Tenders to submarines.....	2	12	10

² Armored cruisers have been superseded by battle cruisers; those on hand would be employed as scouts.

The Secretary says that to bring it up to the proper standard and put it so that it will be properly related now as to battleships, we need 8 battleship cruisers, 18 scout vessels, 82 destroyers, 6 tenders for destroyers, 4 supply ships, 3 repair ships, 3 hospital ships, 12 fleet fuel ships, 22 submarines, and 10 tenders for these submarines.
